IF WE ALLOW ACADEMIC DISHONESTY TO BECOME SYNONOMOUS WITH MARYVILLE, WE MAY JUST AS WELL CLOSE OUR OCCASIONALLY TOO OPEN DOORS.

Cheating in numerous quite cute forms (scoping, stealing, talking, cheatsheeting etc.) is about to be rampant. It has to stop or we have to stop calling ourselves academic. Most of our student body seems to agree. So does MOST of our faculty.

Ideally, we should be able to control such nonsense from within the student body. There is no excuse that is even almost valid in defense of tolerating such obvious infringing upon the rights of others to an honestly earned education from an institution with an honest and sound academic reputation. It is even morally lousy, but I am certainly not qualified to yell morals at anybody.

I am qualified, though, to ask, even demand, that my rights to a valid education not be frustrated by a curvebreaker who gets eight hours of Z's all semester except when forced to review how to cheat on exams.

My plea should be to students. And it is to some degree. But, too pragmatic, I am also prepared to join the rapidly snowballing student demand that the faculty be somehow forced to demand honest efforts in exchange for those hard-to-get-honestly grades. (The Academics Committee of the Student Council is leading an active namecalling assault on Anderson Hall in hopes that the powers-that-be will be made aware where to look for professors who are too trusting or unprincipled to demand uniformity and honesty. Any who would like to join the fun will be welcomed enthusiastically.)

This editorial, then, though too long to be read by those too lazy to study, is esentially a warning to the faculty that a great many students are sick of "coddling" and ready to demand its immediate halt. It is also an opener in a series of moves aimed at some sort of a student run system of disciplining ourselves..

Comments, please. Is the student body going to continue to "grin and bear it" and cut its academic throat, or do we have enough guts to tell our friends to shape up or get out?

Letters to the Editor

To the editor:

Exaggeration does have a way of creeping into prejudiced criticism. This was amply illustrated in the letter to the editor in the January 20th issue of the Echo. In that letter the following comment was made: "The ideal Maryville College student is not expected to think for himself; indeed this is a nasty trait which the Administration highly frowns on." When one reads the rest of the letter, it becomes apparent that the writer is quite bitter toward the administration for some unnamed, no doubt, personal reason. We respect the writer's desire not to speak openly of her reason. On the other hand, we sternly question the justification for flagrantly venting one's rage against authority in general, and labeling the administration as deterrents to the students' education.

Thinking for oneself is a responsibility, which a person must not expect to have simply handed to him, but which he must earn and deserve. Self determination does not automatically give one the right to do anything he wants, whenever he wants, wherever he wants, for how long he wants, as the writer of the biased letter seemed to advocate. If a student cannot learn the limitations of "thinking for himself," then the fault lies with the individual, not with that battered-about abstract, the administration.

P.S. The letter in the last issue of the Echo began "To the Editor:" and yet was titled "Editorial Outlook." We sincerely hope that the title was a typographical error, and that the editor does not really share the immature view expressed in the letter.

—John Kerr

To the Editor:

A talk was given in chapel recently concerning the proper use of man's talents. Central to the message was the idea that protest against our government's policies was a misuse of our time and ability. I would like to take violent issue to this thesis. Dissent is not simply a privilege; it is an obligation incurred by every member of a democratic society when that society embarks upon a policy which conflicts with the individual's conscience. To remain silent in the face of injustice is more than foolish; it smacks of treason.

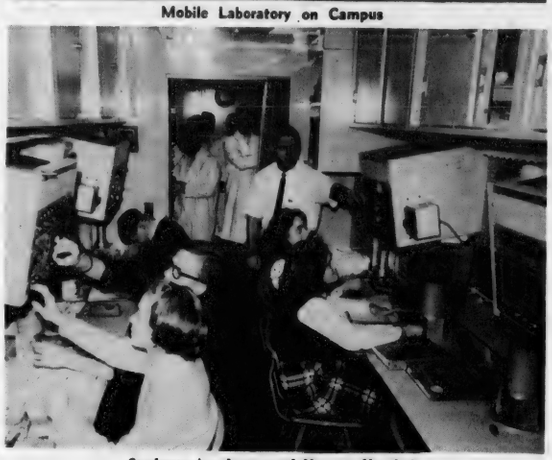
Romeros Appear in Artist Series

The Romeros, a father and three sons known as Spain's First Family of the Guitar, appeared last Friday evening, February 3, for a program in the College-Community Artists Series.

In an almost three hour concert the Romeros entertained the audience with selections from Vivaldi, Paganini, and various Spanish composers in addition to numerous traditional Flamenco songs. Following the program, the guitarists gave five encores including a poem by Celedonio Romero accompanied by his sons. The audience enjoyed the concert very much and responded with a standing ovation for a fine performance.

In a succession of triumphant appearances throughout the country the Romero Family, during their first season, performed on three network television shows, gave two Town Hall concerts, performed for the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society, recorded three albums for Mercury Records, and finished the season with a concert at the Seattle World's Fair.

Now residents of Los Angeles, Calif., the Romeros until recently only concertized in Spain. Celedonia Romero, beginning his study of the classic guitar at the age of three, graduated from the Madrid Conservatory as one of his country's leading instrumentalists. He married early and settled in the city of his birth, Malaga, on the Andalucian coast. Celin, age 24, Pepe, age 18, and Angel, age 14, are his only children and were practicing scales as soon as they were old enough to hold a guitar. Celin gave his first public performance at the age of five by radio broadcast. Pepe, when seven years old, gave a joint recital with his father at Seville's Teatro Lope de Vega. Angel's debut took place at the Lobero Theatre in Santa Barbara, Calif., in 1960. At the same time Celin was serving a tour of duty with the United States Army.



Celin and Angel have continued their father's tradition of the classic guitar and share with him the five centuries of classic guitar literature. Celin, according to his father, has the "purest touch" in the family, and his sinuous, melodic style is considered perfect for the late Romantic composers in which he specializes. Angel's prodigious rhythmic sense finds its expression in the baroque repertoire, and on the family's recent tour he programmed the Bach Chaconne.

Unlike his brothers, Pepe early revealed an uncanny feeling for the Flamenco style. As a young boy he became absorbed in the music of the Gypsies who provided entertainments for the Romeros at their house in Malaga. Utilizing the brilliant Romero classic technique, Pepe's Flamenco artistry soon became

Mobile Laboratory on Campus

Students Are Instructed How to Use Lab

Mobile Radioisotope Laboratory Visits Campus

A mobile radioisotope laboratory, bringing Oak Ridge facilities to the Maryville College campus, used has been during the last two weeks by Maryville students January 30, to February 10. The mobile laboratory is a special program of the Oak Ridge Associated Universities and is designed to meet the needs of colleges which do not have facilities to present courses in the handling of radioactive materials.

Three lecturers have accompanied the laboratory while it has been on the Maryville campus. They are Sister Mary Charles Weschler, Max H. Lombardi, and W. Keith Lee.

Sister Mary Charles Weschler holds the doctorate in physical chemistry from Carnegie Institute of Technology. Lombardi, a native of Peru, holds the master's degree in radiation biology from Cornell; and Lee, the laboratory instructor, is a graduate of the University of Chattanooga with a degree in combined sciences.

Since 1948, the Special Training Division of ORAU, under contract with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, has been providing basic and specialized courses in radioisotope techniques to scientists from all over the world. Three of the units visit about 40 colleges during the academic year, and provide training in the use of radioactive materials to students and faculty members.

The two-week program follows the format developed by the ORAU staff as a means of providing the maximum benefit to the participants in the minimum of time, and with minimal interference with regularly scheduled classes.

Because of space limitations, the program is divided into laboratory and lecture sessions. The laboratory sessions are held in the traveling unit, and the lectures are given in the institution's classrooms or lecture halls. This permits dividing the class so that two laboratory sessions and one lecture session for 12 to 16 participants can be conveniently held each day. A well-rounded series of laboratory experiments and lectures is presented that covers the basic counting techniques and applications of radioisotopes in the fields of physics, chemistry and biology.

Following a general introduction to radiation, atomic structure, and nuclear processes, lectures are presented on the characteristics of beta radiation, scintillation detection of gamma radiation, radiation detection and instrument calibration, standardization of radioactive sources, carbon-14, radiotracer methodology, radiation and health physics, radiochemical separations, and the synthesis of labeled compounds.

Laboratory experiments are devoted to Geiger counters and scaling systems, absorption and range of beta particles, gamma-ray pulse spectra and scintillation counters, identifying an unknown radioisotope, absolute counting and half-life of potassium-40, standardization of iodine-131 with Geiger-Mueller counters, carbon-14 assay, and phosphorus distribution in rats.

WSGA Announces Open Parlor Hours

The Women's Student Government announces the new "open parlor" hours for the women's dorms to be in effect this semester. These hours apply only to couples dating in the parlor. In the women's handbook, Cues for Coeds, these hours were listed under men's calling hours," but this tended to be confusing, for men may call for dates whenever the dorm is open. The following hours are posted in each dorm:

Dorm I and II, Pearsons
Mon.—Thurs.: after lunch—7:30 P.M.
7:30—9:30 closed (parlor date)
9:30—10:30
Fri: after lunch—11:00 P.M.
Sat: 8:30 A.M.—12:00 P.M.
Sun: No change

The Freshmen Niche

by The Publicity Committee

Freshmen projects are ready to explode into fruition. New programs are being planned, and new responsibilities assumed by committee chairmen.

Tabulation of the Evaluation and Analysis committee questionaires has been completed. Basic results are posted in the Freshmen dorms. There emerged a general concensus of Frosh opinion consisting of helpful improvements toward college policy and attitude. Bob Knapp, chairman, presented the significant results of the questionaire to Student Council, and will be providing pertinent information to other campus organizations. Ideas gleamed from this study will be incorporated into the work of the New Orientation and Constitution committee. This group, headed by Shep Spear and John Hay, will draft a set of by-laws to lend order and stability to our class proceedings. In addition, it will suggest an efficient and beneficial orientation program for next year's freshmen. It is hoped that our administration will take advantage of this research and insight.

The Movie committee reports that the desired pictures have been promised by the distributor. They will be shown April 22, 1967.

A committee is working to innagurate an inter-class sports program in the very near future. Recruiting sheets for class teams will be posted as soon as clearance is obtained.

Students Advised to Submit SSCQT Applications Now

Applications for the March 11 and 31 and April 8, 1967 administrations of the College Qualification Test are now available at Selective Service System local boards throughout the country.

Eligible students who intend to take this test should apply at once to the nearest Selective Service local board for an Application Card and a Bulletin of Information for the test.

Following instructions in the Bulletin, the student should fill out his application and mail it immediately in the envelope provided to SELECTIVE SERVICE EXAMINING SECTION, Educational Testing Service, P. O. Box 988, Princeton, New Jersey 08540. To ensure processing, applications must be postmarked no later than midnight, February 10, 1967.

According to Educational Testing Service, which prepares and administers the College Qualification Test for the Selective Service System, it will be greatly to the student's advantage to file his application at once. By registering early, he stands the best chance of being assigned to the test center he has chosen. Because of the possibility that he may be assigned to any of the testing dates, it is very important that he list a center and center number for every date on which he will be available. Scores on the test will be sent directly to the registrant's local board.

Directed by Dr. Harry H. Harter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at Maryville College, the touring Choir of 42 members makes the annual spring tour by chartered bus. Last year, the Choir toured major cities in the Southeast, and the 1965 itinerary took it to the Midwest. This year, the Choir is returning to the Northeast for the first time since 1963. The Choir has traveled nearly 40,000 miles in the past 19 years to appear in well over 100 cities east of the Mississippi River.

CAR COMMITTEE

2. to enhance extra off-campus social and cultural activities;
3. to adopt a graduated scale of priviledges with the attainment of upper-class status;
4. to provide additional opportunities for academic research;
5. to help facilitate the student teaching program; and
6. to increase the efficiency and success of on-campus organizations and activities

"The Suggested Proposal was formulated from the following information gathered by the committee:

1. evaluation of automobile policies at the ten colleges presently having their curriculum studied by our administration;
2. 92% recognized the need for cars at Maryville;
3. the previously mentioned student body poll;
4. reports from campus organizations;
5. faculty opinion evaluation;
6. consultation with administrative officers for suggestions.

"Realistically, the car committee admits the possible existence of certain disadvantages to some; however, it firmly believes the advantages stated in the first paragraph far outweigh any possible disadvantages that could arise. It may be argued by some that the reasons behind this proposal are social without regard to academic entanglements; therefore, it should be made clear that in actuality, sound academics is a basic requirement of this proposal, and only those meeting this requirement are afforded the proposed privilege. The Car Committee requests an itemized appraisal of this proposal, in the hopes that points of disagreement can be discussed. It also requests that this be regarded as a two year experimental program with an annual evaluation. These requests, and more importantly the success or failure of the entire program, rests upon the fact that responsibility must be shared between administration and students. Only through continual cooperative efforts by everyone involved can this proposed policy be effective.

"REQUIREMENTS

1. Juniors and Seniors with a 2.25 previous semester average, and a 2.0 overall average.
2. Probation of any sort is cause for ineligibility.
3. The receiving of financial aid does not necessarily prohibit a student from maintainng a car on campus; but the automobile must be declared on the student's application for aid or must be declared immediately if the automobile is brought on campus after the aid is granted.
4. Resident students under 21 must present a letter upon registration from their parents or guardian, specifically giving them permission to have a car while in college.

"REGISTRATION

1. All motor vehicles operated by Maryville College students must be registered in the office of the treasurer and a current decal must be displayed on the right side of the windshield. A vehicle will be considered "unregistered" unless this decal is displaced as directed.
2. Cars must be safety inspected either in their home state or by Tennessee stipulation no later than 15 days after the date of registration, subject to violation.
3. No student may register another student's vehicle.
4. The registration fee will be $5.00 per semester payable at the time of registration.
5. All vehicles must be covered by a public liability and property damage insurance policy.

"PARKING

1. Parking is allowed in designated parking lots only.
2. Resident students may not operate their vehicles on campus between the hours of 8:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M., Monday through Friday except to exit or enter the campus.

"PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS:

1. Resident students having vehicles illegally will be fined $5.00, will be placed on social probation, and the vehicle sent home on first offense. The student may be suspended from college for the second offense.
2. On campus parking and traffic violations; a) first offense, $1.00 fine; b) all offenses thereafter — $5.00 fine; c) failure to pay fine will result in revokation of registration.
3. Off campus violations in regard to Tennessee State Traffic Laws (i.e. reckless driving and drunken driving) will be subject to review by the student-faculty court.

"MISCELLANEOUS

1. "Automobile" is meant to mean any type of motorized transportation.
2. It is assumed that when bringing a motor vehicle to the campus a student accepts all responsibility for this vehicle.
3. Registered car owners are not permitted to lend their car to ineligible students.
4. Student Council is responsible for establishing a Student-Faculty Court of equal representation to regulate and enforce rules of registered cars."

Scot Roundballers Squeak Past Milligan

by Chip Slaybaugh

On Monday, 30 January, the Maryville College Scots entertained Milligan College on the home court. At the opening tipoff Milligan was favored, since they had defeated Maryville on their court 91—65. This most recent game, though, proved to be one of the most exciting games of the season.

By the end of the first half it looked as though Milliagn was on the road to another victory at the hands of the Scots. The score at halftime was Milligan 37 — Maryville 25.

The second half, however, proved to be quite a different story as the Scots came from behind to outscore Milligan 45 to 33, and thus tie the score at 70—70 at the end of regulation play. This forced the teams into a five minute overtime to decide the winner.

As the overtime was coming to an end, it appeared the Scots were going to win as they had outscored Milligan 9 to 8: but the game wasn't over yet. As the final buzzer sounded one of the Scots fouled a Milligan player who was in the process of shooting. This then gave Milligan two free throws to win the game. The tenseness could be felt in the air as the Milligan player prepared to shoot. Apparently feeling the tenseness as well, he missed both foul shots, thus giving Maryville the victory 79—78.

The whole Scots team did an outstanding job. The scoring leader was Padgett with an incredible 44 points.

The next home game is Saturday February 11 with Centre College. Game time is 7:30 P.M

It was said that youth today wear their hair long and stringy in order to be able to protest better. The fact that this statement completely missed the point bothers me less than the inference that there is something innately wrong with an act of protest. That long-haired, wild-eyed rebel Thomas Jefferson said, "I hold it that a little rebellion now and then is a good thing, and as necessary in the political world as storms in the physical." The danger this country faces is not the rebellious tendencies of the vocal minority but the cowardly acquiescence of the masses. Like sheep we will be led silent to the slaughter, unsure and afraid, trusting in our "leaders" to see the right.

Of course the central issue in the innuendos against the "long-haired youth" was the war in Viet Nam. When considering this point of the validity of protesting, my personal position on the Viet Nam conflict is as unimportant as that of the chapel speaker. What is important, however, is the feeling expressed that we must support our government's action because the protests give aid and comfort to the enemy. Perhaps they do, but to suspend our freedom (and obligation) to dissent would be to deny the very freedom which we say we are going ten thousand miles to defend. The sacrifice of one's life in an act of protest (and protest very often entails such a sacrifice—spiritually if not physically) is as valid an expression of love for one's country as dying in a Viet Nam rice paddy. While love for one's country is still valid, the doctrine of "my country right or wrong" is not.

So why bother about all of this? Criticism must involve more than mere therapy for an emotional reaction. Perhaps some of the answer is contained in a quote from The Rebel by Albert Camus: "To remain silent is to give the impression that one has no opinions, that one wants nothing, and in certain cases it really amounts to wanting nothing."

legendary throughout Spain. Many of Pepe's compositions are written by his father who composes in the Canto Grande Style or serious Flamenco which dates back to the Moors of the 10th century.

The guitars used by the Romeros are made by Miguel Rodriquez of Cordoba and are produced at the rate of ten a year. They are known for an extremely powerful tone which never sounds metallic. Another important guitar in the Romero collection is the French guitar which belonged to Hector Berlioz. Since Berlioz is considered the father of modern orchestration and the Romeros like to compare the guitar to an orchestra in variety of nuance and coloring, it pleases them to know that this is the only instrument Berlioz played.

Scots Take Two From C-N

Meeting the Eagles twice in three days, the Scots barely survived the first match, and then ran away with the second. On Tuesday, January 31, the Scots scraped out a 24-23 win. Then on Thursday, the second of February, at Carson Newman, the Scots rode to a 23-14 victory.

The first encounter started off with a pin in the 115 lb. division by Vince Cannon of C-N. MC came back strong with three straight decisions: Ron Pritts by 9-0, Gary Dauron by 13-2, and Tom Chase by 8-4. Ralph Johnson then pinned Bill Curtis with 2:50 remaining in the match. The score at this point stood 14-5 in favor of the Scots. After a Carson Newman pin of Scott Wood, Rob Nicolas lost no time in pinning Walker Moore in 35 seconds. Harry Burnett was pinned, the Van Pallis secured the win with a pin of Gary Page in the second period. The score at this point stood 24-13, with two matches remaining. In the last two fights, Lynn Dodez and Pat O'Brien were both pinned. Dodez wrestled by far the most interesting match of the evening. Lynn got the take-down in the first period, and had his opponent almost pinned for a minute, but the buzzer sounded before he could finish him off. The second and third periods saw an exchange of positions, near falls and predicaments by both men. Then, with 40 seconds remaining in the match, Dodez fell into a pinning hold which he could not break and the match went to Carson Newman.

In the second encounter, Maryville looked much sharper, especially after a few alternations in the line up. Ruhlin decisioned Cannon 10-6, Pritts decisioned Kennedy 3-1, Dauron decisioned Sheldon 4-0, Johnson decissioned Hensley 4-1; and the Scots found themselves with a 12-0 lead after the first four matches.

Bill Curtis of C-N then followed with a decision over Lynn St. Claire 6-2. Rob Nicolas put the Scots back on to their winning ways with a decision over McMillan 5-2, and George Schnitzer pinned Walker Moore in the second period. Burnett was decisioned 9-2, giving C-N three more points. Van Pallis finished off the Scot scoring with a decision victory over Gary Page 2-0. Guinn decisioned Dodez 11-2, and O'Brien was pinned with 14 seconds left in the second period by Ken Young. The final score of the match stood at 23-14 in favor of the Scots.

Gymnastics Clinic Headed by Former Olympic Champion

Muriel Grossfeld, former Olympic gymnast, will conduct a gymnastics clinic at the University of Tennessee on Friday, February 17 from 2:00 until 5:00 p.m. in the Alumni Memorial gymnasium.

An attractive, blonde, former Olympic gymnast, Muriel Davis Grossfeld, has been responsible for literally "changing the shapes" of some one million girls and women who have followed her diet and exercise suggestions through Campbell Soup Company's physical fitness program, CLUB 15.

As Teen-Age Consultant to Campbell, Muriel has visited more than 80 American cities, giving gymnastics exhibitions in high schools and colleges, and presenting CLUB 15. She also gives instruction in gymnastics to physical education teachers who wish to incorporate the sport in their own programs.

CLUB 15 has the approval of the President's Council on Physical Fitness, and Muriel is a member of the Council's clinic teaching staff.

As Teen-Age Consultant to Campbell Soup Company, Muriel is traveling throughout the country to dramatize the value of exercise combined with balanced diet. At a trim 110 pounds, the 5'4" blonde herself provides the best reason why teen-age girls should shape up.

She was National AAU floor exercise champion for eight years and All-American for nine consecutive years. In 1961, she competed in Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Russia, defeating the Olympic floor exercise champion, Larrissa Latynina. That year also, at the request of the State Department, she gave exhibitions throughout the Middle East. In 1962 she was on the World Championship team and in 1963, the Pan American team.

Meaning of American Goverment in World Discussed in First Public Forum

The meaning of the American form of government for the world was summed up by experts on Europe, Latin America, and Africa at the first of a series of public forums held at Maryville College on Sunday afternoon February 12.

Three visiting scholars took part in the College-community program sponsored as part of an American studies seminar made possible by a grant from the Lilly Endowment, Inc. The visiting scholar under the Lilly grant for the first foruum was Dr. Gottfried Dietze, Professor of Political Science at The John Hopkins University. Dr. Dietze, a native of Germany, summed up the American influence on Europe.

American influence in Europe

The other two panelists, members of the faculty of the University of Tennessee, were Dr. Douglas H. Carlisle, Professor of Political Science; and Donald Albert Dumont, U. S. Ambassador to the Kingdom of Burundi in Africa and visiting professor and ambassador in residence at U-T this year. Dr. Carlisle dealt with American influence in Latin America, and Ambassador Dumont explained the influence in Africa.

Dr. A. D. Ainsworth, Chairman of the Department of Political Science at Maryville College, served as moderator.

Dr. Dietze opened the forum by outlining the impact of the American Constitution on European nations and on the science of government. The four main contributions of the American system he defined as:

(1.) The separation of powers in the American form of government, as distinct from the parliamentary system used in most of Europe.

(2.) Federalism, which Dr. Dietze said serves to protect individual freedom against governmental power.

(3.) Judicial review, in which judges are given the right to test both legislative and executive acts.

(4.) The first written constitution.

As for the impact of the American system on Europe, Dr. Dietze cited the Swiss government, which used the American constitution as an example, and the influence of the American constitution on the German and French forms of government.

Dr. Carlisle, speaking of the experience in Latin America, said that attempts have been made simply to translate the American constiution for Latin American countries. Citing Mexico as the first to try, he said "every attempt has been a miserable failure." However, Dr. Carlisle said that the attempts to adapt the principles from the American form of government have been successful.

Question of intervention

"Ideas and words vary in translation," he added, in explaining why a form of government cannot simply be translated, and he pointed out later that custom and tradition have a great deal of influence in the operation of a government.

Ambassador Dumont, speaking on Africa, said there are now 39 governments in Africa, and he divided the influence between America, the French and the British. The outstanding American example is Liberia, he said, where a country was formed for freed slaves who simply took the American constitution with them. French influence predominates in the areas of Africa formerly controlled by the French, and British influence in the areas formerly held by the British.

Questions from the audience of about 165 area citizens, students, faculty, and staff developed many of these ideas, including the apparently unanimous conviction of the panelists that nationalistic governments are increasingly combining into regional groups or federations for mutual benefits.

Plans for New Science Building Are Explained as a New Teaching Concept

The new Maryville College science building, which probably will be ready for bids by contractors this month, is designed around a teaching concept, just as the new residence halls are designed around a new concept in dormitory living.

The design, prepared by Barber and McMurry of Knoxville after extensive consultation with members of the science faculty and special consultants employed to determine the needs for the new facility, utilizes a modular concept in which there is a central service core. Laboratories and classrooms are around the outside walls, and wherever possible the building is designed for multiple use.

Because of the design in segments, all main area partitions in each segment are temporary and can be moved to change the size and shape of various areas as teaching programs and needs change. The two-story building will have approximately 47,000 square feet of floor space and is expected to cost about $1,250,000.

The central service core contains offices, storerooms, and shops, and each member of the science faculty will occupy a suite with both laboratory and office space.

Research areas are not arranged as they are in traditional laboratories. Laboratories for both beginning and advanced work are provided with carrels, and part of the basic program is to do away with scheduled laboratory periods so that the student can work at his carrel on his experimental project whenever he has free time.

The open research area will have a central demonstration table with the student work areas around the walls of the room. In the case of biology and psychology, live-animal quarters and audio-visual teaching areas will be shared.

The building will have psychology and biology departments on the first floor and physics and chemistry on the second floor. It is to be built in the area be-

Mrs. Proffitt Elected to Forensic Organization

Mrs. Robert Proffitt, Forensics Director at Maryville College, has been elected to the Executive Council of the Tennessee Intercollegiate Forensic Association, which met recently in Murfreesboro, Tenn. The Council is a five-member board for state college debate activities.

She will serve as the representative for the East Tennessee colleges and universities. Other officers are Dr. Carroll Ellis of David Lipscomb College, President; Mrs. Faye Julian of the University of Tennessee, Vice President; David Walker, MTSU, Executive Secretary; and Miss Judy Schulz, Memphis State. West Tennessee Representative.

At the debate held with the Association meeting, Maryville College had four teams entered, and 12 students in the individual speaking events. Five Maryville students were finalists.

Members of the Maryville College Debate Team presented a program for the Maryville Optimist Club Feb. 21, and is participating in a tournament at Memphis Feb. 23 and 24.

Neuroanatomy Lecturers to Be on Campus

On February 27 and 28 representatives of the Visiting Scientists Program in Neuroanatomy will be on our campus for the third consecutive year. The representatives are Dr. Donald C. Goodman, Chairman of the Department of Anatomical Sciences, University of Florida College of Medicine in Gainesville, and Dr. Henry Hoffman, Neuroanatomist in the Department of Anatomy, University of Alabama College of Medicine in Birmingham. Dr. Goodman will present a lecture, "A morphological basis for recovery of brain function," Monday evening at 7:00 in Fayerweather 204. Both Dr. Goodman and Dr. Hoffman will be available during the afternoon of the 27th and the morning of the 28th to talk with interested studests and to demonstrate histological slides and instruments used in the microtechnology of their work.

During the afternoon of the 28th, a team of representatives from the University of Tennessee School of Medical Sciences, Memphis will be available in Fayerweather to talk to students interested in any of the medical sciences.

Tuition Grants Increased

An increase in the Maryville College tuition grant program, which pays part of the tuition at the College for outstanding graduates of area high schools, children of teachers in the public schools in Blount County, and children of ministers and missionaries, was announced recently by President Joseph J. Copeland.

The increase is part of an expanding program of student assistance at Maryville, which includes not only the tuition grants, but scholarships, long and short-term loans, and a campus student employment program.

With the increases, the top-ranking graduate in each high school in Blount, Knox, Loudon, Monroe, and Sevier county will now be eligible for a half-tuition grant for each of the four years at Maryville. The original program provided the half-tuition grant for the freshman year only. The only requirement is that the student maintain a B average in order to keep the grant.

Children of teachers in the city and county schools in Blount County are eligible for tuition grants of $200 a year under the new program, up $50 from the previous $150 award. These grants are made on the request o fthe student and there are no requirements other than that one parent be a public school teacher in the County or city system.

The grant to the children of ministers and missionaries also will be increased from $150 to $200 a year. These are available for the children of ministers and missionaries of all denominations, and are available to the student on request.

The tuition grants also include $100 a year given on request to any graduate of a Blount County high school, and this program will continue. Children of ministers in the Synod of Mid-South of the United Presbyterian Church are also now eligible for

Mr. McKaskell Will Perform in Recital

Robert W. McKaskell, violinist and member of the Maryville College faculty, will present a recital Feb. 24 at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center on the College campus.

The program includes the Bach "Partita No. III in E Major," followed by Haydn's "Violin Concerto No. II in G Major." This will be accompanied by a Maryville College string ensemble formed this year, and will be the first appearance for 12 string instrumentalists and a harpsichordist.

Following an intermission, Mr. McKaskell will play the Brahms "Sonata in A Major, Op. 100," accompanied by his wife, Judith B. McKaskell, pianist.

The recital is open to the public and there is no charge for admission.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Now that the second semester is in full swing, it has become increasingly apparent that a good number of students have been taking full advantage of the newly instated cut system. In fact, it even appears that some students have hardly noticed that classes have yet begun. Of course this phenomenon has not been confined to one class—almost everyone from freshmen to seniors is now enjoying the full benefits of his 2.5 average. No compulsory class attendance; now I can cut that abhored class; why go, just cut; would I waste my time in that class when I could be doing something constructive like sleeping: thus sounds the repetoire of those "lucky" free-cutters.

However, as many have already discovered—and as many more will soon find out—that the freedom to cut may mean the freedom to flunk. When the administration saw fit to allow more freedom in class attendance, they also felt that each student would have to be more responsible for his attendance habits. But no one is going to question the advisability of having optional class attendance—especially for those students whose grades show that they are above average. Most students who have that coveted 2.5 average, however, have also realized that grade average did not come about by cutting classes excessively, but freely—just ask someone whose average dropped below the demarcation line to see if cutting classes excessively did or did not contribute to the fatal plunge.

This is certainly no plea for every one to march off to class every single period—that would be ridiculous, no doubt—but it is hoped that some one will have enough insight to realize that going to class regularly has some purpose (no doubt) and is not the punishment handed down from headquarters to those who know no better. If a student is so bright and intelligent that going to class is just a waste of time, needless to say, he doesn't belong here.

Following up on the editorial in the last issue of the Highland Echo, the problem of cheating on campus has become a favorite topic for discussion. There have been, of course, many arguments both for and against the reasons and prejudices about cheating. In fact, the Student Council has responded by placing a questionaire in the mailbox of every student and through a meeting of the Academics Committee. Through these means it has been hoped that something could be done about the problem on the Maryville campus.

In Monday evening's forum of the February Meetings the same question was brought up. Many were perhaps shocked to find that cheating actually had some defenders. After all, they said, since much emphasis is put upon grades and that final diploma, and practically no emphasis upon what an education is really all about, why not cheat?

Has American education—and education at Maryville College no less—come to the place where a gradepoint average and a sheepskin represent "education." If it has, then it is time for this college to close its doors.

Of course the student's standard argument is that the teacher presents no challenge, so if he gets back on the exams what he wants, the way that the student gives it back does not matter: neither honesty nor cheating are of any consequence.

And then from the professor's point of view is the student who wants something for nothing, which usually means cheating.

If the administration, faculty and students are to face up to this problem, there must be a reasonable solution. When both students and faculty are guilty of overt cheating, this could hardly be called a conducive academic atmosphere.

try in the affairs of another provoked discussion among the panelists, and Dr. Dietze pointed out that in international law only armed force is considered intervention. "Economic intervention has never been recognized," he said.

Dr. Dietze also said in response to a question that executive power has been growing in America since the Civil War, and he pointed out that in Germany the growth of executive power in pre-Hitler days proved to be a disaster.

A reception for the panelists and guests followed in the Lounge of the Fine Arts Center, where the forum was held.

The second public forum in the series of seven will be held at 2 p.m. Feb. 26 in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. The visiting scholars will be Dr. James W. Wiggins, Associate Dean and Professor of Sociology at Converse College; Dr. Ruth Stephens, retired Professor of History at the University of Tennessee; and Dr. Elmer Ellis, Visiting Professor of Education at the University of Chattanooga, who has spent time recently in Vietnam.

"Vietnam—Prospects for Tomorrow" will be the topic for the Feb. 26 program, which will also be open to the public.

half-tuition grants for the full four years instead of for the freshman year only.

Three top graduates of area high schools are now enrolled at Maryville, and a fourth was enrolled last semester. Miss Royce Ann Chesney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy C. Chesney of Rt. 8, Thorngrove Pike, Knoxville, was Valedictorian at Carter High School. Miss Martha McCall, daughter of Malcolm McCall of Route 1, Maryville, was Valedictorian at Lanier High School in Blount County. Gail Weaver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee C. Weaver of 1528 Emoriland Boulevard in Knoxville was the top graduate at Knoxville's Central High School; and Steve Waters, son of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Waters of Route 1, Walland, who attended Maryville for the first semester, was Valedictorian at Walland High School.

There are nine children of Blount County teachers presently enrolled at Maryville College, and 85 students who live in Blount County are receiving the $100 per year tuition grant.

Grapplers Take 8-4 Record To Tournament

The Maryville College wrestling team finished out their season last Saturday night and are now participating in the SEC tournament in Athens, Georgia. They took an 8-4 record with them. In the last two weeks of their season, they faced five opponents and were able to overcome two of them.

Against Sewanee the Scots won 19-14. Ralph Johnson got the only pin, with only 35 esconds gone in the second period. Pritts decisioned Lee Parker 5-1; Nicholas won over Bob Green 4-1; Pallis trounced Ben Teasley 14-0; Dodez won 3-1 over John Lasley. Pat O'Bryan and John Colby wrestled to a 2-2 tie.

The Scots faced rougher going against a tough Auburn squad. Pritts, Johnson and Pallis got the only wins, all of them decision victories, for the Scots. The final score of the match was 29-9 in favor of Auburn. The next night against Emory, the Scots got their revenge by winning 36-10. Ruhlin replaced captain Pritts at the 123 pound slot and won 12-8. Johnson got his second pin in three matches, this one with 6 seconds gone in the third period. St. Clair pinned his man with only 2 seconds remaining in the first period. George Schnitzer decisioned Steve Schieldecker 6-3. Lynn Dodez pinned his man at the buzzer ending the first period. Dauron, Nicholas and Pallis won by forfeit to round out the Scot scoring.

Against Appalachian State Teacher's College in Boone, North Carolina, a team that the Scots have never beaten in the history of the school, the Scots went down to an insulting 39-3 defeat. Captain Ron Pritts scored the only points for the Scots as he barely decisioned George Sandoone 3-2. The rest of the match belonged all to Appalachian, as they received 6 pins and 3 decisions.

In their last meet of the year, the Scots faced one of the contending teams for the SEC crown, Georgia Tech. Captain Ron Pritts decisioned his man 4-0, to finish out the year unbeaten in dual meet competition. Gary Dauron and Paul Macy wrestled to a 5-5 tie. Ralph Johnson got another pin, this one with 40 seconds left in the second period. From here on out it was close, with the edge going to Georgia Tech. Stevenson was decisioned 4-0 by Jack Bontherry, Nicholas, facing nationally ranked James Pond, put up a determined fight, but the decision went to Pond 5-1. C. Ward of Tech then followed with a 3-1 decision over George Schnitzer. Harry Burnett was decisioned by Tom Newkirk 4-0. Van Pallis then came on the mats and showed why he was an SEC contender, getting a pin with 45 seconds gone in the third period. To finish out the match, Bob Brehn decisioned Lynn Dodez 7-1, and Bob Tolar decisioned Pat O'Bryan 1-0. The final score was 20-15 in favor of the visiting Georgia Tech.

Freshman-Strong Track Team Faces Promising Year

WITH only seven members (five lettermen) returning from last year's record—setting squad, this year's team is relying heavily on a large freshman turnout. Assistant Coach Joe Malloy has great expectations for this new team. Although they lack the collegiate experience of the previous year, their background and performance record should rival that of the past.

Once again, the Scots find themselves strong in the track events and spread rather thin in the field events. Dick Craig, second highest scorer on the team for the last two years, represents the veterans of the dash corps, helping to initiate freshmen Bob McEldowney, Alan Kilpatrick, Dave Garner, and Paul Johnson into their own specialty. In the middle distances Maryville will go completely with new personnel: Bryan Childes, Dave (Baldy) Hollingsworth, Rick Hughes, Darrell Smith, Joe Baker, and John Dowling. If an emergency arises, Cole Piper may be borrowed from the discus to run the 440 or the mile relay. In the distances the Scots show the most promise. Returnee Bill Evaul is joined by Dave Wiley, Ed Hawkey, Ross Hamory, and Brian Childs. In the hurdles, Maryville will rely on the sole contribution of John Klein unless someone else can be trained for the event.

In the field events, Pat O'Bryan, Cole Piper, Dean Clark, Dan Styles, and John McLaughlin head a field that is stronger than last year but is still not as strong as could be desired. The jumping events are handled by Dean Clark and John McLaughlin, backed up by Alan Kilpatrick, Dave Garner, Steve Siera, and Ralph McCampbell. Assistant Coach Malloy may be pressed into service if needed. Weight events are the property of Pat O'Bryan, Cole Piper, and Dan Styles, with aid from John Fogerty, Wally Saz, Dean Bercaw, Lynn Dodez, Steve Siera, and Harold Griffith.

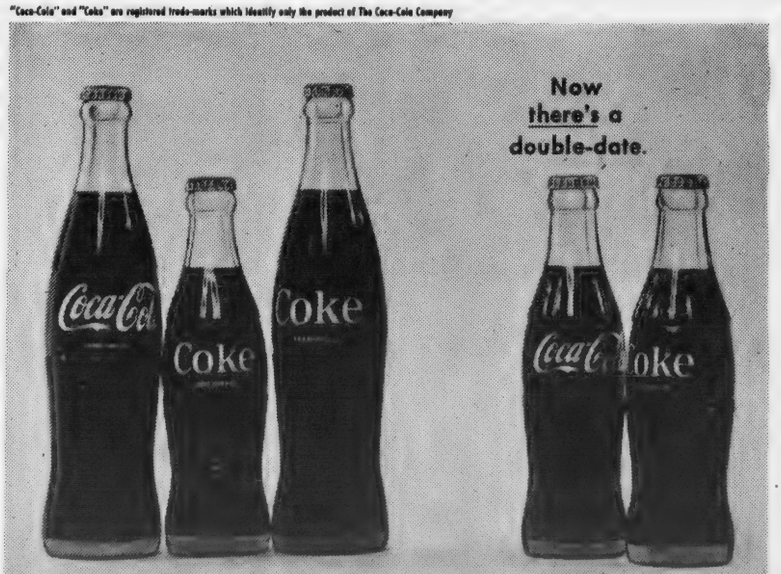
Situating arts and sciences facilities across from each other will give the College a permanent and lasting symbol as a true liberal arts college dedicated to quality teaching in both the arts and sciences.



A lecture hall is being designed with the building, although it probably will not be built this spring. A final feature of the new unit will be a round greenhouse at the rear, which will be where the present tennis courts are now situated beside Baldwin Hall.

Scots Win 2, Lose 3; Refs Take 1

On February 3, the Scots met Asheville-Biltmore in Asheville. The Scots were able to stay with them for the first half (46-43), but could not withstand the strong ABC offense and defense of the second half (94-76). Bill Padgett put in 26 points, 16 in the initial period but only 10 in the final one. Phil Bettis and Bruce VanLeuven put in 10, Jack Llewellyn had 11. Others scoring for the Scots were Payne with 6, Hancher with 7, Raby with 2 and Maxwell with 4. In the rebound department, Jon Hancher and VanLeuven both led the Scots with 6. For the opponents, Batsell had 39 points, Vanmetre 15, Schuster 11, Lindley 10, Blakenship 9, McElhaney 6, and Arrick 3. Arrick led the team with 13 rebounds. Asheville—Biltmore will be here Saturday to face the Scots in their last game of the season.

The story was the same at Mars Hill the following night. The first half was tight, 38-32. But Mars Hill was able to come on a little stronger in the second half and emerge the victor 88-78. Scot scoring was even, with four men hitting the double figures. Llewellyn led the pointmakers with 17, Bettis and Padgett had 13, Payne 11. Others scoring were Maxwell with 8, VanLeuven and Hancher with 6, Raby with 2. Bettis led the Scots on the boards as he pulled down 9 rebounds; Hancher came down with 7. For the Lions Bob Gibson led with 21 points and 8 rebounds, his brother, Bill Gibson had 14 points and 17 rebounds. Ray Randall scored 17 points. Everybody else on the team contributed small amounts of points to the winning cause.

Against Bryan the Scots were able to overturn their losing ways. After a close first half in which the Scots were able to inch out a 46-40 lead, the Scot defense took hold and they were able to break open the game. At one spot the Scots scored 20 straight points without allowing Bryan to put one through the hoop. The final score was 107-93, as the Scots broke the century barrier for the second time this year. Padgett once again led the Maryville scorers with 30 points, 10 in the first half and 20 in the second. Captain Llewellyn was a close second with 24 points, but he led rebounders with 10. Bettis had 16 points, Maxwell 15, VanLeuven and Morefield 6, Hancher 4 (and 10 rebounds), Payne 3, Raby 2 and Rumford 1. For Bryan the scoring was fairly even. Tim Margene put in 23, Gerald 19. Joe Coats and Warren Hill led the rebounding chores with 8 each.

Returning home after their long road trip, the Scots faced The Praying Colonels from Centre College in Danville, Ky. Things looked dark for the home squad as the visitors took a 43-29 lead into the dressing room at the halftime intermission. But the Scots put on an unusual display of both offense and defense and were able to pull it out 78-75. Padgett once again led the scoring with 21 (and 6 rebounds). Hancher had 12 points and 15 rebounds to lead the Scots in the other category. Others scoring for the Scots were Bettis with 10, Llewellyn with 8. Raby, Maxwell and Morefield with 7, Payne, VanLeuven and Rumford with 2. The Colonels had five men in the double figures as they passed the chores around. Leading them were Baker with 16 and Phillips with 12. Osborne lead in rebounding with 11.

On February 13, the Scots were hosts to Tusculum College of Greeneville, Tenn. Padgett was unstopable in the first half as he lead to Scots to a 40-31 lead with 24 points of his own. But the second half contained the whole story. Tusculum put a tight defense on Padgett and held him to only 9 points in the final period. The Scots lead by three with less than a minute to go. Tusculum came down the floor and quickly cut the lead to 1 point. After a time out, the Scots decided to stall out the last 37 seconds. But the ref read the story differently. With the Scots in control, he made a nerviously bad double-dribble call on Lynn Raby and gave the ball over to Tusculum. They quickly scored but with 10 seconds it looked like the Scots could maybe do it anyway. Nevertheless, with Padgett shooting, and a Tusculum player hanging on his back, the ref looked the other way and let the foul be ignored, and the game went to Tusculum, 67-66. Padgett led scorers with 33 points, and rebounders with 9. Payne had 14 points, Hancher 9 (with 8 rebounds). Maxwell had 4, Bettis and Llewellyn 3. For the visitors, Eschweiler led with 22 points and 15 rebounds. Coats helped out with 17 points. Deaton had 12 points (plus the disputed last two) and 12 rebounds.

Meeting Mars Hill for the second time this month, the Scots played another close, exciting game that has become their brand of basketball. The first half provided few exciting moments as it looked as if the Scots were just staying even with the Lions. Mars Hill was able to open up a 43-38 lead to take to the dressing room for the rest. But the second half saw a determined Scot team fight back and leave the score tied at the end of regulation play 78-78. With 2 seconds on the clock Phil Bettis had taken a rebound from a Padgett shot and put it through the hoop to tie it up. Needless to say, the Scots threw the ballgame away in the overtime period as their excitement and anxciety forced them to numerous floor mistakes at strategic points and the Lions were able to take an 89-86 victory back to North Carolina with them.

The Scots were away on Thursday meeting Warren Wilson at Swananoa in North Carolina. They return home for the last game of the season against Asheville-Biltmore on Saturday, the 25 of February. Let's all go out and see the Scots close out their season on the winning side.

Curriculum Committee Announces New Curriculum Proposals

In Chapel this past Thursday Dr. Blair and Dr. Shields made public their proposals for the new curriculum. The regular academic year will be divided into four periods (ten weeks, four weks, ten weeks, ten weeks); a load of three to four courses will be taken during the three ten-wek periods, and the four-week term will be devoted to various types of special study. Two main reasons were cited for the adoption of the new calendar: 1. concentration on fewer courses at a time yields better performance; 2. elimination of the "lame duck" session between Christmas vacation and semester finals is desirable. Dr. Blair pointed out that this new schedule is the direction in which more and more colleges are moving, and that "it will soon be the rule, not the exception." This academic calendar, it was mentioned, is more-or-less in rhythm with the quarter system of many schools.

Bible requirement changed

Concerning the curriculum itself, the most strategic changes occur in the fields of science and math. Dr. Shields pointed out that the natural sciences, physics, chemistry, and biology are at present little more than repetition of high school work. It will be a primary purpose of the new curriculum to present the sciences on a more sophisticated level. During the first term of the freshman year, the development of scientific thought and its influence on culture will be studied; in the last term of the first year a comprehensive course in the fundamentals of science will be required of all freshmen in order to give them a broad view of science, which sems to be so lacking in the present liberal arts education at Maryville. After the first year, further study in one of the science fields will be conducted on a topical basis. This will streamline the study in the major field, as all the courses in that discipline will be revised and correlated with one another. Naturally, it will still be possible for non-majors with the proper prerequisites to take upper level science courses; but under the new topical approach, there will be an attempt to make each of the fields of natural science more suited to the upper class need for specialization.

Foreign languages

The freshman Bible requirements will be replaced by a specially designed philosophy course called "Man's Search for Meaning," which Dr. Swenson and Dr. Cartlidge are working on. This course will be designed to assure the freshman that he is in college. Questions to be dealt with in this course are typified by the following: "Who am I? Where did I come from? Why am I here? Where am I going?" Other faculty and upper classmen will have opportunities to take part in discussion groups related to this course.

Under the new curriculum a freshman will be able to satisfy his foreign language requirement by simply passing a comprehensive test, desgned to measure proficiency in that language after two years of college study.

"Non-Western" studies

Also given in the freshman year will be two terms of Western World History" and "Western World Literature." There is much planning at the present to coordinate these two courses in

cont'd p. 4, col. 1

Disscussion Groups Planned

What kind of an animal is an "interim"? Is 10-4-10-10 a new Anderson Hall security code? If you are interested in the answers to these two provocative questions, or if the new curriculum stimulates, intrigues, or confuses you, then plan to attend one of the discussion groups on the new curriculum from Monday, March 20th through Thursday, March 23rd in the Fine Arts Center Lounge. The discussions, sponsored by the student council academic committee, will be very informal and will give you the opportunity to question or comment about any aspect of the new curriculum. Several members of the curriculum committee, along with Dr. Carolyn Blair and Dr. Randolph Shields, will be present at each of the afternoon meetings to answer questions and clarify misunderstood parts of the new curriculum. Check posters for specific times. All of us will be affected by the new curriculum; thus, it seems pertinent and necessary that we try to comprehend the changes involved and our role in these changes. Even if you can not stay very long, feel free to drop by for a few minutes and unveil your questions about the new curriculum.

Two Maryville College Seniors Awarded Woodrow Wilson Fellowships

On Wednesday, in Chapel, Lois Huffines and Marilyn Rankin were presented certificates and honored as winners of this year's Woodrow Wilson Fellowship. Both girls are seniors. Lois is a German major from Folsom, Pennsylvania, and Marilyn is an English major from Nashville, Tennessee.

In addition to the two fellowship winners, Ruth Bates, a French major from Follansbee, West Virginia, also received Honorable Mention.

The Woodrow Wilson Fellowship is awarded each year to graduating seniors who show outstanding ability and scholarship for future college teaching. All three students were nominated by their major advisors and had all necessary credentials presented to the Foundation committee. Those selected by the committee were then given an interview with the committee and were then chosen for the awards. The Fellowship provides for a stipend of $2000 in addition to the payment of all tuition and fees at the graduate school of the student's choice.

1967 "Building Year" for Debate

With the State Tournament already behind them (Feb. 9-11), Debate Team members can relax somewhat from a strenuous competition schedule that has included over a half-dozen major contests. Several meets, though, including the National Tournament in Wisconsin, have been slated for this spring.

Maryville's squad last competed at Memphis State University two weeks ago. Battling against such top contenders as the Universities of Arkansas, of Alabama, of Kentucky, and of St. Louis proved stimulating, reported one veteran. Thoughout all the tourneys this year, Maryville has consistently reached the final rounds, especially in individual events. "This has been a building year," said Steve Horning. "We have by now analyzed our league competition. If eager, capable students try out next fall, they will have working for them accumulated insight that wins trophies in collegiate forensics."

This year's topic — "Resolved: that the United States should substantially reduce its foreign policy commitments" — has been both challenging and frustrating. It is — to debaters swamped by thousands of official pronouncements from our Foggy Bottom State Department — an absurdly broad resolution. On the other hand, teams promoting a highly specific Alliance for Progress reduction or dropping of outer space commitments illustrate some tight limits possible.

"Maryville College Days" Resumed in Community

Maryville College Days, the annual solicitation of funds from the local community for Maryville College, began March 13 under the leadership of the General Chairman, Dr. James Proffitt, of Maryville. The program is being resumed after a three year suspension during the Development Fund Campaign. The week-long campaign, for $50,000, is designed to point out how the College serves the community and how the community can help the College. The theme is "Partners in Progress."

Goal funds itemized

The College, in seeking support from the community, is documenting its case through a planned program of information designed to show the many ways the College and the community aid and serve each other. A kick-off breakfast of coffee and doughnuts for campaign workers was held in the Bank of Maryville meeting room at 8:30 a.m., March 13, at which Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of the College; Bill A. Fleming, Director of Development; and Dr. Proffitt were the speakers.

The week-long effort will conclude on Friday evening, March 17, with a theatre party in the Maryville College Theatre and a special performance of the Playhouse production of "Becket" for all participants in the campaign.

The $50,000 goal for Maryville College Days in divided, with $30,000 to be sought from area business and industry, $15,000 for the Honaker Club to raise the balance of $25,000 needed to start the permanent

Dr. Griffitts in Evaluation of National Science Foundation Program

Dr. Fred A. Griffitts, Professor of Chemistry and Chairman of the Department of Chemistry at Maryville College, traveled to Atlanta, Ga., recently, where he served as Chairman of a National Science Foundation Panel.

The assignment had to do with the evaluation of proposals submitted by colleges and universities requesting that the NSF provide partial funds for the purchase of scientific equipment. Maryville College has been a recipient of funds from this source several times in recent years.

Playhouse Presents Jean Anouilh's Becket

The dramatic story of the betrayed friendship between Thomas-a-Becket and Henry II of England was retold in the modern play "Becket" presented by the Maryville College Playhouse March 10 and 11.

William Beasley and Jon Lutz co-starred as the roistering king and the crony he appointed Archbishop of Canterbury in the year 1162, only to have the Archbishop murdered for his unexpected opposition in the church office.

The melodramatic and political aspects of this tale were first made into a play by Alfred, Lord Tennyson. A second famous play using the same famous feud is T.S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral," first produced in 1935.

The ironically witty version presented at Maryville is the work of the French playwright Jean Anouilh. A huge success in Paris in 1959, this "Becket" became an outstanding hit in New York the following year in an English translation. Sir Laurence Olivier played the title role, and Anthony Quinn portrayed King Henry II.

Focus on India

by Bob Hart

In deciding this year where the money that is traditionally collected through the auspices of the Fred Hope Fund could be most effectively used, the committee looked to India, a land ravaged by famine, mammoth overpopulation, and political instability. All of Asia is suffering from grave social and political problems of this nature, but India is at the center of the problem, forming a prototype for the rest of the Continent. By expressing our concern in India, we are also showing that we in the United States and more especially

After hearing the proposals of the curriculum committee in chapel, one can hardly keep from being excited about the new curriculum with all its many changes and improvements. Many an upperclassman feels that it is too bad that those changes did not come two or three years earlier. The committee, faculty, and administration should be complimented for their ability to adjust the curriculum to the rising standards of American education today. As Dr. Shields pointed out, no one should ever be completely satisfied with the new curriculum—in fact, there must be constant revision and adaptation if the liberal arts program of Maryville College is to succeed.

One of the most exciting and challenging parts of the new curriculum is the reducing of the number of courses carried each term and the addition of concentration in each field. Many have long felt the disadvantages of trying to learn a lot about five or six subjects (all that can happen is a slight skimming of the course material, at best) and have preferred to spend more time and more effort on fewer courses with a higher degree of concentration. The courses to be offered—such as history, science, philosophy, and literature—will provide a much better background for college work than many of the outmoded, outdated and farcical courses that have appeared in the past.

One of the most apparent problems of this new curriculum, however, is its obvious slant toward the "broad" liberal arts education. It is undoubtedly fine for those who have the time or the effort or the resources to spend preparing for graduate school or other pursuits. However, it is hoped—and believed—that the college will not, and cannot, allow the new curriculum to become artificial and pedantic with actual practical preparation suffering.

This of course leads to the most dangerous problem. This new curriculum, while not requiring the so-called "cream of the crop" students—and faculty—will make great demands on the student and faculty member. This could prove to be disastrous. If many faculty members continue at the same pace that they have been going, not only will the new curriculum fail but this college will be forced to lock up. A learning experience does not result from a professor's use of notes that are so yellow with age that they are disintegrating, or lecture material that he has been using for the last forty years, or preparation made on the way to class (or no preparation at all), nor from students cheating. Both faculty and students are going to have to make this new curriculum work. A new catalogue and calendar will not make Maryville College the A-1 liberal arts college it wants to be.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Last Tuesday as I arrived at my chapel seat, I was confronted by a small blue card. The first thing I saw was a dollar sign and the plea for money. "Another one. It seems they always want more money," with this thought I simply put it aside, using it to mark the first hymn. However, after hearing the exciting plans that had been made for the money, I became excited. But, alas, I seemed to be a minority of one. Everyone else seemed to be numb to the idea that had been presented. This numbness, or perhaps apathy, seems to have been underscored because, first there has been no further mention of the project, only a lonely poster outside the Bookstore. Also, no one has come around to investigate the pledges. Thus, I have come to the conclusion that either the idea is merely a wild dream or, in blunt terms, a fake. Yet how can this be when I see pictures of boney things called children and a barren land that is supposed to feed them? Perhaps I am merely a naive freshman to believe that this Famine Project is something to get excited about. Is the student body of this college uninterested in the problems of the world and so tied up 'here' that it can't or won't do anything? I truly hope not! Here is a chance for a group of young Americans, i.e. the student body, to be personally involved through Dr. Rugh and two students, in meeting a need. Maybe the need is huge and our efforts seem futile, yet maybe we must start in a small way to solve the big problems.

Thank you for letting me air my views.

Sincerely,
Lynne Taylor

The Freshmen Niche

by The Publicity Committee

A hearty thanks is extended to all who helped make "A Village Happening" such a success. The Dance Committee, headed by John Ribble, put in long hours in preparation of elaborate decorations, then enjoyed the excited appreciation of its creation by those who participated Saturday night. The careful work of the Ticket Committee, chaired by Alice Weber, is also acknowledged.

The Orientation and Constitution Committee has already met and begun collecting practical suggestions for next year's freshmen. It is also formulating much-needed by-laws for the Class of Seventy (1970, that is). Additional committeemen are still welcomed: please see John Hay or Shep Spear.

Dues collection should have been completed this week. If an authorized representative has not contacted you, (payment should be made to Iris McKeldin, Sue Smith, Kathy Stone (Dorm I); Alice Weber, C. Isley, Terri Kane (Dorm II); or Lynn Dodez and the floor representatives of Dorm III. Class officers will also record receipt of dues.

Reminder: Keep April 22 open for "Under the Yum-Yum Tree," "Unicorn in the Garden," and an incredible exhibition by the world's youngest master of escape, presentations all sponsored by your Class.

Although the traditional outing is being planned by the Programs Committee, and other distractions indigenous to spring promise to appear, we must remind ourselves of mid-semester pressures and wisely allot some time for study also.

Unglamorous hours in the library tracking down authoritative evidence are willingly spent by the squad. Rewards in self-confidence, technical skill, and poise are worth sacrifice, members explain. They add that travel to important campuses of southeastern United States broadens perspective and awareness of regional atmosphere.

The debating society Pi Kappa Delta, of which Maryville is a charter member, welcomes all college students who achieve a certain measure of success in intercollegiate competition. Initiations will be held this spring. Since debate scholarships will be offered next year, an added boost will be given to Maryville's high-caliber squad.

Rights and Responsibility

by John Wolfe

"Hello, Dick. Hello, Jane. This is a Mar-ti-ni. Look, Look, Look! It is a dry Mar-ti-ni. But the Mar-ti-ni is wet! It is a wet dry Mar-ti-ni. Ha, Ha, Ha! Fun, Fun! Have a Mar-ti-ni, Dick! Have a Mar-ti-ni, Jane! Be like Daddy, Dick. Be like Mommy, Jane. Drink, Drink, Drink. Fun, Fun, Fun! Rum, Spot, Rum!" — and life goes on — "and the beat goes on" — "With God on our Side" — "Wow-Weee, Pretty Scarey!" — "God is Alive and well in Mexico City" — "Support your local Police—Bribe a Cop Today" — and life goes on — "and the beat goes on" — and we don't even give a damn. And, if perchance we do give a damn, we don't really want to do anything about it. We'll just leave it to the other guy.

Oh, you mean someone died in Viet Nam today? People really aren't starving in India are they? You mean to say we have other Congressmen that are just as guilty as Powell? And some people really care if I cheat here?

At times I really think that not many of us know what we are doing much less what we are supposed to be doing. We claim we have rights, and we do. At Maryville we, as students, have the right to be making many of the decisions that will affect us while we are here. We, as students, have the right to be concerned about the decisions that leaders in our Government are making for us. As students, we have the right to change the course our world is taking. We HAVE THE RIGHT. But, too often, we say, "I am just an insignificant being who can't really do anything — why try?" If this is really the true feeling of Americans today, then we had better give in—give in to anything and anybody who wants to rape us of our rights.

This campus is DEAD! Our corpses are so stiff that nothing seems to move us. "Let 'er burn baby!" — "Keep the Faith Baby!" — "An anti-anti-ballistic missile" — "An endless War" — "CIA-NSA" — "Famine" — "Murder" — "Mass Murder" — not one damn thing seems to stir us! We live in our own little Heaven — or Hell.

I came across a Promissory note written in 1915 by an immigrant to Alaska that I think is worth printing here.

Every right bestowed upon you by your free country begets a corresponding duty.

We are promised the pursuit of happiness. We are not promised happiness.

We are promised equality of opportunity. We are not promised riches.

We are promised freedom to read and write. We are not promised wisdom.

We are promised liberty. We are not promised peace.

We are promised certain rights but we don't get very far if we don't take on some responsibility. Mr. W. Clement Stone placed challenges before this student body two years ago. The challenge was there — the responsibility turned down — why? Because the man said things in a little different manner than we are used to hearing. His message was lost to many because he didn't conform to the Maryville College Student's way. Well, I won't conform either, and I'll say the same thing — I DARE YOU — I DARE YOU to take on responsibility — I DARE YOU to take on the one real responsibility you have here at Maryville College; and, that is to know as much about what is going on all around you as you possibly can. "War is good business — Invest your sons" — "and the beat goes on" —

E. Jones of the Maryville College faculty, assisted by student Georgia Briggs, were Philip Der Pilbosian as Gilbert Folliot, the Bishop of London; Diane Caylor as the Queen Mother; Deborah Ferrell as the Young Queen; and Thomas Llewellyn as King Louis of France.

The four Barons, agents of King Henry, were played by David Nighbert, Robert Young, Stuart Smith, and John March.

The play, complex in its staging, required 23 separate changes of scene. These were accomplished using a unit set, or space stage, with properties and lighting to change the scene. The curtain was used only at intermission. The artistic style of medieval tapestry was used in the stage design, and elaborate costumes added color to the production.

"Becket" played before a full house on both Friday and Saturday nights.

at Maryville College are actively concerned with what is happening in India and Asia at large.

The larger portion of the three thousand dollars to be raised is going for the improvement and maintaince of water wells in northern India. This project is aimed at diminishing the present drought conditions and at reducing the impact of drought in the future. Dr. Donald Rugh, a faternal worker of the Church in India, will administer the project.

But more than just money, Maryville College is also sending the embodiment of its concern in the persons of two of our own students, Jim Reynolds and Al Keim. These two students have volunteered to work in the Francis Newton Hospital at Ferrozepore, India in the Punjab. Part of the money collected this year will be used to help defray the expenses incured by them in travel. In these two representatives Maryville College will be personally involved in the life of India, and on their return India will become a more live reality to the College through them.

Contributions are now underway. The students, the faculty, and all campus organizations are all being asked to give what they feel they can. The need is obvious and immediate, but the response is still up to you.

academic-athletic scholarship fund, and $5,000 from area Alumni.

Public information program

Dr. Proffitt, in announcing the campaign goal, pointed out that these contributions are over and above the pledges made to the Development Fund.

Those gifts were basically for capital improvements, such as the new dormitories and the science building to be built this spring. The Maryville College Annual Fund is earmarked for current operating expenses, particularly scholarships and faculty salaries.

The public information program involves several speakers from the College who will appear before almost all the area civic and service organizations to explain the College program and show a new College motion picture film. The film, about 12 minutes long, gives up-to-date information about College activities and programs in which the students are involved. The speakers will supplement the film with data about the College.

The civic club programs started March 7 with the Maryville Kiwanis, Maryville-Alcoa Jaycees, and Knoxville Rotary Clubs. On March 9 a program was presented for the Knoxville Kiwanis Club, followed on March 10 with a program for the Knoxville Optimists.

The Knoxville Breakfast Optimists had a program March 13, and on March 14 College speakers appeared before the Maryville Optimists, Maryville Sertoma, Maryville Lions, and the Junior Chilhowee Club. On March 15 the program was presented for the Alcoa Rotary Club and on March 16 for the Alcoa Kiwanis, Maryville-Alcoa Civitans, and the Maryville Rotary Club.

The Smoky Mountain Civitans have scheduled the program for March 21, and the Maryville Business and Professional Women for March 16.

CURRICULUM

order to make them more meaningful.

In the first term of the sophomore year a course in "Fine Arts Media and Forms" will be required. This course is a sort of "package deal" — a combination of study in the fields of art, music, and drama. The focus will be not on history, but rather on the modes of expression and on the appreciation of the fine arts.

An outstanding innovation in the junior year will be the course in "Non-Western Studies," a study of the history and culture of the near and far East. The present Independent Study program, which begins in the junior year. will be kept largely intact.

Interim period

The feeling toward independent study in the new curriculum, in fact, is not only to maintain the program that we now have, but to expand and strengthen it. With this purpose in mind, the Curriculum Committee designed the four-week period in the new calendar for more individual study. In the freshman year this period would be devoted to a study of research methods and application; in the sophomore year it would be devoted to a "Sophomore Project," independent study in a field or topic of special interest; in the junior year, likewise, a "Junior Project" would be carried on (note that this will remain separate from the regular Independent Study program, which will be conducted as a part of the regular curriculum studied in the ten-week periods of the late junior and early senior years). In the senior year a seminar in the major field will be held during the four-week period; in addition, a special "Social Science Seminar" will be required of all seniors during the last two ten-week terms. This course will be designed to provide a correlation between the academic fields of the various majors and application of knowledge in the contemporary world.

It is a key purpose of the new curriculum to make the four-week interim period one of unique change-of-pace from the regular ten-week terms of study. For this reason, plans for travel during this period are being considered. Dr. Parker and Dr. Davis are already looking into the possibility for a trip through New England and the East coast; Dr. Shields is considering a science study camp in Florida; and Dr. Blair and Dr. Walker have been heard plotting, quite naturally, about a trip to England. To enhance the possibilities for making this interim period a unique and unusual educational experience, the Committee encourages students to submit ideas to the head of their department, or to Dr. Parker, who is in charge of planning the use of this four-week term.

4 years to complete program

A new approach to chapel is also hoped for under the new curriculum. There will be an effort to get away from the present system of speaker selection, and to correlate the morning devotions more closely with academic study. Plans call for a convocation in the middle of Friday morning with a religious-intellectual emphasis. A guest speaker, hopefully from the various disciplines of study, would be present each week.

Concerning schedule, classes under the new curriculum will be seventy minutes. There will probably be five periods a day ending by 3:40 in the afternoon. There will also be an evening period in the new schedule.

Registration this spring, it was pointed out, will be for the whole year, 1967-68; but fees will still be paid in two sums.

It should be noted that the proposed curriculum program will not take complete effect until next year's freshman class are seniors. The transition to this new program, in other words, will be a graduated process, which next year's freshmen will be the first to carry through in its entirety.

Fundamental in the design of this new curriculum, as stressed repeatedly by Dr. Blair and Dr. Shields, is the aim to give more responsibility to students. Another important feature of the program is its built-in flexibility. Realizing the necessity for change and constant revision, the Committee has provided on alterable curriculum plan, which should not require another complete overhaul, at least in the foreseeable future.

Discussion groups concerning the new curriculum proposals will be held next week. All students are urged to participate. Feel free at any time, furthermore, to ask Dr. Blair or Dr. Shields any questions concerning the curriculum changes.

For Scholar-Athletes

New Financial Aid Program Is Announced

A program of financial assistance to scholar-athletes beginning in 1967 was announced by Maryville President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland.

Under the program, set up with the same standards as the Honaker Memorial Scholarships, the College will provide $5,000 on an annual basis for scholar-athletes. The Honaker Club plan provides for a permanent endowment fund, with a minimum of $25,000 to be raised by the Club before this plan is activated. Once activated, $1,000 per year, representing the interest from the investment of the $25,000 in permanent funds, will be made available to scholar-athletes.

Scholarships granted under the program will go to outstanding scholar-athletes who have a 2.6 average in high school and who maintain a 2.6 average in College. In addition, recipients must have a score of at least 24 on the ACT college admissions test, or a combined score of 1050 on the tests of the College Entrance Examination Board.

Ron Pritts Enters Wrestling Tournament

Maryville College wrestler Ron Pritts, undefeated for two years in the Southeastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association, has entered the National Collegiate Athletic Association Wrestling Tournament held in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., March 10 and 11.

Pritts, son of John B. Pritts of 420 Thomas Rd., Cannonsburg, Pa., is a senior this year at Maryville. Captain of the 1966-67 Scot wrestling squad under Coach John A. Davis, Pritts wrestled last year in the 130-lb. class. This year, he has entered the 127-lb. competition.

Pritts has won one match and lost one.

Chad and Jeremy to Appear in Concert April 29

Take one Chad Stuart, add one Jeremy Clyde, blend thoughtfully with vibrant personality, tremendous wit and loads of talent; the result is the fresh and exciting sound of Chad and Jeremy. The boys make their mark with their very first release, entitled "Yesterday's Gone," followed with "A Summer Song" and "Willow Weep For Me," which immediately soared to the top of the charts. They met four years ago at drama school, started discussing music, and found their views and voices compatible. Hence, the birth of Chad and Jeremy.

Chad Stuart was born December 10, in Windemere, England. He is 5'11" and 165 pounds of charming Englishman. His elementary education was obtained at Durham Cathedral school, where at nine he learned to read and write music, and after which he attended the Sorbonne in Paris. With the completion of his formal education, Chad enrolled at the Central School of Speech and Drama, which not only brought him a profound knowledge of the arts, but a wife, Jill, also in attendance, as well.

After leaving drama school, Chad worked as a sales-man in a department store, a clerk in a record shop and finally a junior arranger with a music-publishing firm. While with the publishers, he wrote "Yesterday's Gone," but no one wanted to record it. It wasn't until he met Jeremy, and they started singing in a coffeehouse, that they were heard by a recording executive. He liked their style and had them record Chad's song.

For relaxation, Chad finds painting and sculpturing to his liking. He owns a canoe which his wife and he use whenever possible. Another pastime that

"Maryville College Days" Prepare for Future Expansion

Total contributions for "Maryville College Days" have now reached $28,189, according to Director of Development Bill A. Fleming, with further reports still to be received from workers and leaders. Maryville College Days were held March 13-17 under the leadership of the General Chairman, Dr. James Proffitt.

Reports show that in the Advanced Gifts category there is $18,125 in cash and pledges. The Honaker Club total is $4,255, Business and Professional contributions $3,640, and Alumni and friends $2,169.

Additional reports on the Maryville College Days campaign will be made as reports are completed, Mr. Fleming said.

With the major effort for Maryville College Days completed, the College is looking to the future with carefully made plans to carry through the 150th anniversary in 1969-70 and beyond.

Expansion of both facilties and the student body, is being achieved at Maryville College as part of a carefully thought-out program. While all of the details are not yet filled in, the general outlines are clear, and the enrollment and financial figures are being projected realistically.

In enrollment, the College is planning for a student body of 1,075 in 1969-70, an increase of about 200 from the present 882. In order to accommodate adequately this number of students, the Board of Directors and College administrative officials are planning a completely modern and up-to-date physical plant.

Much of the planning has already taken shape—most recently in the three new residence halls and currently in the design for a new science building for which ground is to be broken this spring or early summer. However, additional planning looks to the future for new buildings and an attractively designed campus.

The Board of Directors last fall authorized the preparation of a campus master plan to fix the sites for new buildings projected for completion by the end of the Sesquicentennial year. This master plan will include:

Alcoa Foundation Gives Grants to College

Maryville College has received an unrestricted grant of $2,400 from the Alcoa Foundation, Dr. Joseph Copeland, College president, announced recently. This is in addition to the share the College receives from the Affiliated Colleges of Tennessee, Inc., to which the Alcoa Foundation contributes each year.

The check was presented to Bill Fleming, College Development Officer, by Alcoa's Tennessee Operations Manager N. B. Lane, who represented the Foundation.

Previous grants given

The unrestricted grants will be used for the improvement of facilities and to help defray rising administrative costs, said Dr. Copeland.

The Alcoa Foundation previously granted Maryville College $100,000 to apply toward the construction of a new science building for which ground will be broken this summer.

The Foundation's program of aid to independent colleges is now in its twelfth year. During this time Maryville College has received approximately $17,000 in grants from the Alcoa Foundation.

"Independent colleges like Maryville have been of major importance in strengthening the educational program of our nation," said Mr. Lane. "They are especially influential in providing close, individual attention and developing moral and cultural concepts in the minds of young students. The Alcoa Foundation is pleased to assist in these efforts."

Scholarship grants

These grants come at a time when Maryville College needs financial assistance in meeting its everyday operational costs as well as making plans for the future, Dr. Copeland said. "We are especially grateful to Alcoa and the Alcoa Foundation for all that they have done, and are doing, to encourage the small, independent college to continue its individual efforts in the realm of education. With help from great, private foundations like this, Maryville College can continue to look to the future with new confidence to meet the increasing demands confronting us."

Maryville College has also received a grant from the Alcoa Foundation to sponsor three scholarships of $750 each for a freshman, spohomore, and junior in the College during the 1967-1968 school year.

In addition, the Foundation awarded the College an unrestricted grant of $750 to be used to help defray rising administrative costs and for the improvement of facilities, as needed.

Top students honored

The announcement was made jointly by Dr. Joseph Copeland, Maryville College president, and Tennessee Operations Manager N. B. Lane, who represented the Foundation.

The scholarships are planned to recognize one of the top five students from each of the three classes, freshman, sophomore and junior, who display scholarly

Grant Approved for New Physical Education Center

The Tennessee Higher Education Facilities Commission has approved a $490,000 Federal grant for Maryville College for construction of a new health and physical education building, it was announced 29 March in Nashville.

The grant is for the full amount sought by the College, Director of Development Bill A. Fleming said. It is about one-fourth of the projected total cost of $1,950,000.

The new building will replace all of the current physical education facilities, which include Bartlett Hall, and the frame Alumni Gymnasium and Intramural Gymnasium, plus the swimming pool. Under tentative plans already drawn, the new building will have a total area of 80,000 square feet.

It will contain a gymnasium with related rooms for offices and classrooms, smaller exercise rooms, four handball courts, and a new indoor swimming pool. The present indoor pool would be kept and converted to an outdoor pool.

Under the terms of the grant the College must begin construction of the building within two years. The remainder of the funds must come from Alumni and friends, Fleming explained.

"This new building is part of the further extension of the College's Sesquicentennial goals," Fleming said. This building and provision for a new student center are major targets before 1969-70 when the College will have a completely modern and up-to-date plant to serve the needs of a projected enrollment of 1,075 students.

"This accomplishment will result in the elimination from the campus of all the temporary frame buildings, some of which were acquired after World War II," Fleming concluded.

Summer Session Courses Announced

A course in field biology which will be taught at the Norris Lake Field Station of the Mid-Appalachia College Council has been added for the Maryville College summer term which will be held June 12 to July 21 this summer. Other offerings will include a course in reading improvement and special pre-college courses in English and mathematics designed to orient high school graduates to college study.

In addition to the pre-college courses and the field biology course, Maryville will again offer regular work at the freshman level for those who want a head start on their college careers, plus advanced courses in a number of the major academic disciplines which will be of special benefit to advanced students and public school teachers.

Orientation Program

The special pre-college courses are Orientation to College Study and College Preparatory Mathe-

1. Beautification of the Washington Avenue entrance to the campus to make it the main entrance. This work is to be done after the new science building is built, and it is contemplated that the present roads and entrance on Washington Avenue will be moved and rebuilt to make a more attractive main entrance.

2. A new physical education complex whcih would replace the present Bartlett Hall, Swimming Pool, and Alumni Gymnasium with one building to house all the physical education facilities.

3. Remodeling Fayerweather Hall for a Student Center or building a new Student Center.

To pay for these projects, $2,280,000 has been projected for spending on capital improvement on the campus during the next four years, with the money to come through the Maryville College Sesquicentennial Development Program. The goals of the program were recently extended $5,000,000, supplementing $7,000,000 already received or committed in the first six years of this decade and making a new total of $12,000,000 in ten years.

In addition to the funds for capital improvements, projected financial objectives include $749,500 which is to be sought in gifts, $400,000 for endowment, $162,800 in new income from endowment, and $1,212,700 which is anticipated revenue from student fees.

These funds will be used to maintain the high academic quality of the faculty, provide increased student aid, and meeting the current operating budgets.

matics. The course in reading improvement may be taken by anyone who wants to improve his reading speed and comprehension. These courses, plus a class lesson in piano which is to be offered, carry no college credit. The courses may be taken separately or in any combination, although it is recommended that all three be taken as a unit for a thorough grounding in basic subject matter and study skills.

The Orientation to College Study is a course designed especially to teach the student how to study in college. Emphasis will be on preparation in English grammar and composition, use of the library, and organization of study for the most effective use of time and effort.

Courses listed

Preparatory Mathematics includes the study of algebra, geometry, and trigonometry. Study methods for mathematical subjects will be emphasized, and for students who lack an entrance requirement in mathematics this course will be accepted for the Maryville College entrance requirements.

Freshman and advanced courses include offerings in Art, Bible, Biology, Economics, Education, English, Health, History, Mathematics Music, Natural Science, Psychology, Sociology, and Speech.

Students may take seven semester hours, and courses will meet for five 75-minute periods a week, with additional laboratory time for the science courses. Private music lessons will meet for two 35-minute lessons a week, and the Reading Improvement course will meet for two 2-hour periods a week for five weeks.

Further information about the summer term may be obtained from the Maryville College Director of Admissions on the campus.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

The following letter is another parody on frogs. Any resemblance to the Sig skit "Mudville College" is purely intentional, although I sincerely hope that this interpretation will be in much better taste and will not smack of odious travesty (or in other words-stink) as certain parts of the skit presented on last Saturday night did. I am fully aware that most of the Sigs who were not in the skit and some who were in it had nothing to do with the grossly obnoxious parts and, perhaps, even objected to them. Nonetheless, it still reeked.

Once upon a time there was a little liberal arts frog pond that had all types of frogs in it. Like all other frog ponds, this pond at times verged on stagnation, and all the little and big frogs would begin to croak when they got unhappy. Some of the frogs would try to solve the stagnation problem by unstopping clogged drains, by looking for new courses of food, and by cleaning up the dead leaves and twigs that were in the pond. But there was always a group of frogs who just sat around and croaked constantly. They never tried to find out why the pool was beginning to stink and how they could help stop the stagnation; they just sat on their royal haunches, croaking and bellowing. Why they wouldn't even find their own food! They'd just wait until the other frogs came back with flies and bugs and steal from them. Sometimes they were able to find a big bull frog who would help them find easy ways to catch food.

Then one day the keeper of the frog pond discovered what the "croakers" were doing, realized that they weren't contributing anything to the pond, or keeping up with the standards that had been set for all the frogs and decided to clean them out of the frog pond. Finally, the keeper of the pond realized that the laziest chronic-croakers (frogiest frogs) were the source of the stench.

Reflection on Viet Nam

Why should you worry or give a damn
About what happens in Viet Nam?
Why is it any of your concern
If men and women and children burn?
Only a pacifist, saint or fool
Believes in stuff like the Golden Rule . . .
You know the answer — you know it well —
"This is a war and war is hell!"

Yes, war is hell for the men that fight,
Pawns on a chessboard, brown and white:
War is death in a sea of mud
To the sound of bullets and stench of blood:
War is madness told as the truth,
Torturing women and crippling youth . . .
But you know the answer — you know it well —
"This is a war and war is hell!"

Try to project what your thoughts would be
If you left your home as a refugee:
Try to imagine the sense of fear
When the napalm scatters and flames appear . . .
What kind of feelings would it inspire
If you watched a child with its flesh on fire?
Could you find words for the pilots above
Who boast about morals and Christian love?

War is a gamble played with Fate
Where the stakes are high and the hour is late:
War is the writing seen on the wall
Which threatens to come and engulf us all . . .
It's time to worry and time to care,
It's time to pity and time to share;
It's time to consider the Human Race
And see ourselves in the other man's place.

The Freshmen Niche

by The Publicity Committee

The final sprint of our freshman year will be celebrated with several extravaganzas sponsored by Your Class.

The first of these, of course, is the triple-feature night of April 22. "Unicorn in the Garden," a short feature of a whimsical vein, will introduce our program. Leaping onto the schedule at eight-thirty, the true Wizard of Escape Ron Kolb exhibits his artistry again in a rarely-seen duel with danger. Your Class is grateful for the opportunity to present such an incredible talent to an appreciative audience.

Artistry of another sort will follow in that evening's movie feature, "Under the Yum-Yum Tree." Planned admission is seventy-five cents, fifty cents for dues-paying freshmen. Remember, you must possess an official verification of your dues status.

Response to this first venture will in part determine frosh adventures to follow. A mountain outing is planned, and on-campus action is in the offing.

If you have not received your dues verification, check soon with Treasurer Dick Mara or your representatives for the reason.

Then, stung by lightning, large rain

and slunk into sewers.
Dawn caught the sky's fresh mirror,
smiled, and was.

gives Chad pleasure is walking in the rain with his wife and his dog, Mr. McGregor. Chad is a musician in the true sense of the word. He plays piano, organ, guitar, lute, mandolin, harmonica, violin, trumpet and the flute. Sailing, tennis and ice skating take care of his outside activities.

Jeremy Clyde was born on March 22 in Buckinghamshire, England. His modesty often hides the fact that he is the grandson of the Duke of Wellington. Jeremy is a six-footer weighing 140 pounds. According to Jeremy, his eyes are blue and beautiful — according to all that know him, he is polished, talented and has a sharp sense of humor.

Jeremy received his elementary education at Ludgrove Preparatory School and Eton. He continued at the University of Grenoble in France. After graduating from Grenoble he too enrolled at the Central School of Speech and Drama. Upon leaving Central, Jeremy went to work as an actor. He appeared in such productions as "Hamlet," "The Miser," "A Man for All Seasons" and "Roots" in the Regents Park and Dundee Theatres.

Jeremy dislikes getting up early in the morning, but he very much likes girls and clothing and girls, and girls, and girls, and an occasional motion picture — if there are girls in it. He is an avid reader preferring the works of Ray Bradbury and William Shakespeare. He also likes riding, tennis and swimming.

Chad and Jeremy enjoy their work and doubly enjoy working together. They both feel very strongly about their careers and are not afraid to add those extra hours of rehearsal. This, however, is apparent from the moment they begin to perform.

Final Program in Artist Series Will Feature Princeton Chamber Orchestra

The Princeton Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Nicholas Harsanyi will present the final program in the Maryville College-Community Artists Series Friday, April 14, at 8:15 p.m. in the Chapel. Janice Harsanyi, who has previously sung at Maryville College, will sing several selections with the orchestra.

Acclaimed as one of the finest orchestras of its kind by leading musicians, the press, and the public, the orchestra will demonstrate the qualities that have carried this brilliant addition to America's roster of great orchestras to its position of eminence.

The players are hand-picked instrumentalists, many of them soloists in their own right. They have played as members of leading symphony orchestras and chamber music ensembles.

The orchestra plays a wide repertoire of music drawn from all eras, under the direction of its Hungarian-born conductor. The program at Maryville College includes Vivaldi's "Concerto in A Major for String Orchestra," and ten of Benjamin Britten's selections called "Les Illuminations." Dvorak's "Serenade for Strings, Opus 22," will close the program.

Miss Harsanyi, was soloist at Maryville College with the Maryville College Choir in March, 1963, when she was serving as Visiting Lecturer in Music at Princeton Theological Seminary. A champion of modern music, she will sing the Britten selections with the orchestra. Miss Harsanyi has premiered many works by American composers, including Roger Sessions, George Rochberg, Alan Stout, and Rober Suderberg.

Padgett Honored As Scoring Leader

Maryville College's leading basketball scorer, former Alcoa High student Bill Padgett, has received Honorable Mention in the selection of the National Collegiate Athletic Association Small College All-American Team. Padgett has averaged 26.9 points per game and placed second on the team in rebounds with 7 per game.

Padgett's high point for the year was 44 points in the game against Milligan which the Scots won in overtime 79-78. He was shelected for the All-Tournament team in the Suncoast Classic tournament in Florida, where the Scots finished second.

This year, the Scots finished with a 6-17 record. Padgett led all scorers, and Jon Hancher led the rebounders with an average of 7.9 per game. Phil Bettis finished up second in scoring with a 10.6 average, and Captain Jack Llewellyn was third with a 10.2 average.

Baseballers Bounce Back: Tennis Team Tumbles Twice

The baseball team, with a 28 game schedule, played 3 games before the spring vacation, losing the first two and then coming from behind to win the third. Anderson College, whose baseball coach is the former Dodger great Carl Erskine, put down the Scots by a score of 9-3. Jim Moore was the losing pitcher. In the second game, Toledo came on strong in the last innings and beat the Scots and Jim Backus 9-5. The Scots were able to put down Hillsdale 9-4 despite a three run first inning by the visitors. Jim Moore, showing good control on the mound, won his own game with 5 RBI's on a triple and a single.

The team shows more talent than last year's winning team. John Agnew at first is an excellent defensive player, His batting has been sparodic but he has gotten some key hits, especially in the Toledo game. Backing him up is Macy, a freshman who shows great ability and adds depth to the infield. At second, Dave Maxwell got off to a slow start but has been improving with every game. At short is Don Payne. Also a slow starter, he showed good form in the Hillsdale game as his fielding improved and his batting became more consistant. At third Bob Nicholas, one of last year's leading batters, seems destined to repeat with another good year at the plate. He is a "lucky" fielder who always seems to come up with the play.

The outfield is loaded with talent. Junior Maietta is in left. The "Maury Wills" of the Scots is proving to be once again a terror both on the base paths and in the field. In center field one of the three seniors on the team, Wiley Webb, is the best fielder on the Maryville team. Outstanding defensively, his batting is also more than adequate. In right field is the brightest light of the new players. Lynn Dildine is, at the present time, the leading batter on the team, filling the void left by Sonny Hughes.

Pitching is probably the Scots strongest position. Displaying much more depth than last year's team, the Maryville pitching should win many of the close games. Jim Backus, the leading right-hander is a good pitcher with excellent control. With a few of the breaks going his way he should have better luck next time out. The leading left-hander is none other than Jack "Crook" Llewellyn. The second of the three seniors is a most deceptive pitcher with three speeds: a slow ball, a slower ball, and an even slower ball. To back these three speeds up, Jack has the best control on the team. To complement him, right-handed Jim Moore displays the same control and deception. His record already stands at 1-1, and he was scheduled to start the LMU game last Thursday. In the role of relief pitching, Maryville's Fireball VanLeuven is without equal. With good speed and a very good curve ball, Van Leuven has looked very impressive in his relief jobs, not having given up a hit as of yet.

Behind the plate the Scots once again are loaded with talent. Frank Gready, the third of the seniors, has filled very adequately the spot vacated by Sonny Hughes. He is the better of the two catchers defensively, but his hitting could improve. On the base paths he displays unusually good speed for a catcher. Backing him up is Freshman Dwight Regan who has looked especially goood at the bat. He is an excellent prospect who should see plenty of action this year.

The Tennis team, in what could be termed a rebuilding year, faced two opponents before the spring holidays and fell to both by a score of 8-1. Their first opponent was Ohio Wesleyan, and Maryville's only victory was recorded by Al Marshall. In the match against Mars Hill, the only victory was scored by the first doubles team of Pete Park and Al Marshall. The team is made up of new players built around the veteran core of Park and Marshall. In the number one position is Peter Park, followed by Marshall in the second spot. Third position is filled by Becky Sankner, who saw limited action last year. Number four man is Gary Dauron. Hugh Robinson is the number five man and another female member, Penny Blackwood rounds out the rest of the team. In the doubles positions, Park and Marshall are the first team, Sanckner and Robinson are the second team with Dauron and Blackwood in the third spot. The make-up of the last two doubles teams will change, it has been reported, as Coach Kardatzke is still experimening to find a winning combination.

Highlander Band Tours Ohio

The Maryville College Highlander Band under the direction of Jonathan Gresham, is now on its annual spring tour in Ohio after opening with a concert in the Everett High School at Maryville April 27.

The 66 members of the touring band left Maryville April 30 for scheduled appearances in the Cincinnati and southern Ohio area. The program will be played for the band's Spring Concert on the campus May 20. On the tour, the band is appearing in their colorful Scots uniforms, with the women wearing imported kilts and the men in the uniform of the Royal Scots Guards.

The band includes four pipers who play the original bagpipe music which adds to the Scots tradition of the Maryville band.

Maryville College Speakers Bring Home Trophies

At the Tennessee Valley Invitational Tournament held last Saturday, April 15, on the Tusculum College Campus, the Maryville College Forensic squad captured 2 first place trophies, 1 second, and 1 third, as well as a speaker award in Debate and a special Novice Debate trophy.

In the Oral Interpretation contest, Stevan Horning placed first with his reading of Gregory Corso's "Marriage." In the After Dinner Speaking contest, Penny Proffitt placed first with her humorous speech, "The Great Society." Placing third in Oratory was Alice Barton, with "We Just Don't Care Enough." All of these were performed before a large audience, following previous contests to select the finalists. Also giving an impressive performance in the finals of the Oratory division was Wayne Patterson, whose speech "Gun Crazy," was rated fourth following Miss Barton.

Facing very stiff competition in the Extemporaneous Speaking Division finals, Ray Phillippi brought home the 2nd place trophy and a Superior rating for his speech on "Stokley Carmichael." In this division, the topic is drawn by the contestant 30 minutes before the scheduled time to speak. In the Impromptu division, where the topic is drawn immediately before speaking, Sandra Graham won her preliminary round, but lost out in the finals.

Other members of the squad who made the trip were Fred Abramoff, and Bill Cox, who participated in individual events but were unable to debate be-

In a special chapel service this morning, the 1967 Chilhowean staff paid tribute to Dean Frank D. McClelland for his 30 years of outstanding service to Maryville College. It has been the policy at Maryville to dedicate the yearbook only on those rare occasions when the staff agrees upon one whose role in the life of the College makes him an inevitable choice. After a long period without a dedication, two have come in consecutive years. The 1966 Chilhowean was dedicated to Dr. E. R. Hunter.

Dr. McClelland came to Maryville in 1937 after serving as president of Pikeville College in Kentucky. At Maryville he served as dean of students with an interruption for duty during World War II. In a reorganization in 1957 he was promoted to the academic deanship, a post that he has filled with distinction. His strong leadership has been particularly evident in the planning and implementation of the new curriculum.

Meta Robinson, editor of the Chilhowean, made the presentation and read from the final paragraph of the dedication: "Although he has received many honors during his lifetime, including a citation for gallantry in action during World War I, we feel it fitting to add one more, which might also be called a citation for gallantry in action—this time on the academic front. To Dr. Frank D. McClelland, whose wisdom has guided us, whose faith has given us courage, and whose sincerity has made us believe in him—and in ourselves, we dedicate the 1967 Chilhowean."

Also honored during the chapel program were Marilyn Rankin and John Mulholland, chosen by the staff for the coveted awards of Woman and Man of the Year. Merry Burlingham, business manager of the Chilhowean, made the announcement and presented them with complimentary copies of the yearbook.

Gayle Walker, honors editor of the Chilhowean, led the worship service.

Commencement Will Include Groundbreaking for Science Building

Ground will be broken for the new Maryville College Sutton Science Center during Commencement week this spring, President Joseph J. Copeland has announced. Federal, state, and local officials will be on hand for the ceremony at 11 a.m. May 29, to be followed by a luncheon in the College Dining Room.

The speaker for the occasion will be Dr. John T. Wilson, Deputy Director of the National Science Foundation. Also invited for the ceremony and the luncheon is Dr. George Roberts, Executive Director of the Tennessee Higher Education Facilities Commission and an Alumnus of the College.

Special guests will be Algie Sutton of Greenville, S. C., for whom the new building will be named and whose generosity largely made it possible; and local city, county, business, and church officials. Members of the Isaac Anderson Society, who will meet after the groundbreaking, will be especially honored.

gift's for center

The Sutton Science Center is to be built across the Circle Drive from the Fine Arts Center, and beside Baldwin Hall. Its construction has been looked forward to since June, 1959, when President Ralph W. Lloyd announced that new science facilities were the next major item in the College's building program.

The first major gift for the new building was a $100,000 grant from the ALCOA Foundation. The Kresge Foundation and others also provided significant early contributions.

Then, in the fall of 1963, the Maryville College Development Fund was announced with a total goal of $920,000 of which $625,000 was to be used for a new science building and an additional $70,000 for the re-

New Curriculum To Be Studied Further

The U. S. Office of Education last week announced a grant of $79,500 to Maryville College under the Higher Eduaction Act of 1965 to aid the College in a program to put into effect the College's new curriculum and to provide for further study by members of the faculty.

The University of Tennessee will be a cooperating institution with Maryville in the program. The new Maryville curriculum and calendar, the result of a year's intensive study, was announced last March 17, and will go into effect with the opening of the College in the fall.

While Maryville had applied for specific amounts for several programs, the announcement in Washington recently did not spell out the details of the grant. However, major parts of the program will be in cooperation with the U-T Learning and Resources Center.

The Maryville curriculum and calendar, already largely established in its general outlines, would have been implemented without the Federal grant. However, the grant will make it easier, and allow the College to advance more rapidly in the new plan, President Joseph J. Copeland said.

Dr. Harter Named Province Governor of Music Fraternity

Dr. Harry H. Harter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at Maryville College, is the Governor of Province 35 of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia Fraternity of America. The new province was formed recently in the national organization of college men interested in careers in music. It was formed by a division of Province 15 headed by Lucien P. Start of the George Peabody College in Nashville. Boundaries of the new unit have not yet been determined.

Harry R. Wilson of the Department of Music, Columbia University Teachers College, is national president.

Dr. Harter is one of 14 governors named recently. The new governors have planned a meeting in late June to work on further plans for the national program of the fraternity.

EDITORIAL OUTLOOK

Integrity, according to Webster, is "adherence to a code of moral, artistic, or other values." It is a term seldom used in this age of utility, an intangible quality which is vocally adhered to much more often than it is used as an absolute guide. It is an ultimate too often ignored, or, worse, deemed passe. It is, nevertheless, a quality which can command from the honest no less than the utmost in admiration and respect.

The Chilhowean has chosen, wisely, to dedicate this year's book to a man who is without question deserving of such a tribute. Dean Frank McClelland, about to retire from a career of complete devotion to the improvement of this college, is a rare sort of person whose entire existence is openly dedicated to absolute integrity. His every action is the result of a careful analysis of its possible results. He is always honest, often painfully, in his relationships with all with whom he has contact. He makes his position clear, always as a gentleman, with complete sincerity. He demands an honest analysis of every issue. His decisions are based on an absolutely honest evaluation of what seems to be the best course for the community and the individual.

His successor will inherit a standard of integrity which will demand dedicated effort to uphold. Maryville is losing a strong man whose adult life has been spent in total commitment to the very highest level of personal and community integrity. The Echo joins the Chilhowean and the rest of the college in thanking Dean McClelland for his efforts and wishing him a most satisfying retirement. His integrity should be imitated; it is not likely to be matched.

—Doug Gamble

One of the most cherished rights of the academic community is that of free speech. Without it the college experience becomes a mere indoctrination period during which time young people are ingested, imprinted, and spat out bearing the stamp of some authoritarian regime. In order to prevent the intellectual impoverishment of its students, a college must jealously guard the right of any person to take any stand on an intellectual issue. The Maryville catalogue states, "The campus community is an association of faculty and students whose primary purpose is to strive for academic excellence and personal growth in the light of the Christian faith and motive." This community is composed of people of very divergent backgrounds and intellectual persuasions, and it is certain that the paths they follow and the beliefs they profess will of necessity be varied. It is the responsibility of the college community as a whole to maintain an atmosphere of free thought and expression.

Recent events on this campus have brought to focus the fact that such an atmosphere cannot be assured without conscious effort. Each of us at all times must extend to others the right to hold and expound beliefs which may be repugnant to us personally. Jefferson said, "Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." It is when discussion gives way to repression that freedom dies.

The furor over the Klan meeting and subsequent campus reaction to certain of the events of the past weekend can prove valuable if every member of this academic community is forced to begin to think of the consequences of his actions. Even the uglier aspects of this occurrence can be meaningful if they serve to underscore the need for consideration of the place of the freedom of speech at Maryville. The ramifications of intolerence go far deeper than the sudden emotional confrontation of two differing sociopolitical viewpoints. It is time for us to examine the question of academic freedom and its effect upon the entire college program.

Is the student who regurgitates the prof's lectures on a test although he may have differing opinions fulfilling his responsibility to the college and himself? Certainly he is taking the most expedient way, for in order to disagree he would have to construct creatively his own web of proof rather than rely on one dictated to him. On the other hand, is the prof who expects such parroting denying in a very subtle way the student's right of expression? It is quite clear that academic freedom conveys more than a privilege, it also lays upon each of us the obligation to refuse to accept any thesis at face value. Rather, we must evaluate every proported "truth," carefully examining it before we make it a part of that framework of belief which governs our lives.

We must be ever mindful that no one man has a corner on truth. Our carefully reasoned philosophies must never become so rigid that we cannot allow another person to express his own theories. A college is grounded upon communication between scholars, and if these channels of communication ever break down so that intolerence prevents the free dissemination of views, then it is time to realize that we are no longer a college, but have become a propaganda mill for some pressure group.

Several years ago the North Carolina Legislature passed a gag bill prohibiting both known communists and also anyone who had ever taken the fifth amendment from speaking on a state university campus. Today, he Tennessee legislature continues its nineteenth century debate on the ridiculous "monkey law." Fifteen years ago our country was in the grip of McCarthyism, which saw communists hidden in every ivory tower of academia. Today many people look to demagogues of one stripe or another as an effective means of restoring order and quelling dissent. If we as students, faculty, or administrators give in to this mania, we shall be betraying our heritage and helping to extinguish the flame of academic freedom and integrity.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

As you are no doubt aware, Congress in now debating legislation to extend the military draft for another four years.

In years past extension of the draft was considered a minor and routine matter. This year, however, a great deal of national interest has been aroused. For the first time since 1951 the underlying facts and principles of the present draft system are being examined very carefully by Congress, in large measure as a response to the widespread interest and concern expressed by the young people of America.

My own personal view is that a number of powerful arguments lead to the inescapable conclusion that the time has come to make a firm decision to end the draft. In the hope that your readers might be interested in the reasoning which leads me to this conclusion, and in some of the proposals I intend to make along this line when this legislation is before the Senate, I am enclosing a brief article which you are welcome to use as a guest column or as a letter to the editor.

The time has come to end the military draft.

That bald declaration will startle many. But when all the facts are in, and all the current and projected needs for military manpower have been taken into account, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that America does not need the draft, America can afford not to have the draft, and America is overdue in bringing to an end this drastic invasion of the lives and liberties of her young men.

Congress is now beginning to debate President Johnson's legislation to extend the draft another four years. In years past Congressional examination of this issue was perfunctory. This year things are different.

Thanks no doubt to the heightened awareness of America's young people, whose lives the draft so seriously affects, many in Congress are now for the first time rethinking the premises upon which the draft is supposedly based. An increasing number of them are finding it sadly out of step with both our Nation's traditions and with its military manpower needs.

We must never allow ourselves to forget that however pressing the circumstances, the draft is involuntary servitude. It is legitimate and constitutional when Congress, exercising its power to raise and support armies, has no reasonable alternative. But conscription must always be the last desperate resort for meeting military manpower needs, not the cheap and easy expedient.

The only real argument for having an involuntary draft is that the Nation could not reasonably afford to raise and retain the needed military manpower without it. I maintain that the Nation can afford to eliminate the draft. In doing so we will restore lost liberties. We can end once and for all the inherent inequities of a compulsory system. We can upgrade our armed forces and increase our national security. And we can do it at a price this rich and powerful Nation can easily afford.

There is no numerical shortage of manpower for filling military ranks. Each year nearly four times as many men as the military needs enter the draft age pool. With more realistic service qualifications and sharply increased wages and fringe benefits, and with an enhanced status for military careers, we can attract the 500,000 men we need each year, even at Viet Nam buildup level.

All we have to do is to make up our minds that we are going to stop exchanging precious liberties for false economy — false because, when the total economic costs of the draft system are taken into account, including civilian wages foregone by draftees, we may well be saving nothing at all. And this calculation fails to take into account the qualitative value of skilled career specialists serving in crucial military positions now filled by reluctant draftees.

From the standpoint of individual liberty, equity to all, the enhancement of national security, and the total economic costs, the draft fares badly in comparison with an all-volunteer armed forces system.

How do we get from the present draft to the volunteer army?

First, we must unequivocally reaffirm our commitment to the goal of voluntary armed forces. The draft should be extended for one or at the most two years. During that time the Defense Department should embark on a program designed to make the draft increasingly unnecessary. A special joint committee of Congress — independent of the Defense Department and the Selective Service System — should be set up to make recommendations for a phasing out of the draft, and to maintain a continual review of the Defense Department's progress toward that goal. And military pay and fringe benefits should be raised substantially, starting now.

It is time we made the firm decision to put an end to inequity, put an end to uncertainty, put an end to inefficiency, and regain for our young people the liberties the draft has taken from them.

—Mark Hatfield
U. S. Senator (R-Oregon)

Dear Editor:

"The peace hopes that flickered briefly a few months ago have gone glimmering, and the first U. S. strikes against targets in Haiphong almost certainy signal a general escalation of the war at every level."

A typical quote from one of "the important magazines" in the library (one of those which rates a plastic cover and therefore the endorsement of America). No sir, no criticism of the war in one of those magazines—for they represent America. And besides, it's not U.S. policy that is prolonging the war effort, it is the voice of dissent in our country — Westmoreland just told us so. And the jet-set has told us so (between scenes of the Johnny Carson Show). And the older generation has told us so, while bribing us to believe them on the hope of being left a materialistic utopia in their will.

"In a New York Times monotone
A bony asian crone bends
Like a willow above her child.
Both weep. The child's mouth and nose
Are smeared. G.I. chocolate?
It won't wipe. The nose is gone.
Napalm."

We are living in Goldman's "Chapter Two"; we are the liberal's son. So let us throw off "aristocratic values." Let us throw off bombs and admit that the United States would never send 438,000 young Americans 10,000 miles to defend the rights and fight for the love of nonwhite men. Let us stand up for the brotherhood of man and spread the true values of America where freedom and equality, not to mention justice, are supreme, but let us do it in a manner which portrays those principles. For if we do not—the Yankees will finish a second-division club again this year.

habilitation of Fayerweather Science Hall.

Fayerweather uncertain

In the summer of 1964, during the Development Fund Campaign, Mr. Sutton pledged $500,000 on a matching basis with the Alumni, and his pledge enabled the College to proceed with professional counseling and design. The firm of Taylor, Lieberfeld, and Heldman, Inc., was employed to survey past practice and future needs in the sciences, and the architectural firm of Barber & McMurry of Knoxville was employed to provide the design and specifications.

Part of the recommendation of Taylor, Lieberfeld, and Heldman, after they projected future needs for Maryville, was that plans for the renovation of Fayerwether for science be abandoned, and a completely new science building built. This recommendation is being followed in the Sutton Science Center, which will house facilities for all the natural sciences. The future use of Fayerweather Hall is now under study by the Board of Directors.

Research areas

With the successful completion of the Development Fund ir February, 1965, construction of the new building was assured, and in March, 1966, further financial help came from the Federal Government with a $355,000 grant under the Higher Education Facilities Act. The cost of the new building had by this time risen to $1,250,000.

Housing complete facilities for chemistry, biology, psychology, and mathematics and physics, the new building is designed around a teaching concept in keeping with the new Maryville College curriculum. It utilizes modular units in which there is a central service core with laboratories and classrooms around the outside walls.

Because of the design in segments, all of the main area partitions can be moved to change the size and shape of various areas as teaching programs and needs change. The two-story building will have about 47,000 square feet of floor space.

Research areas for both beginning and advanced work are provided with carrels, and part of the new program will be to do away with scheduled laboratory periods so that the student can work on his own project whenever he has free time. Psychology and biology departments will be on the first floor, with physics and chemistry above.

Still planned for the future is a lecture hall designed with the building. A final feature will be a round greenhouse at the rear.

"Meet the People" Presented in the Chapel

"Meet the People," a musical revue with popular songs by the Maryville College Women's Chorus and Men's Glee Club, was presented in the Chapel at 8:15 p.m. last Friday evening.

The combined Chorus and Glee Club was directed by Dr. Harry H. Harter. Opening with "Meet the People," with the mixed chorus accompanied by Linda Taylor and Areerat Hongspan at the piano. The rousing "Up With People," made popular by the American sing-out groups, followed.

The Women's Chorus sang the popular "I Could Have Danced All Night" from "My Fair Lady," followed by the equally popular "Hello, Young Lovers" from "The King and I."

"More," the theme from "Mondo Cane," was then sung by the men, and then followed by ever-popular "Girl of My Dreams."

The Women's Chorus sang "Softly, As I Leave You," and the mixed chorus joined to sing "Moon River." The full chorus also sang "Anthem for Spring" from the "Cavalleria Resticana."

The program concluded with the full chorus singing "One World" with Carol Pusey at the Lambert Memorial Organ and Linda Taylor at the piano.

The narrator for the program was David Nighbert.

The Freshmen Niche

by The Publicity Committee

Report: Frosh Flick Night, 8:10 p.m. on April 22. Our show itself was a brilliant success. We must add, though, the following editorial statement:

Some predicted with sagely wisdom that, while the fare offered was of superlative quality, reflection of that quality in terms of an enrichment of our Treasury should not be expected. Indeed, we made no profit on our show. We are not startled by the dashing of our hopes, however; that was bound to happen. Certain parties failed to notify the Frosh Heirarchy of attractive displays scheduled simultaneously with the Freshman Class extravaganza, and it takes no keen insight to sense a hint of rivalry. We understand the mystique off-campus antics conjure, but indulging in such novelties is not to be tolerated. We insist, therefore, that off-campus organizations sponsoring displays simultaneous with Frosh projects secure our written permission. After all, loyal Scots pursuing genuine enjoyment were rewarded in full by our well-planned entertainment, and their pleasure should not be compromised by temptations of folly.

Since our Treasury is still solvent, plans are to go ahead with a suitable project in which all loyal Freshmen may take part. Get in touch with your representatives and committeemen to give them any suggestions you might have.

Nominations for class officers (President, Vice-President, and Secretary-Treasurer) are open. To make a nomination, simply present the name of your nominee (or your entire slate of candidates) to Steve Horning or John Wolfe as soon as possible. The same procedure will be followed in the election of Council Representatives.

Education in America Topic of Forum

"I am not optimistic about our achievements in education," Dr. James D. Koerner, critic of American education, told an audience of about 150 at the sixth of a series of public forums at Maryville College last Sunday afternoon. We are "in a fog" in education, Dr. Koerner said, because we have no way to evaluate the results.

Dr. Kierner, Former Executive Director and President of the Council for Basic Education, was joined on the Maryville platform by Dr. Douglas G. Trout, President of Tusculum College, and Dr. Herman E. Spivey, Academic Vice President of the University of Tennessee and a member of the Maryville College Board of Directors.

The panelists, who examined the topic "The Present State of American Education" were introduced by Dr. Arthur D. Ainsworth, Chairman of the Department of Political Science at Maryville and coordinator for the series of lectures and public forums.

educational costs

Dr. Koerner opened the discussion by telling the audience that about one-fourth of the United States population today is students, and that if all the people in the country who are involved in education are counted about 30 per cent of the population is working at the business of education. He said that four of 10 of those just out of high school are now in college, but that less than half of these eventually achieve a degree.

"All of this costs us about $50 billion per year, which is 7 per cent of our Gross National Product and is far more than any other nation on earth is spending for education," Dr. Koerner said. "Quanititatively considered, we're not doing badly, but there are those who still want more."

American attitudes

After telling the audience he had been away from America for the past two years studying in Europe, Dr. Koerner listed five major changes in attitude he said he has observed in the United States toward education. They are:

1. The changing role of the Federal Government, including the Congress, the Supreme Court, and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. "The way the money is doled out affects policy," he said in citing the centralization of authority and the dramatic increase in legislation affecting education.
2. Equalization of resources. "We have had a tradition of local control of education, and expenditures have varied considerably. People are talking about greater equalization which requires central authority."
3. The Civil Rights movement. The idea of compensatory education— that students from deprived areas should get more benefits to "make up" to them the lack of resources is gaining ground, Dr. Koerner said.
4. The attitude towards independent and private schools, in which he said there is a shift towards more private schools which are competing increasingly with public schools.
5. The change in approach to the doctrine of separation of church and state, which is allowing increasing public support for church schools.

three issues

Other forces at work in changing American education Dr. Koerner listed as new technology, curriculum reform groups, student activism, research, foundations, and the press.

Dr. Koerner concluded by saying that "We don't know what we are getting for our $50 billion."

Dr. Trout, who said he would be a spokesman for higher education in small liberal arts colleges, said that "change is the only constant" in American higher education. He listed three fundamental issues facing American education:

1. Education, he said, is no longer a question of finding the answers but of asking the right questions. "What is the nature of the questions we should be asking?" he asked.
2. The orientation of education is being shifted from the private good to the public good.
3. The idea that education is a terminal process which ends with a degree is passing from the scene, and the goal is to keep on learning throughout life.

Government's role

Dr. Spivey pointed out that the Federal Government in education is "not only here to stay, but here to grow, and this can be a blessing rather than a curse." Federal help does not have to result in control, Dr. Spivey said. He added that "We may have committed ourselves to an aim we cannot live up to—more and more people think we ought to make post high school education available to all within 30 miles of where they reside.

"I am sad," he added, "That so far as resources go we don't yet realize what it takes to live up to a commitment of this kind."

Educaion is being challenged as never before, Dr. Spivey said, by students, researchers, educators, and faculty members "in that order," and citizens are waking up to the fact that life-long education is a necessity.

"History" on final forum

The discussion among members of the panel which followed their presentations largely centered around the problems of church-related colleges and contemporary theological issues, including the "God is Dead" controversy.

The final program in the series, sponsored under a grant from the Lilly Endowment, will be held May 7 when Dr. Robert E. Brown, Professor of History at Michigan State University, will be a member of the panel on the question "Is History the Bunk?"

Mr. Doscher

Doscher Will Present Senior Recital

A Senior Recital will be presented by Charles Doscher on Friday, the fifth of May a 8:15 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Mr. Doscher is a Senior Organ major and a member of the Maryville College Choir. After his graduation he plans to attend Pittsburgh Theological Seminary where he will be a candidate for the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

On the program will be numbers representing the full range of the organ repetoire. Included will be the Canzon duodecimi toni of Giovanni Gabrieli, which will be performed with the Maryville College Brass Ensemble, Voluntary in C Major of Henry Purcell, Prelude and Fugue in A Minor of J. Want to do something, but what? What can I, puny-uncertain-confused-AlAverage do?

Then I heard about the Silent Peace Vigil. The idea was to stand there (there being the Post office in Durham, N. C.), just stand there, in a quietly eloquent statement of a desire for peace.

Why a silent vigil? Man, only silence could embrace the many viewpoints supporting the vigil. Was not an attempt to dictate foreign policy. Merely to express publicly our concern and try to get people thinking. For some a desired purge—bloody hands can't ever be cleaned by inaction.

Noontime and hot. We gathered. I was late, looked over assembled group. Two University radicals-in residence (the beards) meticulously grubby. Several Joan Baez types with long straight hair and figures to match. Some mini-skirted teenie-boopers (but no music to watch girl protesters by). A smattering of pre-gods and post-gods to represent the Christian community. Professors (yes students, even your ivory-towered teachers can take a stand) several of whom organized the vigil. One held a sign SILENT VIGIL FOR PEACE IN VIET NAM. The rest of the line was filled in by Joe Colleges—consciously or not standing in the middle and avoiding the right or left extremes. And me.

Cars go by. Laughs. Jeers. Teenagers flash obscene gestures. Cars with families pass. Children stare, wives smile, husbands snarl. A stream of Detroit-encased hostility. This is easy to take. Ridicule from a distance too abstract to make me uncomfortable. Even the seemingly interminable wait at a red light does not offer them much time for mockery.

A car pulls up. Man gets out. Balding and potbellied. Reads sign. Says, "I just got out of the service after thirty years. You stink." Maybe peace is anti-American. Looks at me and people next to me. We look back. "Commie bastards!" Tobacco juice splashes on tennis shoe. A martyr?

After a while someone comes out of the Post office. Either a J. Edgar or a Bobby Sheldon (but, after all, is there really a difference?). Greased hair, business suit, and Hush Puppies. Face slashed by a sardonic grin. Starts taking pictures of us. First I envision my debut on cover of Time, then realize Post office bulletin board or FBI files more likely and start sweating. One of us steps out of line and starts taking picture of the J. Edgar taking picture of us. The J. Edgar stops and then takes pictures of guy taking pictures of the J. Edgar taking pictures. The ludicrousness of this seems to strike only me. I giggle. Finally the J. Edgar goes across street and enters that American political hotbed, the barbershop.

Little old ladies pass us and twitter. Car horns blow. Spectators look like they expect to see hairy Bolsheviks carrying bombs suddenly swarm out from behind us. My back hurts and I am hot. A salty trickle burns my eyes and then dribbles over lips, adding to thirst. Wish the hour were over. Find myself checking watch every thirty seconds.

At one o'clock group breaks up. Some stand and talk, conversation seems strange, grating. Others take a beer break or go to classes. I just want to sit around and try to crystalize what the experience meant to me. What was accomplished? Were any of the passersby affected? Is my share of the collective guilt any less?

Advent

In those days a decree went out from the Junior Class that all "world" should be photographed. This was the only yearbook when Meta was editor. And all went to be photographed each with his own class. And Joseph also went up from Morningside from the city of Maryville to the administration building, to the tower of Anderson which is called the head-shed, because he was of the house and lineage of Isaac, to be photographed by the staff, being great with yearbook. And while they were there the time came for them to see the dean about their falling grade points. But finally they gave birth to their first yearbook and wrapped it in a plastic over and placed it before the eyes of the student body, because there was no place for it anywhere else.

And in that region there had been staff editors in Bartlett keeping watch over their sections by night. And the deadline of the yearbook had appeared before them and the agony of the deadline shone round about them and they were filled with fear. And suddenly there was with the staff a sigh of relief as they said:

Glory to God in the highest
And on campus, sleep for the staff since the yearbook is done!

When the yearbooks came back from Nashville, the students said one to another, Let us go to the chapel and see this thing which the staff has made known to us. And they went and found Meta and Merry and the Chilhowean on the stage. And when they saw it they made known what they thought about it. And the staff kept these things, and pondered them in their hearts.

And the staff returned to Bartlett glorifying and praising the year's ending because it had been a "real experience."

Directors Approve New Curriculum

The Maryville College Board of Directors, meeting on the campus May 5 and 6, formally adopted the new curriculum and division of the college year worked out by a faculty-board committee, adopted a budget for 1967-68 of $2,072,500, and heard a report on the Sesquicentennial Development program.

curriculum approved

The new curriculum and calendar, outlined earlier, is the result of a directive of the Board. It provides for a division of the college year into a 10-weeks session, followed by four weeks of special study or independent research. This will, in turn, be followed by two more 10-weeks sessions broken by spring vacation. Starting in the summer of 1968 there will be a 10-weeks summer session.

The planning of the curriculum on the basis of course hours has been abandoned in favor of specifying courses. Included is a basic "core" curriculum which provides for a foundation in the humanities, the natural sciences, and the social sciences. The new calendar and curriculum provide for greatly increased flexibility, with more independent study. At the same time, the new arrangements in calendar and curriculum are not expected to provide difficulty for students transferring to Maryville College from other institutions, or from Maryville before graduation.

The program of independent study, in which Maryville College was a pioneer, will remain, and be enhanced with more emphasis on independent work by the individual student.

The College budget for 1967-68 is well over $2,000,000 for maintenance and operation, and represents a substantial increase over the $1,971,000 budgeted for 1966-67. This budget does not take into account capital expenditures for new buildings and equipment, and the projected new Sutton Science Center to be built this year will add another estimated $1,250,000 in anticipated spending.

The report of the Development program, in which Maryville College is seeking $12,000,000 by the Sesquicentennial in 1969-70 showed that as of April 30, $8,271,253 of the goal had been raised. Of this sum, $2,599,879 has gone into the budget for current income since the program started in 1960. A total of $915,683 has been added to the endowment, $3,589,847 has been spent on new buildings and improvements, and the remainder is undesignated funds and unpaid commitments.

The Maryville College Board of Directors has 36 members who are chosen by the Spnod of Mid-South of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. They are business, professional, and church leaders from throughout the United States. Dr. Joe C. Gamble of Maryville is Chairman of the Board.

Dean McClelland Announces Retirement

Dean Frank D. McClelland, who came to Maryville College in 1937 and has guided the academic program of the institution for over 25 years, has announced his retirement effective at the end of this school year.

The College Board of Directors, meeting on the campus last week, praised Dr. McClelland's long years of devoted service to the College and adopted a resolution made a part of the official minutes of the Board, which says in part:

". . . He was appointed Dean of the College, a post he has filled with full commitment to the institution's purpose, with devotion to the cause of higher education, with loyal service to this Board, and with competence that has brought him the highest respect of faculty, staff, and students. His contributions to the progress of educational enterprises have brought distinction to him and to Maryville.

"It is fitting that the directors now pay him their highest respect, assure him of their warmest regard, and accord him the gratitude that his loyal service and notable contributions so richly deserve. It is proper that we honor him as a teacher, a leader, an administrator, and a Christian gentleman.

"Dean McClelland is a man of integrity and purpose, a man with the qualities of mind and spirit to make his purpose plain and to move with resolution toward it. People trust him and move with him, sharing in his

Dr. Davis Honored as "OYMA"

Dr. Mark Davis, member of the Maryville College English faculty and graduate of Bryan College in Dayton, has been included in the 1967 edition of "Outstanding Young Men of America."

Dr. Davis, who holds the PhD from Duke, earned the MA at the University of Tennessee and has taught at Northeastern College in Minneapolis, Minn.

The volume is an annual biographical compilation of about 10,000 young men throughout the United States.

Al Keim Elected Echo Editor-in-Chief

In an election recently held by the Highland Echo staff, Alfred Keim was chosen editor for 1967-68. The new staff will consist of John Braymer, assistant editor; Brian Childs, associate editor; Beverly Minear and Meta Robinson, Feature editors; Carol Cocke, news editor; and Ralph Pemberton, business manager. Study of Alumni Made Maryville College, which is looking forward to celebrating its 150th year, has about 5,700 living Alumni, and they are literally scattered around the world. However, as with the students, most of whom come from Tennessee, Alumni are concentrated near the College in East Tennessee. Of the 5,700, 1,265 live in East Tennessee and 757 live in Blount County.

Interview with Gamble and Price

by John Kerr

An interview with Doug Gamble, newly elected Student Body President, and Doug Price, his Vice Presidential assistant revealed an optimistic outlook for next year. Gamble expressed the feeling that 1967-68 will be a key year in the development of the college. With this in mind, student government will aim at coordinating their efforts with all the elements of the campus to bring about the successful installation of the new program being adopted. Gamble emphasized the importance of the students' role in progress. He stressed that students should be constantly striving for the best learning environment possible. He added that fighting the administration is a mistaken concept of the role of the student body, and that coordinated efforts between the two groups will bring the best results.

Gamble and Price both expressed interest in achieving a top-flight academic community. And both insisted upon defining academic as broadly as possible. Being integrally related to social and religious life, academics cannot be considered in isolation. To create an excellent academic community, therefore, requires improvement in all the areas of campus activity.

As next year's President sees it, the two most pressing problems facing student government are adopting a new constitution, and creating an effective judicial system. Plans are underway to rewrite the constitution and all the school regulations this summer in order to make both more applicable to present needs. Of greatest importance in next year's plans, however, is the establishment of a student judiciary. Although plans are not far enough along to be explained in detail, under this program disciplinary action would be in the hands of a student board with the possibility of cooperation from a joint commission from Student-Faculty Senate.

Another important area of work is that of teacher evaluation. Federal money may be received to aid in such a program, but regardless of whether the government offers assistance, some sort of instruction evaluation will be developed.

Gamble expressed hope that student government can express the total student view, adding that this places a great deal of responsibility in the hands of the students. That is, students must make themselves heard. Price seconded this idea by pointing out that minority factions that feel left out, are in that position precisely because they fail to have enough concern to speak out. The plea is obviously for responsible student interest. As Gamble said, "It's a sad state of affairs when a guy gets elected Student Body President with no opponent."

Price made a specific plea that MSG and WSGA play a more active role in student affairs. He feels that the various organizations which make up the student body should take more steps toward fullfilling their purpose, thereby creating a more progressive campus.

Lines of communication between students and faculty are now open more than ever, emphasized Price. He pointed out that officers, such as himself, have an important role to fill as links between the administration and students.

If the student body takes a serious interest in progress, and if coordination of the various campus elements can be achieved, next year could certainly be a significant one for Maryville College. The student government leaders have accepted the challenge. But it will take more than leadership.

Playhouse Presents William Inge's "Bus Stop"

William Inge's comedy hit "Bus Stop," the third of the author's remarkable contributions to the American stage, was the final production in the 1966-67 season for the Maryville College Playhouse. It was presented in the College Theatre May 12 and 13 and again will be presented again May 29 at Commencement.

Ellen Taschenberg and Robert Harner were the leading players in Inge's inventory of a group of bus passengers marooned over night in a diner by a snowstorm on the Kansas plains. All of the action takes place in the roadside eatery.

"Bus Stop" is based on a real incident observed by Inge when he was an instructor at Stevens College in Missouri. In the play, the lives of the characters become entangled and changed during the snowbound night. It is a story of people in search of love, knowledge, truth, companionship and a purpose. Life Magazine detailed the play as follows: "By dawn the rambunctious cowboy has learned that a women's heart is more easily won by humility than hammer locks, the embittered professor has been solaced by a young girl's sweetness, and the bus drvier has made a lonely lady less lonely."

The staging of the Maryville production, under the direction of Thomas E. Jones, was done in extremely realistic style. A sink with running water, a stove on which to cook, and a functioning refrigerator were part of the stage equipment. The bus stop restaurant was complete with juke box.

Miss Taschenberg played the role of Cherie, and Harner, the part of Bo Decker. Others in the cast were Sue Anthony as Elma Duckworth, Kristin Mattson as Grace Hoyland, Raymond Phillippi as Will Masters, Philip Der Pilbosian as Dr. Gerald Lyman, Steve Horning as Carl, and Frederick Callies as Virgil Blessing.

The Maryville College committee on selecting the new dean, made up of members of the faculty and the Board of Directors, recommended his appointment after careful evaluation of his credentials. Committee members cited Dr. Daniels' outstanding academic preparation and scholarship, his industriousness, and the fact that he is well liked by his colleagues and students.

"His academic vitality and concern for people, and his wisdom, intelligence, and integrity were major factors in the selection of Dr. Daniels," a committee spokesman said.

"We are most happy to have Dr. Daniels as Academic Dean at Maryville College," President Copeland said. "We are planning to use his experience and solid academic background as we put into effect the new curriculum and calendar. We look forward with him to Maryville's Sesquicetennial celebration and to the decades ahead."

All other things, to their destruction draw,
Only our love hath no decay;
This, no to-morrow hath, nor yesterday,
Running it never runs from us away,
But truly keeps first, last, everlasting day.

At last count, we had more than 3,800 newspaper editors on our list of subscribers to The Christian Science Monitor. Editors from all over the world.

There is a good reason why these "pros" read the Monitor: the Monitor is the world's only daily international newspaper. Unlike local papers, the Monitor focuses exclusively on world news — the important news.

The Monitor selects the news it considers most significant and reports it, interprets it, analyzes it — in depth. It takes you further into the news than any local paper can.

If this is the kind of paper you would like to be reading, we will send it to you right away at half the regular price of $24.00 a year.

New Program Will Feature Opera Singer in Fine Arts

Maryville College is joining a new program which brings recognized young musical artists to college and university campuses where they can work with students and faculty and provide a creative link between performing artists and higher education.

Miss Karen Roewade, a soprano who has appeared in major opera productions and on television, will be a member of the Maryville fine arts faculty next year. Her presence on the campus for several extended periods during the school year will give Maryville students an opportunity to learn about the rewards, and the hazards, of a professional career in the performing arts.

TV appearances

In addition, Miss Roewade will be presented in College performances, with the Maryville College Choir, and as a soloist in special productions and religious programs. She will also be available for programs in area public schools, and for presentations to church, civic, and other groups.

Miss Roewade is a graduate of Northwestern University School of Music, and has had a year of study toward a graduate degree in voice at Boston University.

Her television work with NBC Opera includes roles in Menotti's "Labyrinth" and the Christmas program "Amahl and the Night Visitors," as well as the production of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion." She has appeared in the Hallmark Hall of Fame's "Cry of Angels."

experimental program

Miss Roewade's work in opera includes roles in the Boris Goldovsky Opera Theater and with the North Shore Friends of Opera in Queens, New York. She has appeared in the Chautauqua Summer Opera Festival and the Metropolitan Opera Studio, and was a member of the resident opera quartet of the Green Mansions Summer Theatre.

Miss Roewade was a soloist with the Master Institute Chorus and Orchestra and with the Choral Symphony Society, and has had a number of solo recitals and concert appearances. She won the Liederkranz Society Annual Contest in 1964, and was awarded a Rockefeller Foundation Grant the same year. She won the New York Singing Teacher's Annual Contest in 1965 in the Young Artist Division.

The program under which Miss Roewade comes to Maryville was first established as an experiment in 1965. Called the Affiliate Artist Program, it leaves the artist free to pursue his own professional career. For the artist, the arrangement provides an income and stability at a point in the careers of many young performing artists when help is needed. Maryville is now one of ten institutions involved in a growing program which is making possible placement of nearly 200 artists in colleges in over 40 states.

A man need only declare himself to be free and from the moment on he feels himself to be bound. If he dares to call himself bound, he feels free.

Choir Presents Bernstein Work

Leonard Bernstein's "Chichester Psalms" were sung Sunday, May 14, by the Maryville College Choir, with the College Orchestra, for the Vespers service. The performance, first in this area for the Bernstein work, was directed by Dr. Harry H. Harter.

The "Chichester Psalms" were commissioned for performance at the music festival in 1965 at the Cathedral of Chichester in Sussex, England. They consist of musical settings of selected Psalms, and will be sung in Hebrew.

The orchestra was augmented by members of the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra. Philip Lloyd, 11, of Knoxville, trained by Dr. Calvin Bower of the music faculty at the University of Tennessee and Choirmaster of Church Street Methodist Church, will sing the part of the alto soloist.

Other soloists from the College were Ibbie Ann Jack, soprano; Mary Rucker, alto; James Breckenridge, tenor; and Charles Doscher, bass. Dr. James A. Bloy was the organist and Jonathan Gresham played the trumpet solo.

The music, highly melodic and in the contemporary style, calls for heavy emphasis on percussion instruments. There were 23 different kinds of percussion instruments in the orchestra.

Dr. E. Fay Campbell, Maryville College Chaplain, officiated at the service.

Teacher Corps Looks For Graduates

Applications for service in the Teacher Corps are now available, it was announced recently by Richard A. Graham, the program's national director.

The Teacher Corps is a graduate work-study program that trains college graduates (interns) in the special methods needed to teach disadvantaged youngsters. It is anticipated that training sessions will begin between July and September of this year.

Currently working in 275 of the nation's neediest schools, the Corps combines two years of tuition-free graduate study with on-the-job training in the classroom. After two years of Corps service, Corpsmen may receive a Master's Degree and will be eligible for permanent teacher certification in their training state.

Teacher Corps applications and additional information may be obtained in the office of the Dean of Students.

Duncan Bennett Resigns as Director of Information Services

Duncan C. Bennett, who has been for the past five years Director of Information Services at Maryville College, has resigned to return to the staff of The Knoxville News-Sentinel. Bennett and his family will continue to live in Maryville.

As Director of Information Services, Bennett has been responsible for news about the College in area newspapers and on radio and television. He has also edited College publications and organized the annual tour of the College Choir.

"We regret losing Mr. Bennett from our staff, and are most appreciative of his five years of service to the College," Maryville President Dr. Joseph J. Copeland said. "We wish him well in his return to the profession of journalism."

Would you like to take a hike? Do you wish to write a poem? Would an evening singing folk songs make your day? Perhaps this sounds idyllic for the busy Maryville student, but it need not be with the new program of creative activities planned for the coming academic year. The venture—to be known as the Creative Leisure Activity Program (CLAP)—will offer students, faculty, and staff eleven activities for enjoyment and enrichment.

No textbooks, no homework, no burning the midnight florescent, the creative activities will afford participants the opportunity to develop leisure skills, to learn new hobbies, to explore the East Tennessee region, and to enjoy companionship with faculty and fellow-students. The activities include folk music, creative writing, readers' theater, arts and crafts, photography, sketching, needlecraft, hiking, lore of the Smokies, field and stream, and camping. While each group is to be organized by a member of the faculty or staff, each participant will share in the learning and the teaching.

With the pace of change escalating at Maryville College, CLAP promises a needed variation from the academic demands upon the college community. Perhaps CLAP will allow us to see with Thoreau "this curious world . . . more wonderful . . . than convenient; more beautiful than . . . useful; more to be admired and enjoyed than used."

FACULTY APPOINTMENTS

Math

John W. Nichols of Rt. 5, Pine View Drive, Maryville, will be Instructor in Mathematics at Maryville College in the fall. A graduate of Maryville in 1965, Nichols is expecting to receive his Master of Science degree in mathematics at the University of Tennessee in August.

Nichols graduated from Walland High School. For the past two years he has been a graduate assistant in the Mathematics Department at U-T.

Nichols won the George A. Knapp Mathematics Award at Maryville in 1965. He is a member of the American Mathematical Society.

The Freshman Niche

From your President:

I think it safe to say that by this time of the year we are no longer freshmen. Perhaps we are academically — thousands of people seem to be perennial freshmen (a healthy stimulus for our society), but even our most frantic efforts to preserve a high-school attitude have not been able to ward off the changes forced upon us. Cultures have mingled, prejudice has been frightfully jarred, cherished values have battled for survival and lost. Minds have brushed and lingered for a moment, friendships have been nourished, and profound disappointments have made an awkward journey uncomfortable. Our friends away from Maryville will soon witness the dimension we have gained.

Progress has been made as a group as well. There are too many organizations on campus to permit a natural focus on Class activity, but the energy of many freshmen this year has provided impetus for a new tradition of participation. The small amount of new territory we explored has been significant. Official Class duties, such as the pep rally, Barnwarming, our Class movie, collecting dues, organizing dances, and providing Council representation and a structured government have been marked with old problems and new complications. Each program has been a vital drama to those concerned with it. For each enterprise a share of precious personality has been donated. Some provoked controversy: our "Evaluation and Analysis Committee" was given free hand to draw a picture of frosh attitudes and desires, and to conduct general inquiry; it emerged with a comprehensive report and recommendation for action that inspired at least discussion and, in some quarters, indignation. A Constitution Committee has ardously hammered out a first for Maryville: a Class constitution. An Orientation Committee has taken the time to plan a coordinated, workable introduction for next year's freshmen.

Most of this work has been directed exclusively toward the benefit of the Class of 1970. A few steps, though, have been dedicated to posterity. Our Class Constitution, if ratified, will formalize custom and clarify rules. By-laws modeled on our proposed constitution may be adopted by future Classes. Action for greater efficiency and communication in Class government has been taken; this spirit of concern, however insignificant now, may be appreciated in the future. Genuine advantages of Class organization, now quite ignored, might be recognized.

This farewell address does not signal my retirement from service to campus organizations. Though the column you are reading may be my last opportunity to make official pronouncements from an authorized podium (at any rate, I hope I will not be bound to The Freshman Niche!), silence will not deaden my participation. Whining and complaining should be tolerated only when individual expression and participation is prohibited; I am pleased to see that maxim gaining in popularity. I, on behalf of your Cabinet, personally thank those of you who have sacrificed time and energy for the success of our projects. Let us all involve ourselves in next year's new dimension.

Scots Break Track Records

The Track Team, after a strong start, lost their momentum, and then lost Dave Wiley, and were not able to get back in the winning groove. Their record was a mediocre 2 wins, 4 losses, and 1 tie. The only bright spot in the season was the rash of records the Scot thinclads were able to break—mostly at the TIAC Meet at UT's beautiful Tom Black Track. Dick Craig broke the 440 yard dash record set in 1936, with a clocking of 51.0 seconds. Brian Childs broke a 34 year old record in the 880 yard run, with a time of 1.59.9. The 440 yard relay team, consisting of Bob McEldowney, David Garner, Bob Ciccotti, and Dick Craig, broke the record set in 1965 and tied in 1966 with a time of 44.3 seconds. Cole Piper broke the discus record by one inch with a throw of 124½ feet. The old record was set in 1939 by William Baird, brother of our own Coach Boydson Baird. The most outstanding job of record breaking was Dave Wiley's assault on the standards set by Bob Cooper of the 1966 team. On April 29, he shot by the two mile record by 2.8 seconds with a clocking of 9.42.5. In the same meet he missed the mile record by a bare 2 seconds. The following week, at the TIAC Meet, Wiley streaked past the week-old two mile record with a time of 9.33.0. The following day he set a new standard in the mile with a clocking of 4.25.5.

It looked like a promising year for the Scots when the year started. Maryville easily won over Milligan by a score of 81-64, with Hosken in the pole vault, Craig in the 440, Garner in the 100, Klein in the 120 highs, McEldowney in the 220, Clark in the triple jump, Wiley in the two mile, and both relay teams, registering first places. Maryville swept the 100 and the triple jump. In the second meet, Mars Hill tied Maryville 72-72. This score will stand as official even though there is some doubt as to some of the decisions by the referee. Scoring firsts were Clark in the high jump, Hoskens in the pole vault, Wiley in the mile and two mile, Craig in the 440, Childs in the 880, McEldowney in the 100 and 220, and the 440 yard relay team. Maryville swept the 100, 220, and the two mile.

Maryville next lost to Sewanee 80-65 in a close, well run meet. Maryville took five firsts and a second in every running event, but were not able to overcome Sewanee's dominance of the field events. Wiley once again was a double winner in the mile and two mile, Piper took the discus, McLaughlin took the triple jump, and the 440 yard relay team once again triumphed. Maryville swept the two mile and the triple jump. Meeting Milligan four days later in a driving rain, Maryville was defeated by a determined Buff squad 80-65. Winning events for Maryville were Dick Craig in the 440, Garner in the 100, Klein in the 120 highs, Wiley in the two mile, Clark in the triple jump, and once again the 440 yard relay team. Maryville swept the 100 yard dash.

Mars Hill was the next Scot opponent. The Maryville thinclads, hearing that the Lions were out to get the Scots, put on a fine display of running and easily handled Mars Hill 89-56. Capturing 11 first places, and 9 second places, the Scots were never seriously challenged. Wiley once again was a double winner in the mile and two mile. Craig was also a double winner with victories in the 220 and 440. Among the others, Childs won the 880, Garner the 100, Clark the high jump, Piper the discus, Hosken the pole vault, and both relay teams. Maryville swept the two mile.

The following weekend, May 5 and 6, Maryville participated in the TIAC meet, scoring 11 points. Wiley was the only Scot with two medals: a fourth in the mile and a second in the two mile. Others getting medals were Garner with a fourth place in the 100, Craig with a fifth in the 440, and Butch Crabtee with a fifth in the javelin. The meet was costly, though, as Maryville lost the services of Dave Wiley and Bob Ciccotti to injuries suffered during the meet.

When Carson Newman came to town the week after the TIAC, the Scots felt the full effect of the two absentees. In a good meet that could have been different with a healthy squad, Maryville lost to Carson Newman by a score of 79-66. Garner was a double winner in the 100 and the long jump. Craig won the 100, Childs the mile, Crabtree the javelin, Hoskens the pole vault, and the 440 yard relay their race. Maryville ended the season at Emory University in Atlanta and suffered the worst defeat of the season 92-53. The Scots took only three first places: Childs in the 880, Craig in the 440, and McEldowney in the 100.

Coach Tomlinson loses no one from this squad to graduation. Consequently, he is highly optimistic over next year's prospects. He announced the awarding of 16 letters to members of the track squad, including 11 to first year men and a four year award to assistant coach Joe Malloy. The letters were awarded on the basis of points scored in the meets, ten points qualifying one for a letter. The leading scorers were Craig with 55½, Wiley with 52, Garner with 49, and McEldowney with 46. Others receiving letters were Childs, Clark, Crabtree, Greeno, Hamory, Hoskens, Klein, McLaughlin, Phillips, Piper, and Styles.

The College recently made a study from Alumni and other records of its local Alumni, and a cross-section reveals that they are leaders in every walk of life. By occupation, those who are teachers and educational administrators lead the list, closely followed by the other service professions.

There are 152 teachers in elementary, high school, and college work in the county who are graduates of Maryville College. The next largest category is that of housewife, with 123 wives and mothers.

Medicine is high on the list, with 21 physicians, and a significant contribution has been made by the College to the ministry, with 10 ministers in the county who received their baccalaureate degree at Maryville.

Others are laboratory technicians, real estate agents, and airline pilots.

These men and women who support Maryville College help make the College and the community true "Partners in Progress."

Thinclads in Action

Tennis Finishes Season

The Tennis Team finished their season on the road last week with losses to Milligan, East Tennessee State University and Emory and Henry. This season's record is 2 wins and 11 losses, a comedown from last year's team. The record, though, is not surprising, considering the formicable teams the Scots faced, and the relative inexperience of the Maryville team.

The Scots were paced by number two man, Al Marshall, who scored 11.5 points (out of a posible 19.5). Pete Park, number one man, had 8.5 points. The others on the team scoring were Becky Sankner with 5.5, Gary Dauron with 3.5, Hugh Robinson with 2.5 and Penny Blackwood with 0.5.

Coach Kardatske was pleased by the consistent play of Al Marshall, who won 8 of his singles matches and teamed up with Pete Park for seven doubles victories. Park, who, as a rule, faced the stiffest competition, managed to overcome five opponents in the singles matches. Becky Sankner, playing number three position all season and winning five singles matches, showed that she could hold her own in this college sport dominated by men. Congratulations go to the Tennis Team for having done as well as they did against the caliber of competition that they faced.

Briefly, the gloomy season went like this: In late March, the Tennis team dropped matches to Mars Hill and to Ohio Wesleyan by identical scores of 1-8. Marshall got one of the wins, with the other going to the doubles team of Park and Marshall. Seven matches were played in April, the roughest part of the schedule in

Frank Eggers to Participate in Summer Program in Space Biology

Frank Eggers, Maryville College senior and son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Eggers of Maryville, has been accepted for a summer institute in space biology at the University of California in Los Angeles. The institute is supported by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

His scholarship for the program, from June 26 to July 21, is one of 30 offered by the UCLA Brain Research Institute. It will acquaint the students with modifications in simple living systems and in mammalian physiological functions anticipated in long-term space flight. The participants are selected on the basis of past course work and interest.

Lectures and demonstrations will be supplemented with field trips to the NASA Ames Research Center and area space experiment sites.

Eggers, who is majoring in chemistry at Maryville, is a member of the Maryville scholarship honor society, Alpha Gamma Sigma. He has played football for four years on the Scot varsity squad. He already holds Vanderbilt University and NCAA scholarships which he plans to use to study medicine at Vanderbilt.

Baseball Team Suffers Losing Streak

The Baseball team is suffering through a somewhat disapointing year. The team started strong, but bad weather, arough schedule, and injuries to some key players hampered the development of the team into a good unit. With four games yet to be played, their record stands at 4-15.

Maryville lost their first game to Anderson College 7-4, and their second to the University of Toledo 9-4. The Scots then won two in a row—over Hillsdale 9-3 and LMU 8-6. After the Spring break, the Scots lost to the University of Chattanooga 6-3, then beat Mars Hill 11-6. At this time, the team fell apart and went through a disastrous 12 game losing streak. Maryville lost to Carson Newman 9-3, to LMU 7-1, to Milligan 10-4, to Mars Hill 7-0, to Emory and Henry 8-3, to Chattanooga 5-3, to Tusculum 7-4, once again to Tusculum 7-3, to Cumberland 6-5, and to Emory and Henry 6-5. Bryan then took a doubleheader from the Scots by scores of 2-1 and 6-2 to end the losing habit. The Scots finally overcame their defeatist attitude to put down Cumberland 3-0, as Jim Backus threw a sparkling seven-hit shut out.

Part of the blame for the losses of the close games must go to the team's inability to rally for the big inning. Some of Coach Baird's maneuvers have puzzled players and spectators alike. The repeated use of the squeeze bunt and the working for the one run when more are needed has left the players with the thought that they can not hit the ball out of the infield. One can sense the feeling of despair and defeat that radiates from the bench during games.

Despite the poor showing of the team as a whole in the final score, there have been some good performances by individual players. Leading batters this year are John Agnew with a .362 average, Junior Maietta at .300, Lynn Dildine at ,297, and Sonny Webb batting ,281. Among the pitching squad Jack Llewellyn is batting .445, with 4 for 11, and Jim Moore is batting .300, with 3 for 10, including one triple and 5 RBI's.

Team leaders in individual areas include, in two base hits, Agnew with 5 and Dildine with 4; in three base hits, Dildine and Webb, both with 2; and in home runs, Macy, Webb and Agnew, each with one. In runs scored, Maietta leads with 10, followed closely by Webb, Maxwell and Agnew with 9. Agnew leads in RBI's with 14, Dildine follows with 12, and Webb and Maxwell trail with 7 each. In the stolen base department Agnew shot into the lead at 7 with his three stolen bases at Cumberland. Nicolas and Dildine have 6 stolen bases each; Maietta follows with 5.

Among the pitchers Jim Backus leads in practically every department. He has pitched in 6 games for a total of 46 innings. He has 33 strike-outs. His record stands at 1-4, the one win being the shutout over Cumberland. His earned run average is a very good 2.93. As to the rest of the squad, Van Leuven, the relief specialist, has pitched in 8 games, but only 19 innings. He has a 1-1 record, with a 3.78 ERA. Jack Llewellyn has pitched in 7 games, for a total of 43 innings. His record stands at 0-4, with a 3.85 ERA. Jim Moore has also been in 7 games, 25 innings. His record is 1-3, with 12 strikeouts. Fred Rose, 0-2, has pitched 26 innings spread out over 6 games. He has a fair 4.15 ERA, but a very good 21 strikeouts. Jon Hancher is the only other pitcher of record, with a 1-1 record.

As has been noted earlier this year, only three members of the team graduate: Wiley Webb, Jack Llewellyn and Frank Greadу. With a few breaks going the other way next year, the team should substantially better their present record. The material to do so is very definitely there. We look with anticipation to the further improvement of the Maryville Baseball team.

dedication, his confidence, and his faith in the work of his goals.

"Dean McClelland has provided an example of competence, loyalty, and service that few can match, at Maryville or elsewhere. He has led without dominating, he has brought change without being presumptous, he has administered his office with firmness and in fairness. He has served his country, his community, and his church with this same distinction.

"It is with regret that we must accept the fact that time moves and that the directors must prepare for the retirement of Dean McClelland . . . We wish him all the satisfaction of knowing that his tasks have been well done . . ."

Dean McClelland, a native of Kentucky, entered Maryville College in 1914 and stayed two years. In 1916 he left to join the Marine Corps and saw service in France during the first World War. He was commissioned in Germany and was cited for gallantry in action.

Marine captain

After the war, Dean McClelland returned to college at Grove City, Pa., where he graduated in 1929. He started his teaching career as principal of the Plain Grove High School in Pennsylvania, and two years later was named instructor in science at Pikeville College, Pikeville, Ky. He later served as Dean of Pikeville College and was President of the institution for four years before he came to Maryville.

During his career at Pikeville College Dr. McClelland earned the Master of Science degree in chemistry from Grove City College, and did further graduate work at Pennsylvania State College. In 1936 Grove City College conferred upon him the LLD degree.

His academic career was interrupted one more time during World War II when he again volunteered and served as a captain in the Marine Corps. He saw service on Okinawa and was discharged with the rank of major, returning to Maryville in 1945.

Community service

Along with his many duties in his years at Maryville College, Dean McClelland has found time for a great deal of church and community work. He has served as an elder in the New Providence Presbyterian Church, and is called on frequently by the church to help on special committees. He has also worked over the years at the Home Avenue Mission.

A prime mover in the organization of the Blount County Recreation Program, he has worked with Boy Scouts and with the Chamber of Commerce Education Committee. His civic work includes membership in Rotary and Kiwanis International, and he has served as president of the Maryville-Alcoa Kiwanis Club.

During his years at Maryville, Dean McClelland started the orientation program for freshmen, the administration of tests for reading ability, vocational guidance and special aptitude tests, and expanded the program of information to both students and their parents. He also has spent uncounted hours in individual counseling with many generations of Maryville students.

For the past two years he has led the faculty in working out far-reaching changes in the curriculum and calendar, spending many hours in conference and study on the revisions which will go into effect in the fall.

Dean McClelland, who has lived on the Maryville campus since his return from the Marine Corps at the end of the war, has purchased a home in Maryville where he and Mrs. McClelland will live. He has two sons, the older an engineer in Washington, D. C., and the younger a physician.

Sports Editorial

by Bill Evaul

Soccer can be said to be the perfect sport. Anyone can play—and make his presence felt in his first attempt at the game.

To participate in this sport, one does not need the good eyes to see the difference between a curve and a fast ball, the high or low pitch. One does not need the height of a basketball player or the weight of a football player (the tallest professional soccer player in America is 6 feet tall, the heaviest weighs 174 pounds. The weight of the average professional player is 155). One does not even need the speed of a dashman, or the restrictive diet of a wrestler. It can be played with as few as six men to a side, as many as fifteen. All that is needed in the line of equipment is one round ball. In many underdeveloped nations, soccer is played barefooted, so shoes are not really needed. These are some of the reasons soccer ranks as the most popular and most widely played sport in the world.

Soccer is finally beginning to make a headway in America. It has its faults—the major one being that it is basically a low scoring game—not consistent with the demands of the American observer fo rhigh scores in all sports. One other disadvantage is that under international rules, the game is played in 45 minute halves—with no time-outs and no substitutions. To accommodate the Amreican, revisions have been made—including free substitutions and division of the game into quarters ranging from 15 to 25 minutes in length.

At Maryville, the sport has always enjoyed moderate poularity—especially among those students and faculty who became acquainted with the sport in high schools and other colleges. For three weeks, a group o students (numbering as many as 35 one afternoon) have enjoyed more or less impromptu games on Sunday afternoons. More would have come if it had been better publicized. As we approach the end of the school year, though, the future of soccer at Maryville is once again obscure. In the line of suggestion as to what can be done, may I offer the following two possibilities:

1. Make soccer an organized intramural sport—to be played either in the fall or the spring.

2. Incorporate soccer into the 100-level physical education courses required of all freshmen and sophomores. This last proposal would take a little study, but it is not an impossibility in the next two or three years.

I am not now advocating intercollegiate games—either on the varsity level or on any other basis. Maryville does not, at the present, have the material or the coaches to participate successfully with the much-improved collegiate teams in the area (UT, Carson Newman, Warren Wilson, Appalachian, King of Bristol). However, a couple of exhibition games with UT (practice for them, learning sessions for us) is not inconceivable. I, for one, would not like to see soccer disappear from the scene.

May you live all the days of your life.

E. BROADWAY DOWNTOWN 982-1541 WE NEVER CLOSE

The Most Miraculous and Really Remarkable Elucidation of an Elf's Encounter with a Positively Unparallelled Thing

Down Elftown's street a tipsy gnome
Old-honey-filled late bumples home.

A big black beetle scurries past,
On the dippler his shadow casts.

Our happy elf, himself bug-size,
Saucers his eyes in wide surprise.

Foot-woozy, then, away he wobbles,
Fighting off monsters, the breeze, and cobbles.

Tumbling home he collapses to bed,
Rose-petal quilt defending his head,

Vows never to touch old honey again,
Excepting maybe now and then,

And dearly wishes that then and now
Were really then and there, and how!

To Nelson Miller: A Tribute

A Soldier's Spring Song

How, Spring, can you smile your high-sky smile blue-bright above us, when the only smile we are permitted is the bone-bare grin of our death's head?

How, Spring, can you sing your bud-note song green-tongued about us, when the only song we may know is the dies Irae of the greedy guns?

Goddam you, Spring, goddam you.

The Moonbeam Boat

Come, take a ride on my moonbeam boat:
We'll slip from the sun-downed quay
On silver wings of elf-spun cloud
And sail on the night 'til day.

We'll skim the sky like a skipping stone,
Ring ripples round the moon,
Who'll laugh as our wake-waves tickle him,
And wiggle like a jello balloon.

We'll put into port at every star;
The skyfolk will ask us to stop
To see their twinkling faery towns
And visit their candy shops.

I've a pocket filled with old full moons
(Up there they're good as dimes);
We'll buy pink starfoam candy swirls
(Blue, too) — they'll last no time!

Then we'll wave goodbye and off we'll glide,
And if there's time we may Skate with the comets on the frozen fire
God spilled, the Milky Way.

Then a final swing around the moon
And back to the dawn-dyed quay;
Our ride is done, for now the night
Flows back into the day.

But again when soon the laughing moon
Builds up the boat from his beams,
We'll take a trip on the moonbeam ship
To the very end of dreams.

Flight
To D. R. P.

This night, this very now of when, we together, my small shy fingers enwombed in yours mother-soft and sensitive, have climbed the hill of your heart,
its bell laughing through our hair, and seen the word-winged swan that nestles there in secret on toast-warm eggs of becoming.
At your touch she exult poured herself and us into beyond, and silent sheathes of self were left below, as we concresced into the live life loving essence of all being, Communion of union and sacrament of burning life we were.
Then, down to the pregnant nest,
and down the heart-hill,
and various into star-stung silence.
But still I feel the laughing bell, and I remember.

Rain Before Dawn

Lampblack of night clotted the sky-lens and earth, oppressing light.
Then, stung by lightning, large rain rinsed it all away.
Dark ran in runnels down the streets
and slunk into sewers.
Dawn caught the sky's fresh mirror,
smiled, and was.

Down and over the dry-grass-hummocked hill, wind-licked hair and shouldered coat fluttering, while sleeping leaves shush! my waking feet in winter's nursery, today anticipating vernal warmth.

Down and running the rustling seared-weed slope wind-rushing I, and the streamward path winds to the silver-song of rock-washing water.
I stop in almost silence but breathing, the stream, the wind and I.

Greenly tossing waterplants dance to the stream's song like wind-pressed wheat, more green from winter's browning touch to leaf and weedy hill, brown study of pensive sleep.

Swirl-song of spilling water pulls me to the farther side:
I mount the fallen spanning trunk;
rotslick the log tricks me and I slip shoe-full-deep into January water.

I laugh with the stream at myself, and the wind takes up our paean.
Feet and socks will dry, but so may souls, so I shall drink all this to allay a future thirst.

terms of the teams played. The Scots lost to North Georgia 4-5, then won two in a row against LMU, 5-4, and Grand Rapids, 6-1. This was followed by a close loss to Western Carolina 4-5, two shut-out defeats at the hands of Tennessee Wesleyan and Chatanooga, and a loss to Tennessee Tech 1-8. In May, the Scots improved on their score against Mars Hill, but were still edged out 4-5. Following this loss came the final road trip, with losses to the first two schools by scores of 1-8 and to Emory and Henry by a close 4-5.

Calling this his rebuilding year, Coach Kardatske presented letter awards to four players on the squad: Park, Marshall, Sankner, and Dauron. He is highly optimistic about his prospects for next year's team. This year's team consisted of three freshman—Dauron, Robinson and Blackwood — two sophomores — Marshall and Sanker — and one junior — Park. With these players as a core, and the freshmen and transfer students to add depth, the team should have a brighter future.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE ENTERS 149th YEAR

Looking Foward To Big Year

A Day In The Life Of...

Departing from his home in Heritage Hills, he prepares for a busy day around and about campus, an atmosphere reminiscent of his undergraduate preparation in a small college. Arriving at his office in the Executive Suite in Anderson Hall, he checks his appointment schedule, finding Convocation the primary engagement of the morning. He sees Convocation as an important part of the "new face" of Maryville College through its use of new talent and recognized scholars.

Following Convocation he leads a philosophy discussion group for freshmen in which he notes spirited acceptance of reinterpretations of age-old ideas.

A meeting with the Curriculum Committee begins the afternoon. He particularly notes with pleasure the cooperation, concern, and interdependence among and within departments. As he reflects upon his past experience at a large university, he realizes that, although Maryville has fewer curriculum offerings and smaller departments, this is not stifling to the academic atmosphere. Rather, this provides opportunities for greater development and varied discussion outside the classroom. He notices, however, a need for off-campus activities to further academic pursuit, particularly in regard to movies.

He anticipates success in the new curriculum which is based on "solid educational principles and strong experience." Although experimental, it is not "too far out," for the ideas are basic and fundamental to life.

Part of his day is spent in talking with students. In conversation with two members of

NEW FACULTY NAMED

Maryville College is privileged to welcome to the campus this fall nine new faculty members, five of whom are connected with the Department of Fine Arts. The rest join the departments of Psychology, History, Economics, and Chemistry.

Roland T. Huthmaker, Jr., is the new Instructor in string instruments. He received his Bachelor of Music degree from Mississippi College and his Master of Music degree from North Texas State University. Mr. Huthmaker is a concert violinist with experience as choir director and teacher of string instruments, and was formerly director of the orchestra in the junior and senior high schools of Denton, Texas.

Paul J. Ogren, new to our Department of Chemistry, is a graduate of Earlham College, and earned his graduate degrees at the University of Wisconsin, where he was also a research assistant. Dr. Ogren was a National Science Foundation Fellow in 1963, 1964, and 1966. He held a Danforth Foundation fellowship from 1963 to 1967, and was a Woodrow Wilson fellow in 1963.

Dan B. Stallings, the new Instructor in Music and Director of the Band, received his Bachelor of Music Education and Master of Arts degrees at West Texas State University. He comes to Maryville from Colorado, where he was Band Director in the Jefferson County school system.

Richard C. Gossweiler, Jr., a Maryville graduate, is an Instructor in History this fall, replacing Wallace L. Lewis, who is on leave of absence during the year to complete graduate study toward the doctor's degree. Mr. Gossweiler earned his M. A. degree at the University of Tennessee, where he was a graduate assistant. For the past two years he has been Chairman of the Department of History at Huron College in South Dakota.

Friedrich J. Gronstedt, a native of Germany, joins the Art Department as Instructor in Art. Educated in Berlin, he holds the Master of Art degree from the University of Greifswald and has done further graduate work at the University of Rhode Island. He is author of Culture in East and West, published in Germany, and has had a number of exhibitions of his work in both Germany and America.

Harish Chandra Gupta comes to Maryville to replace A. Eugene Hileman, who is continuing graduate study at the University of Tennessee in Economics. Mr. Gupta received the B.A. and

EDITORIAL

With this first issue of the Highland Echo, we are starting what we hope will be an exciting year in the field of college journalism. The editors and staff are prepared to present to you lively, interesting, and, we hope, controversial features. We live in an exciting and often terrifying age, and a college newspaper if it is to be vital must speak to the needs and issues of the times. The new curriculum has dragged Maryville College kicking and screaming into the second half of the twentieth century; but our world is one which is changing, not in fify year periods, but every day, and we must constantly be confronted with the new faces of this world in the form of provocative and stimulating ideas.

The revised statement of purpose of Maryville College says, ". . . Maryville seeks to establish a community in which students and faculty . . . can unite in a common purpose and freely discuss their differences, recognizing that when differences and tensions no longer exist, man ceases to grow." It is the stated purpose of the Highland Echo to provide a forum for the interchange of conflicting ideas and to help keep open the channels of communication among all segments of the college community. We hope to place before you items of controversy; if communication is to be achieved you must respond, first by giving the ideas presented your thoughtful consideration, and second, by reacting and sharing your views with your fellow learners.

This page carries the title Graffiti. Graffiti is defined as, "a rude inscription or drawing found on rocks or walls." This is the true art form of communication of our era, the sudden scrawling of a message, the uncertain, often plaintive outpouring of an alienated human being. This page is your page, a chance to react to your culture. An editor cannot help but speak from his own opinions or points of view, in fact to do otherwise would be a moral cop-out. You must, however, supply the needed balance by evaluating the contents of our paper and reacting to what you find there. Marshall McLuhan, the prophet of communication, says, "The environment as a processor of information is propaganda. Propaganda ends where dialogue begins." This page of the paper will always be open to dialogues in the form of letters to the editor. Also the Highland Echo will publish any articles that are of genuine interest to the college community.

From time to time we will editorially take stands on issues facing our country, our generation, and our college. To avoid doing so would be to abdicate our responsibility. We now challenge the faculty, administration, and student body to accept their responsibility to take a stand on issues and to have the courage to express it. This paper will always remain open to your expressions, regardless of the personal opinions of the editors. Let us maintain a dialogue this year.

EDITORIAL

In the last two weeks, discussion of the new curriculum has played a major part in campus discourse. There is a new spark of enthusiasm in the eyes of the faculty members, who are finding a new spurt of intellectual exercise. And lying beneath the surface of this curriculum is the key to ideal academia — that of breadth of exploration and interest.

While the freshman class spends each day in the throes of the "new Maryville," the upperclass reaction generally runs in one of two channels. One notable attitude is that of boredom to further explanation of the program, while the other is a passive assurance that "I wish I were starting as a freshman now." It seems that too many people are failing to see themselves as part of the overall program that Maryville is establishing.

Although Maryville proposes to ". . . establish a community in which all activities — intellectual, religious, social, cultural, physical — are coordinated so as to prevent distracting fragmentation," the responsibility for student involvement lies far from the creators of the program. Only by individual exploration and constant evaluation may any person attempt to approach the "total person" that such a liberal arts education as ours hopes to produce.

It is at this time that the returning students must see their position in the new curriculum and calendar. Lying ahead is a full year of activity, of which everyone must take advantage. Culturally, intellectually, socially, religiously, and physically, it is a year laden with opportunities for the potential total person.

The Disinherited

Thou hast committed—
War: but that was in another country,
And besides, the people are dead.

Blessed are the peacemakers,
For they shall inherit the earth
Is indeed a witty saying,
But an old promise gone suspect,
Soured by neglect,
Stagnant in waiting:
There is no longer
World enough for war
Nor time enough for peace.
If man has been granted
Warmakers have stronger arms
And peacemakers more patience,
This is no consolation,
I find no humor in it.
Blessed be the peacemakers
When they shall inherit the earth,
Whatsoever of it remains,
For will they breed any better?
And once peace has come,
Peace that like war has been around
Long enough to be confirmed,
Of what value property
That has been involved with war?
What worth servants
Who have dropped dead
Running from life,
Or living, have fed on a corpse
And called it good meat,
Or lying among the dying,
Are able to sleep?
Civilized war is a lie
And modern war a madcap,
A roaring sneer out of control,
Half-choking on its own conceit
To conceal an open-ended grin
Smelling of bad teeth,
Licking its dry lips
With a swollen tongue:
There is no pleasure in its kiss,
No beauty is in its embrace.

If war is inevitable,
As has been rumored,
Peace is but a pause
To bury the dead
And patch up the wounded,
To sing old victories
And curse off defeats,
To rest up for new slaughters:
Old soldiers never die,
They just keep on killing.
If peace is believed,
As has been promised,
Then war is absurd:
No matter how much
It plows up the land
And waters the ground
With the red sweat
Of its working brow,
Empty skulls and scattered bones
Sown with fertilized eyes
Spring up to a foul harvest
Untroubled by the birds
That have not yet fled
Flying in circles
Not knowing where to turn.
If war is absurd,
As has been believed,
And peace but a pause,
As it has seemed,
Both inevitable,
Taking turns—we are faced
With this crooked proposition:
There is no armor in love
And no rest nor hope in hate,
No comfort in paradox.
Blessed be the dead,
For they shall see God
And know first hand this thing
We have for so long called Justice but have not found.

Movie Review: The Pawnbroker

"The Pawnbroker." Screenplay by David Friedkin and Morton Fine, Adapted from the novel by Edward Lewis Wallant and directed by Sidney Lumet.

Sol Nazerman is a Jew. And more than that, he is a Jew crushed by the Nazi Party in Germany. Before Hitler he was a happy man with a wife and two small children. Afterward, which is the time depicted in the movie, he is alone in New York City, refusing to build any type of lasting relationship with anyone; that is to say, he is alienated.

Here I would inject some words of explanation for the benefit of those scholars not involved in the Philosophy 101 course. Credit for the following knowledge goes to Dr. Esther Swenson. Alienation, in a limited sense, is a state in which man has withdrawn his feelings and refuses to be involved with others to the extent that he exists aimlessly. A man who is not alienated—i.e., separated—has made the effort to build and maintain a core—home and language—to which he and others relate. This core, however, is impermanent; that is, it, as such, passes into and out of existence just as any fact passes through time in space. The unstable nature of a core, then, makes it quite easy for man to become alienated or disassociated from it.

In "The Pawnbroker," Sol's center or core is destroyed. Because of the abruptness and brutality of this destruction, he forces himself into a somewhat permanent alienation—rather, he wants to be completely separated from others. But, as the movie indicates, it is impossible for anyone to exist in a situation in which persons are interacting unless he is totally cold and unfeeling. Because Sol is a sensitive man, he eventually yields to the forces around him, but only after Jesus gives his life for Sol.

Magazine reviews have given little attention to the meaning of the movie, but they do provide stirring comments. Although America wastes much time in criticizing the director, Sidney Lumet adversely, it does call the film a "valid and powerful,

Book Review: The Hobbit

J.R.R. Tolkien. The Hobbit. New York: Ballantine Books, Inc., 1966. paperback.

I've heard of dwarves, elves, wizards, and goblins, but the other day I met a hobbit for the first time. Haflings, as they are called in the outside world, are ordinarily timid, tidy, hole-loving creatures. Physically, they grow only to half the size of men, wear no shoes due to the tough leathery nature of their feet, and dress as gentlemen. Now, I don't pretend to have described hobbits fully or accurately; rather, what I have said is merely a mental image remaining after the reading of J.R.R. Tolkien's The Hobbit, or There and Back Again. Tolkien, a British novelist, wrote this fantasy towards the close of the second world war. He mentions in the introduction to his trilogy, Lord of the Rings, however, that his work is a linguistical effort only; that is, his interest in sounds, words, and their origins led him to develop a mythological tale quite separate from any book previously written. Throughout the book, he shows himself as a master of description—of characters and setting—word usage, and suspense, the last of which is notable in that Tolkien tells just enough to allow the reader understanding, but not enough to tell all. Hence, suspense and imagination run free.

Try pretending that you are only half as big as you are; then imagine how the world would appear. Trees would be as the whole earth, spiders as monsters (if ever there were or are such creatures), ponds and rivers as lakes, and so forth. On the other hand, elves and dwarves and other little things would not seem as extraordinarily small. If you can stretch your mind to this point of view, then you are mentally a hobbit.

IN MEMORIAM

The Highland Echo, on behalf of the student body, expresses sympathy to the family of Mrs. Tom Fuhr. In tribute to her memory, we dedicate the following prayer.

"Eternal Life"

Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace!
Where there is hatred . . . let me sow love.
Where there is injury . . . pardon.
Where there is doubt . . . faith.
Where there is despair . . . hope.
Where there is darkness . . . light.
Where there is sadness . . . joy.

O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek
To be consoled . . . as to console;
To be understood . . . as to understand;
To be loved . . . as to love;
For it is in giving . . . that we receive;
It is in pardoning . . . that we are pardoned;
It is in dying . . . that we are born to eternal life.

Echo To Sponsor Negotiate Now! On Maryville Campus

During this summer it has become clear to many of our nation's leaders and students that our national administration has expanded the war in Viet Nam to wider proportions than can be tolerated. Rather than empty promises of the end of this war, we have seen more and more escalation and American involvement in this Far Eastern conflict. It is because of the death in the thousands of our American men, and in the hundreds of thousands of Orientals, that people in the country have expressed a strong desire to end the war.

The organization, Negotiate Now!, is interested in ending this war immediately. Its terms are honest, asking North Viet Nam to come to peace terms with South Viet Nam and America. Negotiate Now! calls for the ceasing of bombing and an unconditional peace.

Negotiate Now! will have petitions on this campus asking the signatures of people interested in the end of killing and the genesis of uncompromising world peace. This petition and others like it will be sent to the White House.

We of the Editorial Staff back the right of the petition to be on campus, the principle behind it, and the progress of humanity, of which this is a manifestation.

I would like to be able to love my country and still love justice.

though flawed dramatic juxtaposition of two contemporary jungles . . ." Commonweal states that " 'The Pawnbroker' succeeds in its absorbing drama and thoughtful themes in making us pay attention to what's wrong today." It describes Sol as a misanthrope, a "living-dead man," embittered and guilty "because he survived." But Jesus "awakens Sol to the cry of anguish that may be the beginning of his return to life." The New Yorker magazine notes that "armored in unfeelingness . . ., he (Sol) has made himself unhumanly safe—safe even from death, which he would not lift a finger to delay." Finally, Time makes these comments: "The Pawnbroker" is "the grimmest movie of the year; yet the best of it burns into the mind." Sol is "an inconspicuous blob . . ."

Such are the nationally published opinions of this film. The campus feelings fall into several degrees: depressing; repulsive; stimulating; thought-provoking; too realistic; causing little feeling; realistic.

Whether or not your reaction to "The Pawnbroker" lies in any of the above categories, the movie definitely has a lasting and profound impact on the mind of any sensitive person. The reality in it is astounding.

THEATRE:

On Friday night, October 29, the Maryville College Playhouse season will begin with Arthur Miller's play, A View From the Bridge. In presenting this gripping drama of disguished love and undisguished hate, director Dalton Eddleman hopes to present not only entertainment to the Maryville campus, but also an art form that can be experienced by each individual who witnesses it.

Members of the cast are Diane Caylor, Carol Vandegriff, Philip DerPilbosian, Ron Fagan, Bob Harner, Jon Lutz, and David Nighbert.

A View From the Bridge will be Mr. Eddelman's first production for Maryville in a season which includes Shakespeare's Julius Ceasar and Barefoot in the Park.

SIG-THETA RUSH

The big Orange M worn on garnet sweaters by numerous members of our college community does not stand for Maryville and is not a symbol of athletic prowness. It simply means that such persons are members of the Murvul Koleg Mickey Mouse Club.

September 25th and 26th are designated on our college calendar as Theta Epsilon and Alpha Sigma Rush, or Mickey Mouse Club Comes to Maryville College. Theta's first activity will be a Tomorrowland Fashion Show, which will be staged in the jet-age parlor of Lloyd Residence on Monday evening. We hope that all forward-looking girls will attend—refreshments will be served, so avoid malnutrition and come on out. Mickey Mouse Club could never be complete without a Talent Round-Up. Theta and Sig will put on such a display Tuesday night for the entertainment and amusement of all. Join us in watching a coordinated physical education major tap dance, a treasurer twirl a baton, and many other amazing displays of talent. Dates will be arranged for all interested parties. Finally, following the show, journey to the Fantasyland Dance in the intramural gym with live music by Sig's Eleventh Plague Band.

Get in the swing of things as Mickey Mouse Club Comes to Maryville College. Join Theta Epsilon and Alpha Sigma in a real fun two days. Hope to see ya'll there.

BOYS AND GIRLS TOGETHER

NEW YORK, August 15 . . . According to a magazine article, college living habits have changed drastically over the past few years.

On campuses throughout the U.S., boys and girls, in ever increasing numbers, are living together as couples.

This is reported in the September "back-to-college" issue of Esquire, where for the first time in any major magazine, four campus couples are photographed in the houses where they live openly together.

The four couples in the feature are from Harvard, Cornell, Michigan, and Berkeley.

In Cambridge, Massachusetts, for instance, a Radcliffe coed, '67, moved off-campus with a Harvard student. The parents who knew made no objection: Harvard didn't seem to care and Radcliffe, because the coed was officially in residence at one of the dorms, didn't know.

Esquire reports the Harvard student as saying: "About a third of our friends are married, another third just live together, and the rest, well, are still looking for each other."

Both students, fully named, were photographed in their Cambridge apartment for the magazine.

Another couple, living two blocks off the campus of the University of Michigan share domestic responsibilities with another twosome in a six-room apartment in Ann Arbor. Like most college couples Esquire finds they have a casual relationship: marriage is not really a question yet.

The magazine, in its report on the new roommates, recalls that the traditional college roommate always had to be a 280-pound bathless behemoth chosen by a sadistic dean of admissions. If one tried to sleep, he snored; if one tried to study he played records, and by the end of the year a person really learned how to hate.

Today, the love generation is apparently changing all this. As the Cornell students put it, neither knows how long they will live under the same roof: marriage is only one of many possibilities.

Lindaman Addresses Convocation

Edward B. Lindaman, of North American Aviation and the Apollo Program, spoke to the Maryville College students and faculty at Convocation Friday morning at 9:50 in the Samuel Tindale Wilson Chapel on the campus.

In his speech, entitled "Beyond Technology," Mr. Lindaman mentioned the Apollo IV project—called "The Big Shot"—and made other statements concerning the advancement of technological power in many fields before he asked the questions: "Who does man think he is? Is man trying to play God, or is he responding to God?" Man, he said, has a "soaring and exploring spirit" because of his "creative insecurity." By thinking, man did away with "religious taboos" and, according to Mr. Lindaman, then realized there was a living God who allowed him the freedom to imagine. At this point, Mr. Lindaman suggested that "perhaps we face the new now." He lists three things which man sees in the world: "a new unity of knowledge," "a new quality of possibility," and a freedom creating new demands and responsibilities. Throughout the rest of his talk, Mr. Lindaman gave examples of words and phrases which may take on new meanings within the next ten to twenty years. Some of these are: DNA, automated farming, lazar, exobiology, salt water conversion, textile engineering, and others. The importance of these and other possible advances, Mr. Lindaman indicated, is that each improvement makes the rich people of the world richer and makes the poor people poorer, thus reviving a recurring question: Will the rich nations, like the United States, share their wealth with the poor nations? Mr. Lindaman reiterated here that responsibility must go hand-in-hand with knowledge and the possibility of more knowledge. "Technology," he said, "is not neutral . . . It must be mastered for the good of man." Man has the choice between "arrogant autonomy and love"; with freedom, he has response ability.

The questions he raised in his speech are not new to Mr. Lindaman. He coined the word theonetics (study of God in change) to focus attention upon the concept of consciously studying change and growth patterns and their affect upon the humanity of man. He has encouraged church leaders to enter into dialogue with the change makers of the nation. To this end, he has brought top executives of science, industry, education, and government into direct confrontation with leaders and theologians of several denominations in a series of nationwide theonetics symposiums.

In 1964, CBS television interviewed him on their Southern California series "The Creative People." At present he is serving as moderator of a second thirteen-week television series on ABC, Channel 7, Los Angeles, entitled "Rebels With a Cause." It is a weekly half-hour program featuring ten high school student discussing moral, ethical, and philosophical implications of current and future scientific discoveries. Mr. Lindaman conducted a similar television forum with six Maryville College students on WVIR Friday afternoon after speaking in Convocation that morning.

Program For Artist Series

The 1967-68 Maryville College Artist Series includes four diversified entertainment events within the next six months. The four performances are planned for the Samuel Tindale Wilson Chapel on the campus.

Miss Karen Roewade, soprano soloist, is scheduled to be the first performing artist. She will appear in a concert on Friday, October 6.

The highly acclaimed Curlew River Church Opera Group are planning to present their program on Sunday, October 29. This program replaces the Sunday night vesper service that night.

The nationally renowned New York Woodwind Quintet is scheduled to give a concert here on Thursday night, January 26.

The Norman Walker Dance Company, rated excellent for their television performances, completes the artist series here on Friday night, March 29.

Herring Appointed Director Of Information Services

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President, announced the appointment of James Richard (Dick) Herring as Director of Information Services for Maryville College.

Herring, a journalism graduate of Bowling Green (Ohio) State University, comes to the college from the Sears, Roebuck and Co. Group Office in Pittsburgh, Pa. He had been with the Sears organization for 15 years, serving as an Assistant Advertising Manager in Greensboro, N. C., and Charleston, S. C., before being promoted to Advertising Manager for the Youngstown, Ohio, store. After seven years in this position, he was promoted to the Group Office in Pittsburgh.

Prior to joining the Sears staff, Herring was a newspaper reporter and advertising salesman for the Roanoke Beacon in Plymouth, N. C., Wallace, N. C., Enterprise and the Bastrop, La., Clarion.

While in college, he was Sports Publicity Assistant and worked on the Dayton Journal and Minneapolis Star-Journal during the summer months. He was also sports editor of the university's weekly newspaper.

Mr. Herring's interest in sports permitted him to develop a most unusual hobby. He started collecting hobby cards on sports personalities, and now has a collection that contains over 200,000 cards housed in seventeen attache cases. The cards are the focal point of a talk he gives to civic clubs and other interested groups.

While in college, Herring was the baseball team manager and a member of the Varsity Club. He also belonged to ATO social fraternity, Theta Alpha Phi (dramatics) Fraternity, and Rho Sigma Mu (radio) Fraternity.

HOMECOMING INCLUDES PARENT'S WEEKEND

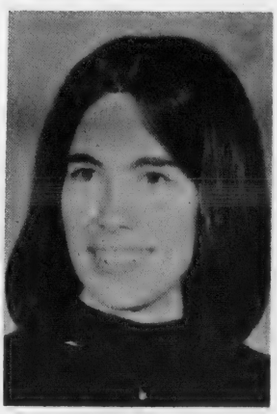
The biggest Homecoming in Maryville's history will be held on the weekend of October 20-22. This year, for the first time, a special Parent's Weekend is being incorporated into the traditional Homecoming program. Parents have been invited by mail to come and join their sons and daughters and the alumni for a weekend of information and enjoyment.

Events scheduled for Friday include open classes after lunch, at which time parents and alumni may sit in on any scheduled class. That evening the dining room will be opened to parents and alumni. Following supper, Student Government will sponsor a concert featuring Jay and the Americans.

On Saturday morning there will be a campus-wide Open House with faculty members of each department serving as hosts. The parade begins at 11:00 a.m., with lunch afterwards, at which time President Copeland will report to the alumni and parents and answer questions. Beginning at 2:30 p.m., the traditional Homecoming football game will be played, (Harding College is the opponent), followed by the Alumni Barbecue which this year is open to all alumni, students, and parents. That evening, The Maryville College Playhouse will present its first production of the year, "A View from the Bridge."

These and many more events should make Homecoming one of the high points of the college year. Students may want to personally urge their parents to mail the reservation form which they have already received.

MARYVILLE GRADUATE TO SERVE WITH VISTA



Katherine A. Brown, 6913 Benjamin St., McLean, Va., is now a Volunteer in Service to America and will spend the coming year working in the Virgin Islands with an education program for preschool children.

Small groups of Volunteers are sharing houses in different poverty-stricken areas throughout the Islands. The Volunteers conduct classes for pre-schoolers in the VISTA houses, giving children in the program experience of both school and home life. In addition to operating the pre-school program, Volunteers work with people in their communities on such projects as recreation for teenagers.

Along with 32 other Volunteers, Miss Brown, 21, did her VISTA training at the Virgin Islands Training Center in Frederiksted, St. Croix Island.

Miss Brown is a 1967 graduate of Maryville College where she majored in sociology. She is a graduate of McLean High School.

The Volunteer is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George K. Brown, 6913 Benjamin St., McLean, Va.

Clap...er, Creative Leisure Program

If you seem to be accomplishing little in your spare time and if you would like to challenge your creativity in a new field, then join the more than 300 members of the Maryville College faculty and student body who are participating in the newly formed Creative Leisure Activity Program.

The program is headed by Mrs. Carle M. Davis, who stated, "We want the students to learn how to use their time wisely and to benefit from their leisure time." Four other aims of this program are: to provide time and opportunity for discovery of one's untapped creativity and self-expression; to cultivate new interests which can become life-long hobbies; to encourage participation instead of spectatorship; and, to enjoy companionship with fellow students and faculty in sharing mutual interests.

THE WORDS OF THE PROPHET ARE WRITTEN ON THE SUBWAY WALL - GARFUNKLE

Editorial

Maryville College has changed: It's hard to believe, but Maryville is not the same staid, provincial, unenlightened, Victorian, church-related college—oh, it's still staid, provincial, unenlightened, Victorian, and church-related; but it's not the same. During the course of the vast revisions of the past year it was decided to examine that most touchy of campus issues: the discipline system. The thinking then was that the supposedly "total" person that Maryville was to turn out should be reasonably capable of maintaining order within the community. The archaic concept of in loco parentis seemed finally to be dead here in the Harvard of the South. But wait!

Unidentified forces have been at work insuring that our mommies and daddies here in our home-away-from-home would still be able to watch over us. Not only that, but through the magic of bureaucratic maneuvering the powers-that-be have managed not only to keep the power, but also to place the burden (and you had better believe that's just what it is) of enforcement upon the student body. How all this happened is somewhat of a mystery, but one thing is certain: the student judicial system which promised to be a vigorous, forward-looking method of maintaining discipline has had its very foundation shaken.

The judicial system was conceived as a student organization empowered to deal with infractions of college rules through a system of "courts" composed entirely of students. Central to this concept was the belief that in order to achieve student compliance with the rules it was first necessary for the students to be able to respect those rules—not necessarily agree with them in all cases, but at least to be assured that there was a certain amount of reason and fairness behind them. It was felt that the only way to insure this was to review systematically and completely all student regulations currently on the books at Maryville College. This review was to be done by a committee of faculty, administration, and students. It was hoped that from this would come a code of conduct that would be both acceptable by the administration and attainable by the students. Since such a review would entail a great deal of work, it was to be developed over the summer so that the student judicial system would be ready for operation this fall. So far, beautiful, but wait!

We return in the fall and, strangely, no rule revision. Oh, we still have a student judicial system—on paper. Technically it's a part of the new student constitution, but what we have now is an emasculated version of the original idea. Without the revamping of the rules, we are enforcing the administration's standards with our system. This is ridiculous. There are too many rules which need re-examination (but that's another editorial). The time has come for us to take a stand and refuse to support that which we have not had a part in formulating. We will still have to obey the rules; the powers-that-be have all the guns. But instead of a system based upon mutual trust we will be reverting to the division of the campus into the warring parties of faculty-administration versus student body with each group trying to control or invade the other.

The original plan for the judicial system declared, "The Student Government of Maryville College establishes a student judicial system because it feels itself capable of handling the responsibilities of self government for the student body. It feels the responsibility to maintain the standards which hold together such a community." The administration apparently does not believe us capable and merely wants the student judicial system to enforce standards which it has had no hand in determining. We must refuse to do so. If they want their rules enforced, let them enforce them. And in the process let's forget all talk about student responsibility and student-faculty-administration cooperation.

Like it or not the Maryville cloister is opening to the world, and the harsh realities of modern living just may invade our ivory towers. To encourage investigation (via a new curriculum) into all fields except these concerning rules of the college is extremely inconsistent. Certainly the administration can force us to obey regulations (through use of the old discipline committee which has been likened, perhaps not without reason, to the Salem witch trials) we find incongruous with the world outside these scared walls of ivy, and we can either give in or move on. The administration, however, has increasingly turned to cooperation rather than coercion when dealing with what must seem to them strange student demands. It is to be hoped that this attitude will be applied to the current problem. It's still not too late to reaffirm trust among all members of the community.

Timothy Leary

"A shower on the inside" is how a college girl described her experience of an LSD trip. This terrifying, strangely enticing world of hallucinatory drugs was the subject of a stimulating talk recently given by Dr. David Young in the Lantern. He began with a discussion of the divisions and properties of these drugs, passing into a reading of the poetry of Timothy Leary, the spokesman of the psychedelic crowd. The poetry spoke of the East, union with nature, and communion with psychic energies, and set a mood of quiet thought and introspection which gave a dim inkling of the kinds of experiences "trip-takers" claim to have.

However, LSD is unfortunately capable of causing personality disintegration and has moved from the area of a laboratory tool into the area of a social problem. This question of LSD and similar drugs is one which cannot be ignored. As Dr. Young said, "I agree with Dr. Lindaman's optimism about the technological advances he mentioned, but I am very pessimistic about the drug scene." He recommended two books which might provide useful background: LSD; Alpert, Cohen, Shiller; New American Library, 1966; $1.95. LSD: The Problem Solving Psychedelic; Stafford and Golightly; Award Books, 1967; 75c.

Letter to The Editor

Dear Editor:

The regrettable incident in the dining hall Sept. 21 was sobering to me as well as to many other people to whom I have spoken. The gratification of the hunger drive is important, granted, but when the crush of people forcing their way into the dining hall knocks someone to the floor and injures and frightens him, something is lacking in good breeding and good manners in the groups of students who eat there.

I have been listening to suggestions and ideas all day. Some people suggest two shifts at dinner, others recommend family style, still others advocate opening all three doors to the dining hall. In reality, the solution to the problem is none of these. The solution must come from the student body itself. Fortunately, the person knocked down was not injured badly, but such could easily have been the case. As I have said, it remains with the student body to deal with this problem as ladies and gentlemen.

Editorial

We have all marveled at the predictions and signs of the great advancement in our technical world. Surely there can be no greater miracles than three-dimensional light images or the humanitarian uses of infrared beams in medicine and agriculture. Truly the technical utopia is at hand and all can look forward to a long and enjoyable life . . . I think.

Can we really believe that man's seemingly unlimited mind can produce a society of coexistence and peace? Are there machines to right the social wrongs and moral deviations? What is the name of the machine or technology that can dispel the very human idiosyncrasies such as ethnocentrism. Can a robot with a "low I.Q." handle the problems of the humans with a low I.Q. Freshmen, can you conceive of some technical system to solve your problems of alienation?

Our modern technology is a necessity to our civilization. We are on the verge of great ventures into outer space and into our own inner space: the oceans. But we will always be plagued with those human problems that only the experience of another human being can understand. Philosophy, the Queen of sciences, and your noble court of the humanities we cannot forget you!

A Modest Proposal

Boy wonder of the pantagon Robert McNamara has announced that the U.S. will construct a "thin" anti-ballistic-missile (ABM) shield to protect against a possible nuclear attack by China in the 1970's. This will require about 6 years to build and will cost between 5 and 6 billions dollars (but it could easily go as high as 10 or 12 billion). Our principle of defense against the lean and hungry Orientals has here-to-fore been the concept of deterent, i.e., by an ever-increasing arsenal of super-kill weapons, we make an attack upon us appear so costly for an agressor that he will hesitate to commit himself (in other words, hit me and I'll beat the hell out of you).

Now, however, we are going to begin to rely upon a defensive as opposed to a potentially offensive system for protection. Incoming ICBM's will be spotted, tracked, and shot down by fantastically sophisticated anti-missile-missiles. This sounds great until one realize this thin shield would protect only against the crude weapons of the evil Chinese (as opposed to our "good" Chinese), while the missiles of the cunning Russians could still sneak through (white people are always better at making weapons).

So . . .

When this ABM system is finally constructed, great agitation will begin, crying for an extension of the system to guard against the Russians also. (An interesting point: the presently-projected system will protect our offensive weapons from destruction, but will do nothing to protect the civilian population—read the fine print, it's there.) This agitation has already begun in the persons of Senators Pastore, Anderson, and Jackson, and Presidential-hopefuls Reagan and Nixon. Their argument runs something like this: With a thin shield, a Soviet attack would kill 120 million, while a "thick" shield would lower this figure to 30 million and cost of mere $40 billion.

Even if we build this "thick" shield, however, our troubles are not over (oh, the problems of ruling this world correctly). The Russians would probably respond to this "thick" shield by building many more nuclear warheads and jump the death figure back to 120 million. Then we would have to increase our production and the race would be on; tensions would grow and our economy would be drained of domestic funding.

I would like to propose a simpler solution. The three involved nations, U.S., Russia, and China, should meet secretly and decide to discontinue weapon production. Then they should calculate what the probable results of all-out nuclear war would have been. Working on a percentage basis, they could easily determine equivalents in the other two countries for the U.S.'s 120 million probable casualties. Increasing taxes ostensibly to fund an ABM program, the three countries could salt away vast amounts of money. When the coffers are full they each would announce a lottery for every person over 26, the lucky winners to be liquidated to fill that country's quota of death. This may seem cruel, but there is a precedent in the proposed lottery for the draft. The result would be the same, but this time we would get the idiots who formulate our policy—not the kids. The $40 billion not used could then be divided equally among the 80 million survivors and we could rebuild this somewhat racked-up country. With a population of landed aristocrats, our city problems would be solved and also the poverty program could disappear.

Any day now I expect to turn on tv to see Lyndon . . . "My fellow Amuricuns, the Sec'tary of deefense and me decided . . ."

FORNICATION? NO, HELOISE!

Peter Abelard, the great scholastic theologian of the 12th century, is attributed with that unscholastic thought of his love affair with a brilliant 19 year old girl, Heloise. This existential expression survives the reformation. The following tells it how it is.

Though lovers be lost love shall not;
And death shall have no dominion.

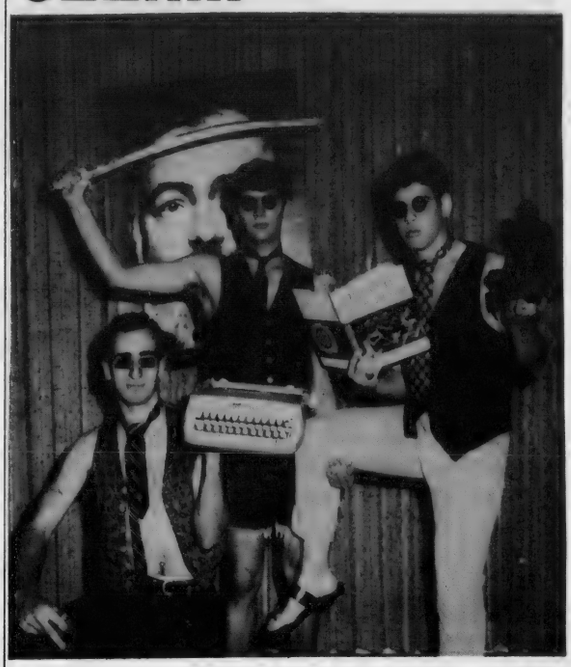
THE FRENCH GIRL
Ian Tyson — Sylvia Fricker



Three silver rings on slim hands wink,
Flash bright in candle light,
Til Sunday's early morn.
We found a room,
That rainy morning.
She took my hand through winding roads
And led me home.
Some red French wine
When late awaking,
In her own hideaway
She smiled and combed her hair.
We talked of all,
We talked of nothing.
I left with promises to meet,
She told me where.
But she laughed each time I asked her name,
Made promises to meet again,
But her friend down at the French Cafe,
Had no English words for me.
So you may find, above the border,
A girl with silver rings—I never knew her name.
You're bound to lose, she's too much for you
She'll leave you lost some rainy morn,
You won't be the same . . .
You won't be the same.

LETTERS, cont.

Dear Editor,

This notice is directed to the mismannered people who rushed into the door of the dining hall on September 21, 1967. I know you were all eager to get to your food and sample the delicacies spread before you, but did you have to trample one another and possibly seriously injure someone? I know we all rush for the great food, but think how it would be if you were not able to rush for all these delicious gormet delights. If you entered with an orderly fashion everything would move faster. And if you did this, there would be many untrampled people left to enjoy the delectable meals with you.

Negotiation Now!

"The present impasse can be broken and a halt put to the increasingly horrible slaughter and destruction of the Vietnam war only if one side or the other shows the wisdom and the courage and the compassion for humanity to take the initiative on a first step."

"A cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam is an imperative necessity to create conditions for peaceful talks."

U Thant, Secretary-General of the United Nations
March 28, 1967

* We support the call by U Thant for new initiatives to bring about negotiations among all parties to the conflict; leading to a political settlement of the Vietnam war.
* We call upon the United States, the most powerful nation in the world, to take the first step and end the bombing of North Vietnam now and without conditions. We ask our government to take further initiatives leading to a standstill truce.
* We ask North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front to respond affirmatively to any new United States initiatives and to join with the U. S. in a standstill ceasefire.
* We ask South Vietnam to respect and join in these steps.

This course of action presents to the United States a moral alternative to our stated policy of bringing about negotiations by force, or to the devastation of all-out war, and a more realistic alternative than unilateral withdrawal.
We believe that such initiatives now can break the impasse and lead to negotiations and a political settlement providing for the removal of all foreign troops and for genuinely democratic elections in which all South Vietnamese can participate freely.

Intramural Futbawl

The Maryville College Intramural Football Program started early this year due to the new curriculum. According to Coach J. D. Davis, the enthusiam this year is very high, but there is a definite lack of man power. Last year eight teams made up the intramural league; this year it has dropped to six.

This year's roster includes the Alpha Sigma Sledgehammers, Alpha Sigma Hammers, Independents, Kappa Phi Knights, Titans, and the 0-7-0's.

The Alpha Sigma Sledgehammers, three year intramural champions, may prove to be the powerhouse team this year. The Sledgehammers, with a well-rounded offense which can strike from anywhere on the field and a tough defense which gives ground grudgingly, make it difficult for all their opponents.

Possibly one team to challenge Sig's dominance will be the Independents. This team is made up of a host of returning flagballers who played together last year. Their strongest point so far this year seems to be their defense. This defense against Sig's offense should be the game of the season.

Another team that will make a strong bid for the league championship this year is the Kappa Phi Knights. This team, made up predominately of members of last year's wrestling squad, boasts a powerful running attack.

Rounding out the league are the Hammers, Titans and the 0-7-0's. Their lack of experience and team-play prohibit them from being strong contenders for the title.

The season is now underway. Come on out, pick your preference and PRAY for the team of your choice.

Burn, Baby, Burn

Sept. 20 — A fire in the rubbish chute of Dorm III sent students clad only in their frilly night things scurrying for safety. Upon investigation it was discovered that the fire itself was not proportional to the amount of smoke produced and that there was no danger to either Dorm or students. The Smokey the Bear squad of R.A.'s was in full control when the caped crusaders of the Maryville Fire Department (holy C02 extinguisher!) arrived. Damage was assessed at 39c, strained nerves, and loss of one hour of sleep.

Operating on a "no credit, no grade" basis, students are offered, under the leadership of faculty members and people in the Maryville community, leisure activities in the three general groups of performing arts, handcrafts and hobbies and outdoor living.

The individual programs are open to all Maryville students, until the average group minimum of 15 to 20 per group is reached. Most groups will meet once a week so that the activities will take little of the students' time. In some instances, fees will be charged for equipment and transportation, but membership in an activity group is free.

Activities in the performing arts include folk music, creative writing, and readers' theater. Under the leadership of Mr. Thomas and Mr. Cartlidge, folk music buffs can enjoy group singing and listening to recordings. This group meets one hour a week with 15 to 50 students. Members are encouraged to bring their own folk instruments. Those who would like to share their creative writing skills with others can do so in the creative writing group, lead by Dr. Davis and Mr. Mitchell. There is no fee for this 2 hour per week activity. The groups' maximum is 15. The readers' theater offers drama enthusiasts a chance to interpret drama as a reader-participant, under the direction of Mr. Eddleman and Dr. Carolyn Blair. There is no fee for participation in this 15 member activity which meets two hours a week.

Arts and craft, photography, sketching, and needlecraft are offered in the handicrafts and hobbies division. Groups of 15 for various arts and crafts are lead by Dr. Walker, Miss Lightfoot, Mrs. Carle Davis, Mrs. M. Davis, Mrs. Cate, Mrs. Shere, and Mrs. Crawford. Fees, time, and equipment differ for each craft. Those who enjoy photography or sketching can, under the leadership of Mr. Kinsinger, Mr. Swenson, and Mrs. Kardatzke, respectively, learn more about their hobbies. Both groups have a maximum of 15 students in each and require two hours a week. Knitting and crocheting, as the first phases of needlecraft activity, will be taught by Mrs. Largen, Miss Huddleston, Mrs. Campbell, and Mary Jo Messenger. Members of this group of 15 to 25 participants must supply their own equipment.

The outdoor living activities include hiking, lore of the Smokies, field and stream, and camping. There is no number limit for those interested in hiking in the surrounding areas of the Smokies, an activity which will include at least two or three hikes per term. Leaders of this group are Dr. Young, Miss Ingle, Dr. Case, Mr. McNiel, Mr. Ramager, and Mr. Dent. The beauty and historical sites of the mountains will be shown through films and field trips to members of the lore of the Smokies group. This activity is open for 25 students and is headed by Dr. Shields. Two all day fishing trips are planned for the 10 participants in the field and stream group, lead by Coach Tomlinson, Coach Kardatzke, and Dr. Parker. Individuals must furnish their own equipment. Coach Baird and Mr. Fleming are leaders of the camping group of 15 students who will spend one hour per week on camps and take three overnights during the year. Members must supply their own camping and hiking equipment.

When you're up, you're up,
And when you're down, you're down;
But when you're up against the Scots, you're upside down!!

"Blistering Jesus, burn our hearts..."

The crucial point in the life of man comes when he must decide he has courage to give himself to something. A man is that to which he is committed. Thus, Dr. Esther Swenson began the discussion Friday night at the UCCF Retreat. Serving with her on the panel were Mr. David Cartlidge, Dr. Randolph Shields, and Dr. Mark Davis.

In response to Dr. Swenson's statement, many queries were raised by panel members, faculty, and students: How free are we in making commitments? Are commitments made consciously? How does commitment relate to scientific inquiry? Can man change his commitment? Is there such a thing as Christian commitment?

Numerous ideas were discussed in regard to these questions. Man is free to make a commitment although various factors are involved, including goals, motivations, and past experiences. When man becomes aware of these factors, he is free to respond any way he chooses. Without freedom, there is no commitment.

Many people commit themselves unconsciously. As man understands himself, he realizes what he has committed himself to unconsciously and decides whether or not he is ready to make a conscious commitment.

In science the concept of commitment is translated to humanism. Man is the only creature that knows he knows. Thus, he learns to recognize the problems, commits himself to this recognition and then does something about it; he must be committed in order to make the proper decisions. Between decisions man can analyze himself thereby conditioning himself to future situations.

Commitments are constantly changing, yet man is always committed. The uncommitted man has no reason to live. Life becomes a constant battle.

There is no such thing as "Christian commitment," for Christians are committed to many things. A Christian is aware that God is real, but since there is no singular belief, he can be committed to many realities. A central concept is difficult to find, because Jesus can be confronted in many ways. The solution to this problem is to confront oneself with Jesus, allow the confrontation to be attractive, and then make a decision.

Although no solution to the problem of commitment was reached, many ideas were presented for individual inspection. The question remains: Are you willing to commit yourself?

Scots Open With Tough Loss

The 1967 version of the Maryville College football team opened a tough nine game schedule at Hampden-Sydney, Virginia, September 16, suffering a tough 14-10 defeat.

After the opening kickoff, Maryville moved into Hampden-Sydney's territory drawing first blood when place-kicking specialist, Jim Cannon, booted a 40 yard field goal. The first-rate blocking of tackles Dennis Shockley and Walter Saz, guards John Forgety and Cole Piper, and center Dwight Reagan allowed halfbacks David Garner and Lynn Dodez to slash through Hampden-Sydney's defense in the first half. Fullback Alex Robins also exhibited great running power showing why he is considered one of the top small college runners in the South. Quarterback Harvey Crabtree displayed poise in his throwing to freshmen ends, again in the second quarter scoring a touchdown on a Crabtree to White 15-yard pass.

Hampden-Syndey then scored in the second quarter and made a 2 point conversion cutting the score to 10-8 at halftime. In the second half, the Scots could not keep a sustained drive going. They moved the ball for 2 or 3 first downs, then were forced to punt. Hampden-Sydney counted the deciding touchdown in the third quarter giving them their final 14-10 margin.

This year's team lost its opener, but it showed the fans plenty. The defense, while having trouble adjusting to Hampden-Sydney's power sweeps, gave the Virginians plenty of trouble. The defensive unit twice stopped Hampden-Sydney inside the Scot's 10 yard line. Linebackers Bill Carkhuff and Rocky Brown along with the defensive secondary of Steve Dockery, Ralph McCampbell, and Bob Cicottii shut off the opponent's passing game. Alert defense found the Scots intercepting one pass and recovering two fumbles.

After the game, Hampden-Sydney's Athletic Director and several of its players complimented the Scots for their hard hitting and hustle. The Scots are big, rugged, and hard hitting. With experience, a few breaks, and barring injury, this team could vastly improve Maryville's football fortunes.

1967 Grid Prospects

The start of another year of school brings out the perennial question, "How does the football team look?" In answer Head Coach Howard "Monk" Tomlinson says we have "the best offensive and defensive starting teams in the past three years."

With twenty-six returning players, twenty of them lettermen, Maryville fans can look forward to an exciting and hopefully winning season. Last year's team, 65% freshmen, has gained experience, a valuable weapon in rolling up victories.

This season's offense looks more promising than ever. Harvey "Butch" Crabtree should be a great asset at quarterback. He has had two years experience as a back-up man and shows wonderful passing potential. We will be able to rely on two promising freshmen, Kenney Lane and Don Kid, to back up Crabtree. Fred Rose will also be used as a quarterback replacement although he is a fine starting halfback. All of these men have good passing ability.

For fine offensive running we can count on Lynn Dodez as halfback and Alec Robbins as fullback. Both are bigger and tougher this year and are sure to barrel their way to the end zone for game winning points. Filling in on the outside running attacks will be Dave Garner and John Klein, both tailbacks. Their speed and ability are blue chip stock for the Scots.

This year our offensive line is not only heavier but taller, especially with the addition of Dennis Shockley, a junior transfer who is the biggest man on the team, towering 6' 3" and weighing an aggressive 225 pounds. His size and ability at tackle has vastly improved our interior line potential.

At end we can count on not only the returning regulars but also two freshmen, Brad Beck and Richard White who show great ability and skill in the receiving department.

Defensively the team shows good signs. With Bill Carkhuff calling the defensive signal we hope for a good showing. Bill is one of the best of the Scots and is an excellent candidate for Little All American honors. With defensive greats such as Cole Piper, Wally Saz, W. N. "Dub" Osborne, Dean Bercaw, Joe Dawson, and John McLaughlin chewing up the opponents offensive attempts, the future looks bright. With returning backup men like Bob Mitchell at guard and Edward "Rocky" Brown at center, the Maryville fans can count on good reserve power.

In addition to the regular offensive and defensive teams, Maryville has two good kicking specialists. Jim Cannon was second in scoring last year; he missed only one extra point and was four for five in field goal attempts. Jim also does a good job at kickoff time and shows possibility as a reserve punter. David Garner, our punting regular, averaged 391 yards in 61 punts as a freshman. Coach Tomlinson rates Dave as one of the South's top ten kickers.

Beside good freshmen additions to the team we have also added two coaches to our regular line up of Coach Tomlinson and Coach Kardatzke. Mike Dalton will be helping Coach Kardatzke in the backfield and will work with the ends. This is Mike's second season as an assistant. He was captain of Maryville's 1965 football team, and he knows his business well. Our other addition is Don Elia who played for the Scots in '59, '60, and '61. He has returned to Maryville to finish his degree and is lending a hand with the football team. We know these two added assistants will help the team work out its problems and lead us to a winning season.

All tolled the team looks good this year and shows excellent chances of rolling up a winning season. Let's all turn out to see the Scots and give them all our support.

A complete fact book about the Maryville Scots can be purchased at the games from the M Club. It contains complete thumbnail sketches of the coaches and team, facts about our opponents, and the vital statistics on the players.

Maryville's away games may by viewed the Monday following the game on Channel 2 at 7:30 P.M.

Miss Roewade Appears at MC

"I've come because music is my world — but it's your world, too."

These were the words of Karen Roewade, affiliated artist from Maryville College for the Affiliated Artists Series, as she presented the weekly convocation last Wednesday morning.

Miss Roewade, after being introduced by Dr. H. H. Harter, opened her program with an aria from La Boheme by Puccini. In a humorous and informative speech, Miss Roewade said that she had chosen the selection because it is typical of the sensitivity of a good operatic work. She went on to explain the theme of the opera, which concerned the love affair of a young seamstress and a poet.

The soprana, in speaking of modern opera, defined opera as "artistic translation of human experience and emotion." She stressed that people today emit only "candy bar emotions," and that good opera can stir the real emotions. She proceeded to produce these emotions with another aria from La Boheme.

In telling of her career, Miss Roewade said that it required control, experience, and the withstanding of pressures; the same requirements of any career. The result of working in opera is communication which takes one beyond his own experience and yet, which is understandable.

The artist's third selection was from an American opera, Porgy and Bess. Before closing withsuitably for the "Scots" school a Scottish ballad,-Miss Roewade re-stated her purpose: "I don't think you can live without music and I'm here to see that you know you can't."

Besides her appearance in convocation, Miss Roewade presented a concert for the Maryville College artist's series, and participated in personal and group discussion groups on campus.

Miss Roewade, a graduate of Northwestern University School of Music in 1961, has appeared on network television programs, in New York opera productions, and in concert performances. She has completed a year of graduate study in voice at Boston University. Her teachers have been Lili Chookasian and Sebastian Engleberg.

Her television work with NBC Opera ranges from Menotti's "Labyrinth" and "Amahl and the Night Visitors," to the Bach "St. Matthew Passion." She also appeared in the Hallmark Hall of Fame production of "Cry of Angels."

Her work in opera includes roles in the Boris Goldovsky Opera Theater and with the North Shore Friends of Opera in Queens, New York. She has appeared at the Chautauqua Summer Opera Festival and with the Metropolitan Opera Studio, and was a member of the resident opera quartet of the Green Mansions Summer Theater.

Miss Roewade was a soloist with the Master Institute Chorus and Orchestra and with the Choral Symphony Society, and has a number of successful solo recitals and concert appearances to her credit. She won the Liederkranz Society Annual Contest in 1964, and was awarded a Rockefeller Foundation Grant the same year; and in 1965 she won the New York Singing Teacher's Annual Contest in the Young Artist Division.

Roles she has performed include Jenny in "Down in the Valley," Dinah in "Trouble in

Jay and Americans To Perform

Ticket sales are underway for Maryville College's first "Pop" Concert of the year to be held Friday night, October 20, as part of the College's biggest Homecoming program in the school's history.

Jay and the Americans, popular television and recording stars, will perform at the College Chapel in this Homecoming event sponsored by the College Student Council.

Alan Cropper, Junior from Wilmington, Delaware, is chairman of the ticket sales.

Tickets may be purchased at Minton's in downtown Maryville, at Hitch's in Midland Shopping Center or the booth in front of the Bookstore on the Maryville College Campus. Ticket prices include $3, $2.50, and $2 per person.

Lots of guys born in desperate poverty lower their horns and break through the jungle to find recognition and face — some finding partners along the way with whom they can share the spotlight. But Jay and the Americans share between them the satisfaction of realizing an ambition that began together as kids in New York, and that has blossomed together as adults in the entertainment world. They played on the streets of Brooklyn and ran together in gangs where street fights and trouble with the local police were common-place, but at night when they sat around on the stoops of the tenements they sang together, and there the seed of their ambition was planted. Their voices blended beautifully together, many times causing strangers to stop and listen. They found they shared the same enthusiasm for singing, and the same conviction that Amercia offered unlimited opportunities for all who were willing to work — and, they were willing.

Honaker Club Plans Exciting Bowl at Maryville, Nov. 17

The Honaker Club is making plans for the annual Honaker Bowl Football game to be played on Honaker Field at Maryville College, Friday, November 17, at 7:30 p.m.

This year's contestants will be two champion high school teams, rather than the Maryville College eleven and a college opponent as in previous Honaker Bowl encounters.

The Champion of the Chilhowee High School Conference will be the host gridiron team. Plans call for the selection of a visiting team from the state as a worthy opponent.

Competing schools of the Chilhowee Conference are Alcoa, Everett, Lenoir City, Loudon, Maryville, and Sevierville. The teams that are selected, and all other conditions under which this postseason tilt is scheduled will be governed by the rules and regulations of the Tennessee Secondary School Athletic Association. The game was approved by the TSSAA in a letter from A. F. Bridges, Executive Secretary of the Association.

All proceeds of the contest are to be placed in the Honaker Memorial Scholarship Fund. The Honaker Club desires that academic-athletic scholarships from this fund be awarded to eligible high school athletes from the schools represented in the Chilhwoee Conference.

The fund now has a balance of $19,000, but needs another $6,000 to activate it, according to Mose Gamble, Club President. The objective is to raise fund from the game.

The Honaker Club sponsors an Awards Banquet, immediately following the game. Guests of honor will be the players, coaches, managers, athletic directors, principals, and superinteednnts of each competing school.

Presentation of bowl trophies will be made to each team, one for the winner, and one for the loser. These trophies are permanently retained by each school. In case of a tie, each squad receives a trophy of equal size and will be recognized as co-winners.

Channel 2 Television: Focus on Maryville College

For several weeks now, WSJK-TV, educational Channel 2 in Knoxville, has been presenting programs dealing with the new Maryville College. The program series, entitled "Focus on Maryville College," serves a twofold purpose. It serves the educational needs of the area by presenting programs of a higher quality than those normally received, and it enhances the image of Maryville College—the true image of what this college is and what it does.

Under the direction of Mr. Arthur F. Dees, the following aspects of Maryville have been televised: "Why Maryville College?," utilizing the college film; a program explaining the new curriculum; a presentation of the life and work of Carl Sandburg; and excerpts from Dr. Ferenc Nagy's Convocation address, followed by a discussion of his topic by Dr. Arthur Ainsworth, Dr. Ralph Collins, and Dr. Boyd Daniels. In the weeks to come many other happenings of importance at Maryville will be televised. On October 10, the creative activities program will be discussed; Dr. Edward B. Lindsman's discussion with a panel of six students will be shown on October 17, in color. On October 24, Jim Reynolds, Al Keim, David Rugh, and Dr. E. Fay Campbell will present the past summer project in India, followed on October 31 with a program in color featuring Charles Malik, former President of the U.N. General Assembly. On November 7, Mr. Bill Fleming will discuss the Sesquicentennial Year 1969-1970, and the Development program. Following on November 14, Chuong, former ambassador from Vietnam to the United States will be presented, in color, and on November 21, Miss Karen Roewade will be featured in a color presentation.

Mr. Dees wishes to emphasize that any suggestions from any students will be greatly appreciated, and that if any student is interested in writing a television program for this series, he would be glad to talk with him. Mr. Dees has an office on second floor of the chapel.

Editorial

"The purpose (of Maryville College) is the pursuit of truth in concept and in life." This sentence taken from our revised statement of purpose magnificently opens the way for members of this community to begin their explorations for the highest meaning in life. We members of the academic world are in the unique position of being able to devote our entire energies to this pursuit for truth. To give less than our total selves to this search would be to deny the purpose of education in general, and Maryville College in particular. The academic atmosphere at Maryville is both challenging and invigorating. Our new curriculum, a rededicated faculty, and an increased student awareness have combined to make the academic pursuit of truth a vigorous reality at last. It is indeed unfortunate that the same cannot be said for all aspects of college life.

We as students come to Maryville hoping to benefit from the vast knowledge, wisdom, and experience of the faculty and administration. We want an education as that we are able to discover the tools for our own pursuits. Academically, we receive from Maryville both statements of truth and the right to question the validity of these statements. This is true education. Socially, however, we receive statements of truth and then are denied the right to question. Dogmas are handed to us and we are expected to see the essential goodness of these statements and are to follow them unquestioningly. This is not education; it is training.

Again looking at the statement of purpose, we find, "An education that truly liberates involves full and free exploration." In my youthful naivete I would expect this to apply to the total life of the college and to the "total man" we hear so much about. In the realm of Maryville social life, however, this full and free exploration is interpreted to mean accepting established regulations without the opportunity for experience and testing. This attitude of prohibition in certain areas may work (however, see "Where is Eliot Ness . . .") but is it conducive to an educational experience? There are fantastically complicated forces operating to disrupt life in our society, i.e., alcohol, drugs, the "new" sexual morality, and others, and it is the College's right—in fact its responsibility—to see that we face our society prepared to cope with these problems. At the same time, the College has the right to legislate concerning the conduct of students while they are on this campus. The hangup is, however, that Maryville has been abrogating its responsibility to educate us to the potential dangers of these disruptive forces while at the same time forcing us to conform to the College's standards at all times.

We want to be shown—get us the best lecturers available, prepare reading lists, establish discussion groups, talk to us individually—but we don't want to be denied our right to question. Show us the dangers of those activities the administration considers ill-advised, but don't legislate against our right of experimentation when we are off Maryville College property and when our activity is not disruptive to the campus.

This is all very basic to the concept of education. Maryville can attempt to be very Pavlovian in its approach to the social issues, ringing its bell of alcoholism and having us respond, "Alcohol is bad. I will not drink." This is again training rather than education. What happens, however, when we leave Maryville to face the harsh realities of the ringing of society's many bells?

The statement of purpose affirms, "The curriculum is designed to equip him (the student) to think and act with independence, imagination, and sound critical judgement . . ." Why should the academic side of the college have such freedom and the social side be so restricted? Certainly Maryville must set standards of conduct conducive to the maintance of this community (although it might be argued that there is a certain wisdom in allowing students to help in formulating these regulations), but the rigid structuring of a student's off-campus activities does nothing but point out the hypocrisy in the College's stated purpose. There must be some opportunity for individual decision after the College has attempted to present what it considers the answers to social issues. If Maryville College feels it is necessary to reach out to control the student outside this community, then it is perhaps time to re-examine the adequacy of our educational methods.

Tie?

Tie? What's that you say, tie? What do you mean? Surely the students of the tuned-in, turned-on generation really like talking ties. A low murmur of discontent from the upperclassmen? Yes, but did you hear the freshmen laughing?

Of course I know it was chapel, tie. What better time for me to amuse and entertain the kiddies? No, tie, I know chapel is not vaudeville, it's a time for corporate worship when the whole college community can meet for meditation and inspiration. That's why it is compulsary. Tie, I certainly don't see anything out of place in my talking to you there. Disrupt the service? No, of course not. I'm sure Pete didn't mind. Anyway, he's just a student and I'm sure he was amused like all the rest. Certainly tastes change . . . What do you mean a generation gap?

Letters to the Editor

The Disinherited and the Unidentified
Dear Al,

Who is -M? "The Disinherited" issue no. 1 is a throught-provoking piece of poetry, but why are the Echo readers deprived of the knowledge of its author? Who or why is -M hiding? Let him (or her) come out into the open for his just due—praise or censure. If dialogue is important, then it is important to know who "to dialogue with."

Sincerely,
Dr. Young
Box 2894

Mr. Mitchell replies:

I can't offer much of a dialogue since I readily agree with Dr. Young's objections, and I can offer only a weak explanation. I was aware of my own dilemma when I requested anonymity. It was a conflict between my belief in responsibility and my fear of embarrassment. As soon as one puts an idea or an emotion in poetic form, he subjects himself to severe prejudice and a very high standard of judgment; the form conspicuously announces that the expression pretends to be poetry, that it wants to be art. As I told the editor beforehand, for the content I am ready to identify myself upon request; for the form I prefer to remain anonymous.

This is a filler.

Where Is Eliot Ness When We Really Need Him?

We are now five weeks into the problem. One half of our first of three terms has passed and still we have heard of no attempt to alleviate the situation. What is this problem? It can be presented this way: if the present rules prohibiting the use of alcohol on campus were enforced, our Saturday nights would no longer be boring. Scenes out of The Untouchables would be recreated with the full excitement of our bygone prohibition era. The Feds in their green Ford pickups would be in hot pursuit of the runners on their silver Schwinn English racers.

What do I mean if the present rules prohibiting the use of alcohol on campus were enforced? I mean that the rules that we now have on the books are not followed to the full extent but are rather passively enforced to the point of neglect. These rules are not respected because they are not enforcd. (see first Editorial)

It has been five weeks and nothing has been done to settle this pressing problem. There are rules, but they are not enforced. So in five weeks the freshmen on our campus find that there is no real risk in breaking the written laws concerning alcohol and so the laws are broken. Even a naive Maryville College student could see, after the first two weeks of school, an inebriated person staggering about his Saturday night social business. Any men's dorm, on any weekend, may emanate olfactory sensations of Anheuser-Busch. Does Anderson Hall realize this?

The Administration was told of the extent of on-campus drinking at the end of last year. The reaction was disbelief. The Administration must be told again this year before we move on any further. The use of alcohol is extensive. Any Sunday morning survey of trash cans will prove this. Any Saturday night stroll into a residence hall will verify this. And now it can be seen, by all who will open their eyes to the reality of this problem, that alcohol is now used on a weekend basis by the Class of 1971.

The answer to the problem is a new set of realistic laws by which the student body may live. These laws must be respected by the majority of the students and must be realisticly acceptable to the Administration. Mutual respect and candid honesty is indicated and must be demanded by both parties. We can not go any further into the year with these ambiguous or unenforced rules in existence. The use of alcohol by college students does not have to be a problem, but it can be a problem when it is abused by the irresponsible student when he is not guided or forced by realistic administration and student body generated rules.

We as students must be educated concerning the use of alcohol. We as a college must have a set of mutually acceptable rules, and those rules must be enforced. This has to be done NOW.

Editorial

Maryville is changing, a recent editorial in the Echo notwithstanding, and part of that change is the new spirit being fostered at the college. The spirit of community is replacing the spirit of family of an earlier Maryville. The latter spirit, with its image of the faculty and administration as benevolent, all-wise parent and the student as obedient, unquestioning child, is giving way to a spirit of cooperation between faculty and student. Though not equals, both view themselves as searchers; both share the same vision, a common concern, a mutual willingness to gladly learn and gladly teach. This new spirit was the keynote of Dean Daniels' opening convocation address.

The spirit of community is welcomed by most at Maryville. With its new opportunities, however, community introduces new responsibilities. An excellent case in point is the college ruling on alcohol. In the spirit of community the ruling has been rewritten to explain the reasoning back of the college's position. Sociological and medical studies have shown that alcohol is "detrimental to the standards of group living." In the interest of the community of learners "the use or possession of such beverages is not permitted" the student at Maryville College.

In the spirit of community the Maryville student should accept the college's position on alcohol. But the new ruling asks more than student acceptance. In calling for the good of the group, the new ruling would seem to include the larger Maryville community.

If, as the new ruling explains, alcohol is "detrimental to . . . group living and academic achievement," is it not also a peril to the Maryville faculty, staff, and administration? Or must we be forced to an Orwellian position that at Maryville College all are community, but some are more community than others?

—Dr. Mark Davis

We're Sorry

The Highland Echo wishes to make an addition to those students mentioned in the last issue as having made Dean's List. Inadvertantly little Dougie Gamble was omitted. The entire staff would like to make known its heartfelt apology to our beloved student body president.

Students will have a unique opportunity to learn about the rewards, and hazards, of a professional career in the performing arts.

Aside from her major responsibility in the academic program, Miss Roewade will be presented in College performances, with the Maryville College Choir, as a soloist in special productions, and in religious programs and vespers services.

Another major area, which is part of the Affiliate Artists program, will allow Miss Roewade to be a representative of the College in the community, where she will be available for programs in the public schools, and with church, civic, and other groups. She will also serve, during the time she is pursuing her own career and is not on the Maryville campus, as an official ambassador for the College.

Murvul Racks Up First Win

Under the leadership of Butch Crabtree; behind a strong running attack provided by the entire offensive backfield and backed up by the stingy Scot defensive platoon, Maryville College rolled to it's first victory of the year over Mars Hill, 7—0. Maryville scoring came on it's first offensive series of downs. The Scots marched 50 yards in seven plays and the touchdown came as John Klein skirted left end and romped 23 yards for the score. Jim Cannon converted the extra point attempt and the Scots led 7—0.

The offensive unit dominated play in the first half and the defense held Mars Hill scoreless. A rejuvenated Mars Hill squad took the field in the second half and drove inside the 10 yard line twice, but failed to tally a score. In the fourth quarter an apparent Mars Hill touchdown was called back because of an offensive holding penalty.

Linebacker and defensive signal-caller Bill Crakhuff, who led the defense in individual tackles, along with Paul Grice, W. N. Osborne, and Joe Dawson, stood out defensively and along with the rest of the defensive unit held the Lions to 8 first downs and 91 yards gained on the ground. The Mars Hill aerial attack was a few yards more potent than their running game, but neither was enough to put them on the scoreboard.

Aside from the called back touchdown the only other real threat to paydirt came when Tommie Nix intercepted a Crabtree pass and returned it 54 yards to the Scot 14, where he was stopped by the last man, Butch Crabtree. Then the defense took over and held.

Klein's touchdown jaunt of 23 yards and Dave Garner's sweep around right end for 25 yards in the closing minutes of the third quarter were the long runs for Maryville.

BIG 63

John Forgety, a Physical Education major and co-captain of Maryville's football team, hails from Strawberry Plains, Tennessee. His football record includes two years in junior high, four years in high school, and now well into his fourth year of college ball as a strong side offensive guard. His sports interest also centers on wrestling, which he hopes to participate in this year, after being idle since his freshman year.

John's comments on the team as a whole were of high praise. The team is hard-working and possesses a good attitude towards its upcoming acton on the field.

Considering the offense, Forgety felt it was strong and highly capable of scoring from any position on the field. In addition, the offense is able to spring its runner loose. In his opinion, the passing attack itself has been executed well. Pass completion was above average in the Hampton-Sidney game, 11 for 15; but it was below average in the Georgetown game, 11 for 24. Forgety feels the running game has been exceptionally strong from tackle to tackle.

Speaking in turn on the defense, he stated that this year's team has "the toughest goal line defense I've seen in four years." The defense is especially tough on runs up the middle and inside the ends. The secondary line has yet to be beaten deep by an opposing receiver. Forgety continues to praise the defense, especially acclaiming good linebackers, good lateral movement to the outside, and a very strong noseguard position.

Considering the kicking aspect, he states that Maryville has a first-rate place kicker who is able to achieve a field goal inside the 40 yard mark. Maryville's punter is capable of executing a 42 yard average punt.

The team this past week has concentrated its practice on fundamentals. The team has exhibited "lots of hustle" and expects high results on the upcoming games, with special efforts to be made against rival Carson-Newman.

Scots Whomped By Wasps

Coming off a win at the expense of Mars Hill, the Maryville 11 ran in to unexpectedly heavy resistance at Emory and Henry and was throttled 35-7. The Wasps dominated all phases of the game, stopping the Scotty attack while ripping the Maryville defense with a well balanced offense.

For the first time this year the Maryville defense was not able to control the pace of the game. Ripped by both passing and running, the team lacked the spark it had shown in earlier action. An exception to the general letdown was the play of Bill Carkhuff, junior linebacker, who played his usual fine game.

It is hoped that this one bad game will not affect the spirit for the rest of the year.

WELCOME ALUMNI AND PARENTS

HOMECOMING BEGINS

Today begins the biggest Homecoming in Maryville's history. This year, for the first time, a special Parents' Weekend is being incorporated into the traditional Homecoming program.

Events scheduled for this afternoon include open classes that parents and Alumni may sit in on. The dining room will open to parents and alumni for a special "home cooked" meal. Tickets for parents and alumni will be sold at the door. After the evening meal there will be a popular concert in the Chapel featuring "Jay and The Americans."

On Saturday morning there will be a campus-wide Open House with faculty members of each department serving as hosts. The parade begins at 11:00 a.m., with lunch afterwards, at which time President Copeland will report to the alumni and parents and answer questions. Beginning at 2:30 p.m., the traditional Homecoming football game will be played, followed by the Alumni Barbecue which this year is open to all alumni and parents. Students have been given tickets to the barbecue for the first time and this meal will replace the sack supper. That evening, the Maryville College Readers Theater will present readings based on college experiences from the works of Thurber, Wolfe, Whitman, Benchley, and others.

The weekend activities will end on Sunday with church, dinner, special music presented by the national music fraternities Phi Mu Alpha and Delta Omicron, Mu Alph and Delta Omicron, and the Sunday evening Vesper program. The participants in the special music program are: Edwin Best, Joe Henry, Frank Wilson, Chuck Davies, Marcia Newlin, Patsy Lavender, Carolie Fischer, Rachel Wood, Marguerite Sims, and Alice Junkin.

Nancy Ryan

Four Member Court Chosen

Patti Feller, senior psychology major, has been chosen by the student body to be the Queen of the 1967 Homecoming festivities. The Homecoming court will consist of four senior girls: Anita Emerick, Danielle Markley, Judy Morris, and Nancy Ryan.

The election was held October 17 after nominations were made in a student body meeting the previous evening. Doug Price, student body vice-president was in charge of conducting the elections.

The Queen and her court will receive an all-expense-paid tour of downtown Maryville Saturday morning in the annual homecoming parade. The girls will then be escorted to the afternoon football game, where they will be presented to the student body at halftime.

Patti's hometown is Donville, New Jersey while those of her court are as follows: Anita Emerick-Greenfield, Ohio; Danielle Markley—Cincinnati, Ohio; Judy Morris—Windser, New Jersey; and Nancy Ryan—Louisville, Kentucky.

The entire College congratulates these worthy representatives and wishes them an exciting weekend.

Sesquicentennial Symbol To Be Unveiled

The Sesquicentennial Symbol reflects the aspiration of Maryville College to be a community built upon a single commitment, dedicated to a single purpose. The commitment is to the Christian faith; the purpose is the pursuit of truth.

This commitment is symbolized by the sun, which from the dawn of human consciousness has suggested to man the creative and guiding force at the center of an orderly universe. To the early Christian the sun became a symbol of Christ Himself; and universally it has come to carry complex implications of creativity, love, wholeness, and intellectual and spiritual strength. The purpose—the pursuit of truth—is symbolized by the traditional lamp of knowledge which is reshaped to a new design, the "M," representing the spirit of Maryville; with a flame at its top, representing the contribution of one institution to the perpetuation of the search for truth.

In essence, the eternal rays of the sun, which form the background, symbolize the basic assumption at Maryville that God is the ultimate source of truth; while the modern lamp of knowledge, properly set in the center of the design, symbolizes the intellectual and spiritual light which the College has kept burning for 150 years.

A replica of the symbol will hang in the Dining Hall during Homecoming Weekend.

Staff Welcomes Visitors

With this homecoming issue of the Highland Echo we of the student body would like to welcome both the returning alumni and the parents to Maryville College. We are sure that you will notice many physical changes on the campus. New to most of the alumni are the three modern, air-conditioned dorms. The massive brick structure rising next to Baldwin Hall is also an impressive addition. Certainly this Sutton Science Center seems a superly stupendous structure. (To many of us who have been watching its construction it has appeared that the builders have been trying to finish it for homecoming.)

It is hoped, however, that the less tangible changes at Maryville will not go unnoticed. For all of us, 1967 is the year of the new curriculum. Maryville has never lacked great educators or far-sighted leaders; now administration, faculty, and student body are linked within an educational program second to none in the country. This curriculum, coupled with an increased dedication on the part of all members of the college community, could remove all limits from the potential of Maryville College.

Albert Camus said, "Greatness consists in trying to be great. There is no other way." This is the mission which we who are a part of Maryville College have before us—to become truly great as an educational institution. We are on the threshold now; not to forge ahead would be to deny our ability. A Maryville education has always merited great respect in academic circles, and before us now stretches an even more impressive future. We must all be dedicated to this pursuit of excellence as a college. Greatness is within our grasp; we must reach out and take hold of it.

We ask those of you who visit our campus this weekend to try to become absorbed in the spirit of change at Maryville. Look for more than new buildings, for a college transcends its physical plant. Examine a renewed sense of intellectual searching and direction. Read the revised Statement of Purpose of Maryville College, a challenging and exciting foundation for a growing institution. And when you leave the campus take an alive concern for Maryville with you. We are all involved in this process of growth together: you are our heritage and we are your future.

A DAY IN THE LIFE
by John Lennon

I read the news today oh boy
About a lucky man who made the grade
And though the news was rather sad
Well I just had to laugh
I saw the photograph.
He blew his mind out in a car
He didn't notice that the lights had changed
A crowd of people stood and stared They'd seen his face before
Nobody was really sure
If he was from the House of Lords.
I saw a film today oh boy
The English Army had just won the war
A crowd of people turned away
But I just had to look
Having read the Book.
I'd love to turn you on
Woke up, fell out of bed,
Dragged a comb across my head
Found my way downstairs and drank a cup,
And looking up I noticed I was late.
Found my coat and grabbed my hat
Made the bus in seconds flat
Found my way upstairs and had a smoke,
Somebody spoke and I went into a dream
I read the news today oh boy
Four thousand holes in Blackburn,
Lancashire
And though the holes were rather small
They had to count them all
Now they know how many holes it takes to fill the Albert Hall.
I'd love to turn you on

Dear Editor,

With regard to the "Negotiation Now!" campaign being conducted on campus and being supported by the newspaper, I think that it is important that we consider the nature of the war being fought. According to theories furthered by Arnold Toynbee in an interview in Playboy Magazine and Edwin O. Reischauer, former ambassador to Japan, in Look, the aggression in Viet Nam is not based on communist expansion from Red China, but on communist expansion from North Viet Nam. The drive behind the North Vietnamese policy is one of nationalism and has been since 1945. Ho Chi Minh wants a unified state and has been fighting for it for twenty years. The North Vietnamese will continue the war until the country has been unified or they are unable to function militarily.

We must accept the fact that any negotiation will be one-sided, as one-sided as the decision to divide the country in 1954, at the 17th parallel. The nationalistic north continued to harass the south then, and it would now. If we cease the bombing and fighting, it will leave the door open for the Viet Cong, Pathet Lao, and government troops to continue their aggression in the south with Sino-Soviet economic and military aid.

If the South had not been completely dominated by Northern economy and military, they would not have considered surrender. If the Germans and Axis powers had been defeated by the Allied forces, they would not have capitulated. And as long as the North Vietnamese government remains dedicated to the overthrow and domination of the south and are financially and militarily able to realize that desire, they will not negotiate.

This entire campaign hinges on the willingness of the North Vietnamese government's acceptance of what they have, and they will not accept this. When the bombing was halted at Christmas, troop and supply infiltration from the north increased. If the bombing were halted today, the infiltration would increase, so the basis for negotia-

Innumerable experiences continue to uncover a most disturbing question: Am I protecting and perpetuating my invaluable right to be me and only me? Almost without realizing it, I find myself succumbing to advertising; imitating a parent, sister, teacher, friend; conforming to what I think is expected of me, whether in fashions, religion, or pattern of living. I'm a fool.

I am. Education teaches that I can be an individual. How? Do I accuse the American Society for my lack of uniquity, or myself? Who is to blame? Me. No one else is ultimately responsible. Sure billboards line the highways, flashy colors decorate the A & P, radio and tv tend to subvert, and schools dictate the same information to thirty or forty stenographers at one time. But do I have to give in? NO. Neither do I have the desire to conform.

But how do I avoid being one of many look-alikes, talk-alikes, act-alikes, THINK-alikes??? At least I can't look like anyone else—unless I wear a wig, undergo plastic surgery, have look-alike clothes. But that doesn't matter—at least not as much as does THINKING and acting the same as John Doe or any one person. I am what and how I think and act. If I am decisive in my thoughts, no one can daunt me; if I am weak, all will overcome me.

I think. I believe. But I am free to change or assimilate ideas. That's part of thinking and part of me. But not all of me. I must act according to what I believe, or I am not a man. And I must speak or remain silent with conviction, or I am not me. It is my beliefs which distinguish me completely from any other person.

This is my right to be me and only me.

"Now Is The Time To Work And Learn": An Interview With An Artist

Karen Roewade, soprano, is intent upon becoming Karen Roewade, person, to the students and faculty of Maryville College. Elaborating on her theme of music communication presented in the Oct. 4th convocation program, Miss Roewade strongly feels that "music belongs to the whole school, not just to music majors." Her aim, and that of the Affiliate Artist program, is to encourage interest in the performing arts and a direct communication between professional and student. Miss Roewade sees the program as "an audience-building program whose main purpose is to prove to the audience that they really matter."

The musical world, Miss Roewade believes, should not be foreign territory to those not pursuing a musical career. Too often the audience at a concert is composed mostly of other performers. Seen on this campus, too, music majors attend other music majors' recitals, while the rest of the student body, out of place and uninterested, remain unaware of the opportunities to "feel the real freedom which music allows."

As her part in the Affiliate Artist program, Miss Roewade will serve as faculty member, performer, an official college ambassador, and, she hopes, as personal friend to many of the students. Emphasizing the latter in discussing the purpose of music communication, she hopes that her stay here will help bridge the gap between the professional musical world and that of the listening audience.

"We want to make people see that the arts are for them," Miss Roewade points out. "The artist is as important as a dentist or lawyer is to preserve society's well-being, for without the artist we could not feel or see the expression of our deepest emotions.

"More important," she continues, "the performer needs his audience. For instance, musicians go to football games and enjoy being in the audience. In the same way that the player needs his audience to do his best on the field, the musician needs the football player and all kinds of people who enjoy being in the audience in order for him to perform well on the stage."

In discussing the music for everyone theme, Miss Roewade points out that it is never too late to learn to appreciate music. She used to sing jazz, branching out eventually to opera. In fact, Miss Roewade says that she saw her first real opera when she was in college. "If you care about it," she says, "it doesn't matter how much background you have." Miss Roewade cited as an example the founder of the Affiliate Artist program, Ed Warner, a Presbyterian minister, who, at the age of 30, turned to singing because he could no longer stand not to sing.

For those interested in music as a career, Miss Roewade has plenty of encouragement. Although admitting that "it isn't easy; there aren't enough audiences to go around," she nevertheless urges young people not to quit. Here she mentioned Paula Ragusa, a friend of hers at Northwestern, who was continually discouraged by her strict drama coach, but who made it—as Paula Prentiss—in spite of (or because of) her teacher. "It's never as hard as you think," Miss Roewade smiles.

"College is the last bridge you cross before you enter the performing world," she adds. "Now is the time to work and learn." Miss Roewade hopes she can assist students bent on a musical career by giving them an idea of what it is like in the professional world. She invites all students to come talk to her, whether for professional advice or for music appreciation.

"The main thing," she concludes, "is that you be able to relate to me as a person, not a singer." Judging from Karen Roewade's immense popularity already, that won't be too hard to do.

'27 SCOTS VISIT

The Scots football team of 1927 will be honored preceding the Homecoming game. This team won the Tennessee College Championship with an outstanding year and the efforts of Coach Honaker and Assistant Coaches Thrower and Earl McCall.

This season started with a hard-fought tie against the University of Kentucky. Next came a defeat by Tennessee Wesleyan 13 to 0. The team showed its strength in a very tough loss to the University of Tennessee 7-0. The Scots played six more games during the seam running up a total of 214 points and allowing only 6 to finish with a 6-2-1 record.

Victories were recorded over Lenoir-Rhyne (45-6), Tusculum (19-0), Bluefield (73-0), King (33-0), Cumberland (18-0), and Carson-Newman (26-0).

Captain John Stone was the leader of this fine team and went on to play professional baseball with the Washington Senators.

The Highland Echo welcomes back the 1927 Football Scots.

Dear Editor,

We would like to express our concern about the "sweet deception" which was presented to the Maryville student body in the form of a "Negotiation Now!" petition in the September 26th issue of the Highland Echo. This article states that an unconditional peace would be "the end of uncompromising world peace." We are warning the students about this falsehood before they find themselves advocating the very war and bloodshed they are so strongly against.

This "unconditional peace" would either be a direct handing over of South Viet Nam to the communists or, if we prefer the indirect approach, we can establish a coalition government which will inevitably suffer the same fate as Poland and Hungary did after World War II. Following the communist revolution in China, 23 million people were liquidated in a massive purge, simply because they were some kind of threat to the people's party. Where were our brave young petitioners then with their efforts to end the killing and bring peace on earth? Which of these petitions would like to speculate on the number of helpless people who would be purged after the communist takeover in South Viet Nam? Obviously, the oposition to communism in South Viet Nam in strong. Proof of this is General Ky's overwhelming victory over his opponent who was apparently more inclined to negotiate with the communists.

Obviously, Russia, who is always screaming "imperialism" is herself the most imperialistic nation today. Her definition of "uncompromising peace" is an extension of her imperialistic arm until it embraces the whole world to the bosom of Mother Russia. What will our brave petitioners have to say or do when they find they have compromised their freedom to protest in their effort to establish that sweetly deceptive "uncompromising world peace?"

Scots Get Ready

As the Scotties hustle onto the practice field from the locker room one can hear the voice of Coach Tomlinson hurrying the team out to practice.

The team forms up with Captain John Forgety and fullback Alex Robbins leading the squad in a series of calisthenics to get them warmed up for an afternoon of practice. The coaches stand back and watch, occasionally encouraging one of the men to try harder or giving the team, as a whole, a bit of "advice."

The warm up session is soon over and the coaches are again hustling the team about. With the coaches and team in general the by-word seems to be "hustle." Coach breaks the squad up into two groups, one to practice defense and recognition of plays scouted from the Emory and Henry "Wasps," the other to study and learn to recognize Emory and Henry's pass plays. As one might guess, this practice session, which took place shortly before the scots left to do battle with the Wasps, is called play-recognition. The team learns what to expect in its upcoming game and where it's weaknesses will be on the various plays.

After a while of this sort of play recognition practice, the groups are reorganized. One practices goal-line defense plays and the other group consisting of the ends, linebackers and backs, run pass defense patterns.

As this part of practice ends, the two groups join and practice goal line defense. The players who are not involved study play diagrams and watch. The team then drifts into a session of offensive play patterns against our defense.

Meanwhile, further down on the practice field, the ends are practicing receiving passes and running patterns for receiving. Our kicking specials are giving themselves warm-up and practicing their kicking.

The whole while this practice session has been going on, the coaches are intently looking for weaknesses and giving the players pointers to improve themselves and the team.

As practice draws to a close, the players come together and do downfield sprints and running exercises. One player commented that this was an easy practice. Apparently the team really gets a work out on the other days with man to man blocking and practice in tackling and getting tough.

After about two hours of this play-recognition practice, the team gratefully rushes to the locker room and a welcome shower.

Winter Sports Preview

Maryville College's winter sports teams opened their practice sessions this week with bright prospects of successful campaigns. The Basketball team, under Coach Boydson Baird, opened the season with their annual three-mile marathon. The roundball squad is hopeful with four returning starters and seven returning lettermen. The Scots this year will have some height and rebounding strength in the experience of big men, Phil Bettis and Jon Hancher; also this year there will be a good deal of depth on the Scots' bench. Along with height the Scots will be supplied with more than adequate strength in returning lettermen Dave Maxwell, Lynn Raby and the strong leadership of Captain Don Payne. Returning also is the ever-present scoring threat of Bill Padgett, who had a 28 point average last year. The results of the three-mile marathon are being withheld as classified information in order to protect the basketball team from an avalanche of cross-country scholarship offers from larger universities.

Coach John Davis also opened the 1967-68 wrestling practices with the noticeable loss of four starters from last year's team. Coach Davis is depending heavily on co-captains Ralph Johnson and Rob Nicholas and his other returning lettermen. There is also hope in the freshmen class and other returning men from last year's team. The team will be working hard for the tough opener against Appalachian State. It looks like another successful season for wrestling under Coach Davis.

MONK DISCUSSES TEAM

After the third game of the 1967 season Coach Tomlinson had some interesting observations to make about the team and Maryville College.

The return of Mike Dalton and the addition of Don Elia to the coaching staff has freed Coaches Tomlinson and Kardatszke to concentrate more time on some things that have needed more attention in the past. Both assistant coaches have been "a great help" to the formation of this year's team according to Coach Tomlinson. Minor details are not minor anymore because more time can be spent working with individual players. This years team is in the second stage of a re-building program. The progress of the team, week to week, impresses the whole coaching staff. As Coach Tomlinson stated, "The whole team is in the process of maturing." They are maturing as a team, thinking as a team, and operating as a team. The team is an extension of Maryville College and each student should be a part of the team.

"I'm pleased with the support the school has exhibited thus far," said Coach Tomlinson, "School spirit is as much a part of the team as anything the team does." The spirit and support of the athletic program is undergoing a rebuilding program also and is on the right track. Your assignment as a member of the Maryville College team is not as intricate as the halfback's, you are asked to keep cheering and showing appreciation for the effort each player and coach exhibits.

SCOTS DROP ANOTHER

After a scoreless first period, Livingston State unleashed a potent scoring attack giving them a 42-7 victory over Maryville. The game was played in Livingston, Alabama last Saturday night.

The Tiger's stayed on the ground, scoring on runs of 1,1,4,10,16, and a 61 yard punt return. Maryville finally scored late in the fourth quarter on a twelve-yard pass from Butch Crabtree to Brad Beck. Maryville will now take a 1-4 record into the Homecoming Game with Harding College on Saturday afternoon.

Onward, Christian Soldiers

The United Campus Christian Fellowship at Maryville College (formerly known at the God Squad at Jesus Tech) is at times one of those campus organizations everybody hears about, but few know what it accomplishes or attempts. Freshmen are bombarded with programs, speeches, skits, and booklets about UCCF, but the communication of ideas, philosophies, and areas of involvement to sophomores, juniors, and seniors is often weak or non-existent. We hope to bridge this communication gap by presenting in a series of articles UCCF's goals and ideas for this year, along with a picture of the student Christian movement, nationally and internationally, especially the University Christian Movement and the World Student Christian Federation.

Our main task this year will be to investigate and involve ourselves in today's world, bound neither by tradition nor rebellion. As a vehicle for questioning, testing, practicing, or affirming one's faith, the UCCF is committed to the quest for human understanding. The means for this quest this year has taken seven different organized forms, called "commissions."

The first of these, the Community Forum Commission, is a new addition to the former commission slate. Its purpose is to focus on local sociological and political problems as reflections of national problems through debates and forums open to the entire college community. We hope that Maryville College will closely examine its college community, the community of Maryville, the state, nation, and world in which we live, in an effort to understand and to improve these different spheres. Brian Childs serves as chairman of the Community Forum commission with Steve Ellis as vice-chairman.

The aim of the Education Commission is to cause students to think about God, man, higher education, Christian education, and about their inter-relationships. This commission, headed by Ann Bridges, provides a library in the Lantern which includes thought-provoking magazines, such as MOTIVE, RAMPARTS, THE MOVEMENT, and I.F. STONE'S WEEKLY. The Education Commission also sponsors church vocation programs and the sending of delegates to seminary weekends and hopes to establish discussion groups around the 10:30 a.m. Sunday

THE CORONATION

Readers Theatre Presents Program

The Maryville College Readers Theatre, an outgrowth of the school's new Creative Activity Program, gave its first production October 21 in the College Theatre, as part of the College's Weekend Homecoming Festivities.

The Readers Theatre production of "Green Grew the Ivy" was a collage of voices based on college experiences interpreted from the writings of James Thurber, Thomas Wolfe, Walt Whitman, Robert Benchley, and others.

There was no scenery or costuming in this production; however, there were lighting effects. A pattern of a script was followed with the cast participating in a variety of moods. The Readers Theatre combines the usual theatre with the interpretation and recitation of poetry, dramatic literature, prose, humor, and pathos.

Faculty members participating were: Dr. Carolyn L. Blair of the English Department, Mrs. Robert D. Proffitt and J. Dalton Eddleman of the Speech Department. Mr. Eddleman also directed the production.

The Global Drive Of Black Power ... From The U. S. To North Vietnam And Home Again

NEW YORK, October 12 — According to a magazine feature, the current wave of Negro draft refusals is the same Black Power wave that could lead to an eventual draft riot, perhaps even a military mutiny. And all told, this widespread disobedience by a sizeable minority could even bring the war in Vietnam to a sudden halt.

So says William Worthy, correspondent for the Baltimore Afro-American newspaper and author of this report on Black Power today and its ever-increasing international scope, appearing in the current issue of Esquire, now on newsstands.

Worthy states: "Because whites see Black Power detached from its international context they tend to view the incidence of Negro draft refusal as merely political draft evasion." But Negroes tend to feel that there are more significant motives behind the refusal to serve, namely identification with the enemy.

The article goes on to say that leaders such as Ho Chi Minh and Fidel Castro are figures of inspiration to Negroes along with Stokely Carmichael and Floyd McKissick, and that American Negro radicals are making direct contact with North Vietnamese political and social forces.

There is a wealth of evidence to suggest that what began as a domestic civil-rights movement has turned of late into a global drive, at the center of which are the now allied struggles of the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam (N.L.F.) and the American Negro.

According to the feature, there have been stories in the Negro press reporting that members of the N.L.F. have shown partiality to Negro GI's, in some cases running up to them in Saigon and warning them not to enter certain buildings that are about to be blown up. For their part, Negro visitors to Hanoi have given advice on the content and style of propaganda broadcasts beamed to Negro GI's.

On the home front, black nationalist groups are showing N.L.F. war films to ghetto residents. And cartoons reflecting feeling among radical Negroes of this bond between them and the N.L.F. show white American soldiers reporting battle casualties: "Total of nine enemy killed,

Sunday: Artists' Series Features Church Opera

On Sunday, October 29, the Little Orchestra Society and the Concert Opera Association of New York, a company of 25 with instrumental ensemble, male chorus and soloists, will present Benjamin Britten's CURLEW RIVER. Based on the medieval Japanese No-drama "Sumidagawa," this work was transplanted by Britten and his collaborator, William Plomer, to Curlew River and a church in the Fens, and styled after English medieval religious drama.

The NEW YORK WOODWIND QUINTET will appear Friday, January 26. Known as one of the nation's most solidly established chamber music attractions, the ensemble has the happy knack of evoking enthusiastic acclaim for the beauty and variety of its work. Their 1965 appearance in Maryville was an unqualified success. The quintet has made four lengthy international tours and has a growing list of high-fidelity recordings to their credit on Concertapes, Columbia, Crest, Period, and Philharmonic Records.

The 1967-68 season will close on Friday, March 29, with a performance by the NORMAN WALKER DANCE COMPANY. In an age of "dehumanization" of the dancer, as well as the dance, Walker and company stand out as diamonds in a quartz collection. As a "lyric" artist concerned with the expression of human relationship, he has never feared any bold experiment in movement, but even in the most abstract forms employed, there is a theatrical communication which an audience immediately understands. "Mr. Walker . . . and his entire company danced with notable incisiveness, strength and musicality." — New York TIMES.

PLAY OPENING TONIGHT

A View from the Bridge, Arthur Miller's drama of a longshorman driven to a heartless betrayal by emotions which he never understands, will be presented at the Maryville College Theatre tonight and Saturday, October 27 and 28, at 8:15 p.m.

A classic modern tragedy, A View from the Bridge first ran for nearly five months in New York as an emphatic hit. It achieved an eight-months run in London.

A View from the Bridge details the violent happenings in a dockworker's family when they harbor two Sicilian cousins who have illegally entered the United States. The central character is a kindly stevedore who has reared his orphaned niece from her early childhood.

A crisis develops when the young girl falls in love with one of the immigrants and the longshoreman finds himself trying to cope with a violent inner reaction he does not understand. As his mental stress mounts and grows into dangerous obsession, he is driven to betray the boy to the immigration authorities. In a tragic climax the lad's brother likes the half-crazed dockworker.

Philip DerPilbosian will play the brawny stevedore destroyed by his own barely realized emotions, Carol Vandegriff is cast as the spirited niece around whom a flood of vehement passions center, while Bill Beasley will portray the immigrant youth she loves and Jon Lutz will appear as the brother who champions his cause. Ellen Taschenberg will have the role of the dockworker's anxious wife.

J. Dalton Eddleman will direct A View from the Bridge for the Maryville Playhouse. Tickets are still available at the theatre office.

Editorial

No matter what college or university, there is going to be a certain alienation of the feelings and trusts of students to the administration. No matter how small the college, or how open the doors of the administration, there will always remain a certain tension and separation. Because of this unique uneasiness, the passing of judgment in disciplinary matters by administration, or committees of the administration, will not have the desired feeling of finality and justice by students. That is one of the unfortunate and unchangeable facts of educational life.

The object of a judicial procedure is to enforce and to assist the masses who live under it to live and grow with respect for the standing regulations of the community. A community lives by its rules and regulations and if they are broken, there must be a judicial body to pass judgment and to see that just penalities are prescribed.

The college community is not very different from any other community which has laws and regulations. The only difference is in the unique problem mentioned above: the alienation of students to administration. It would appear that the solution to the problem would be a judicial procedure that would be staffed by students passing judgment over their peers. The problem of alienation would be all but eliminated by a student judicial procedure. There would be a sense of finality in the judgment of a student judicial procedure and there would be a greater feeling of "justice" when students are judged by their peers.

There is a growing desire of the Maryville College student body to have a greater place of responsibility in the decision-making process of the college. There could be no greater responsibility than a student judicial system on this campus. We students have asked about the possibility of having such a system and we have been reminded of our right to present such a system to the Student-Faculty Senate, and that right will be exercised. There is a student council committee that is working on proposed student judicial procedure and it will be presented to the Student-Faculty Senate in its November meeting.

The proposed procedure will have a system of councils on the dormitory level and will have at the top of the scale a council with both appelate and original jurisdiction. This council will have a bench of seven students: a "supreme" council, if you like. These councils would handle all cases of a disciplinary nature. They would pass all judgments and give the prescribed penalities, with Presidental review in the cases of expulsions. It would be in the hands of the student body to regulate judicial procedure and to enforce obedience to the existing rules and regulations.

The Student Judiciary would be another step in the progress of our educational experience at Maryville College. It is a responsibility of magnitude, but a responsibility which we as students have a right to have. It is in our interests to see that justice is passed and that respect for the passing of this justice is instilled. To quote the National Student Association Student Power Declaration: ". . . student power encourages self-development, which is an integral part of the educational process."

We as students are ready for this responsibility. Let us see that the administration realizes this and realizes that we want honest and responsible co-operation.

Points to Ponder

what does the death of Che Guevara mean to you?
what does it mean when a peace movement leader says the movement is going to become more militant?
have you read The Rebel by Camus?
what is chapel anyway?
were the peace demonstrators trying to exorcise their own guilt at the expense of their cause?
can you support the troops in Vietnam and still be against the war?
have you talked with (not at) another person recently?
were you upset by the march on the Pentagon?
Do we really give a damn?

This was at one time a popular song. The song was popular, its philosophy is not. It's four letters. One simple noun and yet it is the most analyzed, categorized, and dissected word in any language. It has been neglected by religions and it has been prostituted by others. It is the basis for the world's greatest religion . . . so they tell me.

WHAT THE WORLD NEEDS NOW IS LOVE
B. Bacharach

What the world needs now
Is love, sweet love
It's the only thing there's Just too little of.
What the world needs now
Is love, sweet love,
No, not for some, but for Everyone.
Lord we don't need another mountain,
There are mountains and hill sides
Enough to climb.
There are oceans and rivers
Enough to cross,
Enough to last to the end of time.
Lord we don't need another meadow,
There are corn fields and wheat fields
Enough to grow.
There are sunbeams and moonbeams
Enough to shine.
Oh listen Lord if you want to know.
What the world needs now
Is love, sweet love
It's the only thing there's Just too little of.
What the world needs now
Is love, sweet love,
No, not for some but for Everyone.

LETTER

Dear Editor,

Regardless of how I feel about the talking tie, I found your "editorial"(?) both childish and petty. Have you run out of significant material already?

Sincerely yours,
Nancy Davidson

Editorial

The student body of Maryville will shortly be facing a key issue in the area of student government. Read the editorial on this page concerning the proposed student judicial system. Is this the concept of maintaining discipline that you want to see introduced to this College? The presentation here is admittedly vague. Soon you will be given a detailed outline (prepared by students) of the proposal for a judicial system that will be presented to the administration for consideration. What is important now is whether the student body is behind the basic principles of such a system. Should students be concerned with maintaining their community? Do we have a right of judgment by our peers? Are we mature enough to assume the responsibility of such a system? If we are to answer no to these questions, let us do so now before student government goes out on a limb and asks for an all-student judicial system.

The leaders of the student body support this concept. Editorially the Highland Echo is coming out in favor of it. The administration appears to agree with the concept. All this is meaningless, however, unless the student body itself is behind the judicial system. Without the support of most of the students, the new system will fail and we will be back where we started with the old discipline committee. If we are to have a student judiciary we must have student-based support. Are you willing to commit yourself to such a system?

We students of Maryville College are well noted for our apathy. All of us have for far too long been taking the attitude, "What the hell? Why should I care? The administration will do what it wants anyway." Now is the time to put aside such a petty attitude. A student judiciary is something that cannot be handed down from above. It cannot succeed as an executive council decree. It will only last if the student body is behind the concept of self-discipline. Each of us must now decide for himself to either accept or reject the idea. Then we must make our decision known to our elected representatives of the student council. Maryville College can no longer afford to elect nice guys to council and then sit back and let them try to run things on their own. Student council is not abstract from the student body. Ask your representative if he knows anything about the student judiciary. Is he in favor of it? Then make sure he knows how you feel about it. Corner Doug Gamble and tell him to stop frugging in the chapel and to start listening to your opinion about this idea.

Very soon student-faculty senate will receive a proposal concerning the judicial system. One of the first questions that will be asked is, "Are you speaking for yourself or are the rest of the students behind the proposal?" Let us make sure that our representatives go into the meeting with an answer for this question.

sir — Five Vietcong and Four of our own Negroes."

Worthy attributes quotes to some American Negroes who have told him of their contacts with North Vietnam. Among them is New York lawyer Conrad H. Linn who said "Via Cambodia and Laos, I flew to North Vietnam aboard a plane of the International Control Commission. Since my return from Hanoi, on every campus where I have spoken, black draft resisters have been greatly heartened by the strong message of solidarity that I brought back from the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam."

Worthy concludes his report for Esquire with a two page chart which schematically represents black power forces inside and outside the United States from the most militant activism to the most moderate with degrees in between. The spread of who's who in the black power establishment includes 44 headings such as Black Militant Hangouts, Local Hotshots (organizers on their way up), Peacemakers of the Establishments and Cheerleaders on the Left.

Echo Forum Investigates Campus Reaction to Student Judicial Board

Editor's note: The Echo Forum will be used to gain some insight into campus thinking on issues facing both our school and nation. This first forum is directed toward the proposal for an alternative to the discipline committee.

Question: Should Maryville Have an All-Student Judicial Board?

by Robinsonwood

Doug McGruther-Senior-Economics Major

"For the rules as they are now—No—We should not be expected to enforce someone else's code of laws. Laws which seem archaic to us, are foreign to us, and are not supported by us, should not depend upon us for their effectiveness."

Wanda Jones-Freshman-English Major

"Students and faculty should be on the Judiciary Board. Students can benefit from the experience of the faculty and can incorporate ideas of the student body."

Dick Craig-Senior-History Major

"I think it's a great idea. There should be one faculty member and a proportion of Seniors, Juniors, Sophomores, and Freshmen."

Mary Christofferson-Junior-History Major

"It depends on the kind of students you get. A limited few are capable. Representatives should be equally divided between the Juniors and Seniors, and grade point shouldn't have much to do with the choice. Students who know what they're doing should be on the Judiciary Board."

Judy Hannah-Junior-Elementary Education Major

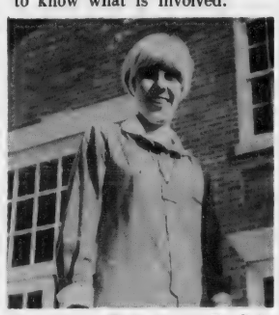
"Ideally, the Judiciary Board should be all students—if they would be fair and honest."

Bob Kusek-Junior-History Major

"Students should be on the Judiciary Board and some judgment should be left to them. Faculty members don't always understand the problems, and students might understand better."

Kathy Doane-Senior-Elementary Education Major

"Both students and faculty should be on the Judiciary Board. It definitely should not be all faculty members. It would be nice to have all students, but that's not realistic."



GordonTinley-Sophomore-Psychology Major

"I'm for it, but there would be a problem of finding someone to do it. Only a certain number are willing to take the responsibility, and those few are the same ones that are involved in everything else."

Sue Fershee-Junior-Foreign Language Major

"Both students and faculty should be represented on the Judiciary Board. It should not be entirely made up of students, because that places too much responsibility on them. But before any decisions are made, we need to know what is involved."

Mary Jane Finke-Senior-English Major

"It's a frightening idea, but probably good. Students are always stricter than faculty."

What Do You Think?

Rick Myser-Freshman-Biology Major

"I think the Judiciary Board should be made up of both students and faculty."

Beverly Harris-Sophomore-Elementary Education Major

"Students and faculty should be on the Judiciary Board."

Washington Semester Program Announced

Begun in 1947, nearly one hundred accredited colleges and universities are now involved in the Washington Semester Program with the American University, administered by its School of Government and Public Administration. It enables students to spend one semester in Washington studying American national government in action through a seminar, an individual research project, and regular courses at the American University. The seminar gives six semester hours of credit and consists principally of meetings three times a week with public officials, political figures, lobbyists, and others active in national government. In addition, the Washington Semester students have the opportunity of participation in recreational and cul-

Another new commission is the Far Eastern Commission, headed by Barb Roberts with Judy Hannah as vice-chairman. Their aim is to promote East-West understanding and the realization that although cultures, societies, governments, and economics differ, the human element is very much the same throughout the world. They hope to accomplish this through the use of reading lists, study groups, lectures, and films about the Far East.

The Fellowship Commission's nucleus is composed of the Nu Gamma's, headed by Mary Jane Schussler and the Key Men, headed by Bob McEldowney. They sponsor and organize campus social and recreational events, such as the spring and fall retreats, Christmas Readings, the freshman picnic, the spring fashion show, in addition to welcoming the freshmen. Their main project is Barnwarming, a carnival-talent show type event, held on Thanksgiving evening, with the proceeds going to the Fred Hope Fund. Barnwarming has been changed to a psychedelic "Barnhappening" this year in an attempt to enliven an old Maryville tradition.

The Lantern Commission operates the campus coffee house by providing stimulating and controversial programs, discussions, fellowship, and a place to read and talk. The Lantern is open Wednesday through Saturday evenings for coffee, conversation, and programs. Laurel Erskine is chairman of this commission with Steve Horton and Betty Patterson as co-chairmen of programs, Gretchen Alexander as chairman of hosts and hostesses, Jim Spotts as chairman of maintenance, Deenie Barnett in charge of kitchen, Candy Merritt as treasurer, and Suellen Fleming as art director.

Projects '68 is involved in a witness and service to the community in areas of immediate need through its smaller committees and work groups. This commission, headed by Dinni Drake and Martha Hegner, serves the Home Avenue area, Asbury Acres, the Boys' Club, the Girls' Club, East Mountain View Church, Hall High School through tutoring, the Boy and Girl Scouts, the Children's Home, and the mentally retarded. Each of these groups needs more students to make their programs more effective.

The Worship Commission, chairman, Geoffrey Skrinar and vice-chairman, Deenie Barnett, is renewing, augmenting, and inspiring opportunities and possibilities for worship among the college community. The Thursday night Pray-In's in the Little Chapel, sponsored by this commission, have presented exciting and relevant ways of worshipping. Worship Commission also hopes to encourage the frequent observance of the Sacraments and ordinances of the Church and the use of services, hymns, speakers, and prayers in accordance with the Church's Liturgical Kalendar.

These are the places where the action is in UCCF. We invite you, whether you believe or do not believe, to become involved, to ask, to search, to defend, and to oppose. We'll provide the vehicle—if you'll provide the brains, the sweat, and the guts.

Applications for the 1968 Maid of Cotton selection are being accepted by the National Cotton Council. Applications may be obtained by writing the Council, 1918 North Parkway, Memphis, and deadline for entering is midnight, December 1.

A Commentary On Jay And The Americans In Concert

In the flashing, electronic lights of the psychedelic rage came Jay and the Americans, the popular songsters whose patriotic duty, as their name might indicate, has consisted of hiding from draft boards (according to Jay) and singing "Only in America." In concert, something short of two hours last Friday evening in the STW Chapel, the recording stars ran the gamut of vocal music from operetta "Some Enchanted Evening" music to folk to rock to folk-rock types. Interspersed in the program was humor (?), apology, and intermission.

The weakness of the program evolved around one basic flaw: the entertainers' lack of artistry. Although the concert was well-balanced in the selection of songs, each number was treated alike. The singers mounted the up-to-date horse of folk-rock and the psychedelic, and they rode it on every number. By the end of the show it had died of exhaustion. Their lack of contact with the audience was obvious in the lack of response from those in attendance, the same audience, I might remind you, that gives standing ovations to an ensemble of Jew's harps and has been known to call Spanish guitarists back on stage for SEVEN encores. Jay, in fact, made light of the question of artistry, and there was very little of the program that could be identified strictly as "Jay and the Americans." Their hit "She Cried" of 1962 was one exception. The number which elicited the greatest response was "Girls." It has not been determined for which the applause was intended: the Vaudville presentation of Jay, etc. or the frugging of the Student Body president in the center aisle of the chapel. As far as humor is concerned, it was generally in poor taste, stale, rehearsed, and unsubtle. The lack of subtlety was highlighted in the unrehearsed apologies.

The program, however, did have its saving graces. The use of flashing lights for the entrance of the troupe was interesting and somewhat exciting. Also, at several points of the show, the audience was given something of the real Jay and the Americans. "Let's Lock the Door" and "She Cried" were two such songs. Most important, though, the Jay and the Americans program, the first of this year's "pop" concerts, added the flavor of the "outside world" to the festivities of our Homecoming, a necessarily provincial affair, and the entertainment received therefrom was a pleasing approach to the weekend.

Did Bob Dylan Cry When Woody Guthrie Died?

Hey Woodie Guthrie but I know that you know
All the things I'm a-sayin and many times more
I'm a'singin ya this song, but I can't sing enough
Cause there's not many men done the things that you done.
From "Song to Woody"
by Bob Dylan

Woodie Guthrie died a couple of weeks ago. He spent his life traveling around the country making music. By rough count he wrote around a thousand songs, songs about the people, their times, troubles, problems big and small. He suffered for the past 13 years with Huntington's Cholera, a rare disease of the nervous system. In 1961, while ill in Greystone Hospital in New Jersey, he was visited by a young guitarist in the same folk tradition: Bob Zimmerman, who would, under Woodie's encouragement, soon cut an album as Bob Dylan.

Dylan grew and improved his technique while always maintaining his ties with the blues guitar movement. His first album contained his own songs which became folk classics: "With God on Our Side," "North Country Blues" (the best of his early blues songs), and the song which became the National Anthem of discontented youth, "The Times They Are A-Changin'." I have heard two live Dylan concerts. The first was just after the release of his second album, "Bob Dylan." He talked a lot about Woodie Guthrie between songs in this concert, and dedicated his "Song to Woodie" to the man who he said was the guiding and driving force behind his music. At that time his voice was rough in the best Guthrie tradition. The New York Times music critic said, "Mr. Dylan's voice is anything but pretty. He is consciously trying to recapture the rude beauty of a Southern field hand musing in melody on his porch. All the 'husk and bark' are left on his notes and a searing intensity pervades his songs."

Soon after this Bob Dylan began to change. "Another Side of Bob Dylan" was his first really uneven album. Some elements of rock began creeping into his style. His bubbling humor was ever-present, however, in such songs as "It Ain't Me Babe," the silly-sad love song of a traveling man. He really blew the minds

A PLAYWRIGHT'S VIEW OF THE THEATER

An Interview With J. Dalton Eddleman

Orson Welles once said that the theater is an anachronism, that it is dying like opera and ballet. Mr. J. Dalton Eddleman, one of the newest members of the Maryville College faculty, agrees with this and admits that he "is frightened about the progress of the theater in America." Mr. Eddleman feels that there was "no American theater until O'Neill," and since then there have been few plays of great value. The decline of interest in the theater since World War II is partly due to its commercialization. He feels that Broadway has developed a world of its own as have "off-Broadway" and "off-off Broadway." For this reason, he remains in educational theater.

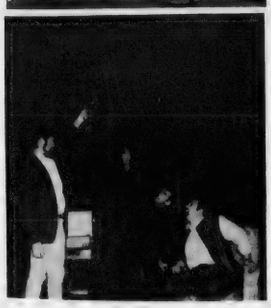
But what is the real problem? This young playwright explains that the "people" of America do not experience drama. At first, they loved the theater and even fought and rioted over plays as they do over ballgames today. Although Mr. Eddleman is "not for social riots particularly," he would like to see a revived interest in drama.

Movies and TV influence Americans, and usually there are "ten relatively inconsequential movies to one or two serious dramatic movies." Mr. Eddleman suggests that not all movies and plays can be "artsy-craftsy;" they must meet the needs of the people. "People are the materials with which a playwright must work—blood and guts people."

Of particular interest, Mr. Eddleman notes the possibility of using the Negro not only as subject and actor, but also as audience. So far, no one has been successful with this. "The Negro has never been portrayed in drama as a character of worth or as a character of universal interest."

In his own play, "High John de Conquer," Mr. Eddleman presents the Negro and white together and tries "to indicate a quality of non-condescension" in hopes of encouraging a Negro audience. The production of the play is supported by the Ford Foundation which strives to utilize Negro actors.

As a dedicated playwright, Mr. Eddleman feels that the "only hope is in the regional theater, such as Front Street in Memphis," because it provides a place for "young unestablished playwrights like myself." People will read newspapers and novels, but, because they are too close to events such as racism, they will not pay to see the same dramatized. Thus, young dramatic authors have little chance of success.



He explains, however, that the first Maryville Playhouse production, "A View from the Bridge," has a "vital and important role for College and community." It offers a "very candid hard-hitting script." In this play, Arthur Miller deals with "real people who have blood in their veins, fear in their hearts and who run from each other and toward each other." Miller comes as close as any to producing a modern tragic hero. Since he uses common men, many critics feel that his heroes do not fit the Aristotelian model. Mr. Eddleman suggests, however, that the idea of nobility is "ridiculous for modern times." The hero in this play has a sense of destiny—passion drives him to turn his back on loyalty. Because of its vitality, a play of this nature is relevant here. It will not offend any, and the "serious playgoer will have a theatrical experience."

Mr. Eddleman finds that the physical theater at Maryville is excellent. Yet, "the College will have to take a different view of the theater if it is to survive with any importance." At the present time, the theater is just one of many extra-curricular activities in which parents can see students on stage. It is more or less a "public relations maneuver." Although the playhouse is good actor-wise and technically, Mr. Eddleman sees room for expansion and notes especially the possibility of experimental theater, student-directed and student-written plays. The College should not deny itself of this essential aspect of campus life. The theater has great potential if it can operate only as a theater.

The Maryville Playhouse announces its bill for the season 1967-1968: A View from the Bridge by Arthur Miller, October 27 and 28, 1967; "Oliver Twist," the motion picture starring Alec Guiness, December 1 and 2, 1967; Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, a surrealistic adaptation, March 1 and 2, 1968; and the currently popular Barefoot in the Park by Neil Simon, May 10 and 11, 1968.

Regular admission to these four events amounts to $6.00. However, students may purchase season tickets for a half-price of $3.00 per season ticket.

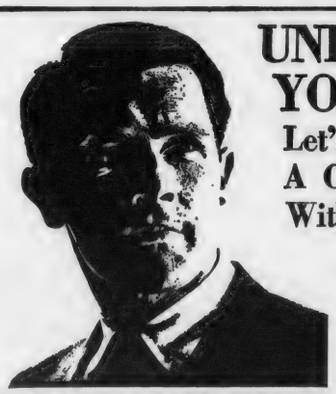
of the folkniks with "Bringing It All Back Home," with his venture into folk-rock. He was a pioneer in this field, explaining that unless a musician grows he will stagnate and die. For his efforts he was hooted off the stage of the Newport Folk Festival when he appeared in the second half of his act backed by a rock combo. It was that fall that I heard him in concert for the second time and I strongly disagreed with those who said Dylan "sold out" with his music. I agreed with the view that he had moved on, sensing the answers he sought were not all to be found in the twang of a folk guitar.

Perhaps some of my faith in the "new" Dylan was generated by the still-detectible thread of Guthrie-influenced levity in his songs. As far as I'm concerned "Subterranean Homesick Blues" and "Tombstone Blues" break me up in that it's-so-true way. If you want a message, try "Like A Rolling Stone," "Desolation Row," or "Mr. Tambourine Man." He even hits with his love songs, "Love Minus Zero/No Limit" and "Queen Jane Approximately." This concept of the driving beat and deep message seemed idealy suited to our age of kaleidoscopic change. After his second folk-rock album, "Highway 61 Revisited," however, I began to wonder about Dylan.

"Blonde on Blonde" seemed to indicate that he had stopped thumbing his nose at the establishment and was now directing his scorn at his audience. Three songs stand out: "Rainy Day Women No. 12 & 35," "Just Like A Woman" (his best study of the female character), and "I Want You"; the rest are sub-Dylan. He has no more time for his fans, dismissing them as below his "art." The few interviews he grants are condescending and unenlightening, and for a singer-song writer he has become suprisingly uncommunicative. I'm very much afraid that Dylan has arrived and is content to now lie back on his money-feathered nest. Gone from his music is the tie that he had with the common man—a tie that he maintained for a long time even after he became a commercial success, and a tie that Woodie Guthrie (his boyhood idol, remember?) never lost. I'm not asking him to be folksy or even artsy-craftsy; I'm just wondering if he can ever again be true to his art.



In another article I'd like to point out some of the great lines in Dylan's songs—lines that will live even if he has sold out at last. But now all I can think is that Woody Guthrie died a few weeks ago. What did he think of the "new" Bob Dylan? I know that I still get a chill when I hear "The Times They Are A-Changin' "—my memories of the infant civil rights protests are too tied up in it for it not to affect me. But what of his new stuff? Is he playing with us (and Woody) to get (stay?) rich? On his second album after "Song to Woody" is "See that My Grave is Kept Clean." Bob (and all of us) dug Woody's grave by demanding too much of him. Is he seeing that the grave is kept clean? Did Bob Dylan cry when Woody Guthrie died?

Modern Mythical Man

Religion today is mythical (concerned with man's relationship to a divinity). Man today is just as primitive and lost as is the mythical man.

For every fear that mythical man has, he rears a statue up and says that this is the god of rain or this is the god of sunshine. He cannot fathom beyond the puddle of water or the ray of sun that dried the puddle. Mythical man has no set of facts to state exactly why things happen. They just do happen because of his gods.

Mythical man looks at his fellow and sees pure chaos. He sees no hope in a world where men gather together fighting and hating. He saw no happiness yesterday and will see none tomorrow. His dark dungeon has become so hellish that mythical man breaks thru the rocks to the top and sees light. This is where the gods begin their role.

Kore never fails to spend her one-third of the year underground and her two-thirds of the year on earth. If she were to fail, fertility of the earth would cease.

Mythical man has only to turn to the god of his particular need to gain consolation for his fear (fear is used to describe all that man doesn't understand. Man does not fear what he knows).

Modern man has progressed far in 2000 years. He can now specifically state why a man dies instead of just saying "the black death." Man is digging deeper into the ground, daring into the ocean depths, and beginning to pinch into the void space outside of the earth's atmosphere.

Does the universe end? If so, what is beyond it?

Perhaps life can be termed as unreal. Can you prove that you are really scanning over these words and creating thoughts? If a tree falls and no sensation of it reaches a living being, it really hasn't happened. By the same token, if there were no creator, then our life is unreal because no living being is sensing or observing our life. Man cannot observe man from a distance or objectively. He would need to be a superhuman or a god.

Man today (as mythical man) wants something to fill in his vast gap of uncertainty. He wants so desperately to be independent and harmonious with himself, but he can't. Man is separated, yet is a part of a much larger scheme than lies in the realm of mother earth.

Mythical man has a god for each fear and we today have a God for each fear also. Our disquietudes may deal with different facts from 2000 years, but all apprehensions are in the same category or empty space which seems to envelope mankind of all ages.

We have turned over many rocks only to find others hidden beneath—other questions of deep value unanswered.

Humanity, in its final, primitive effort to live in peace, turns to God.

The Washington Semester Program is open to Juniors and Seniors, regardless of their major field of study, who have had a course in American National Government and whose overall grade average is not lower than the line between B and C (2.5). In exceptional cases a Sophomore may be admitted. Persons interested should apply before November 9 for the Second Semester of 1967-1968. All applicants must be approved and recommended by their undergraduate institution.

Inasmuch as tuition at the American University is $840 per semester and room rent for men is $230 per semester for a double room ($240 for women), it is realized that some worthy students would not be able to afford the extra expense of such a program. The Faculty Committee on Student Help has indicated that an award of $250.00 might be made to a participant in the Program in order to partially cover the difference of costs between Maryville College and The American University.

Interested persons should contact Dr. Ainsworth immediately.

Harding College scored its first football victory Saturday, whipping Maryville 27-16, despite three field goals by the loser's Jimmy Cannon.

Maryville, losing its fourth in five games, twice took the lead in the first half before the visitors from Arkansas went on top at halftime.

Cannon's field goals came in the first, third and fourth quarters from 38, 28, 37 yards.

Howard propelled the Harding attack with 165 yards rushing.

Cannon's first field goal shoved Maryville in front, but Bill Wates' touchdown put Harding ahead before Butch Crabtree passed four yards to Rickey White to give the Scots a 10-7 lead.

Dixon raced 33 yards early in the second period to give a 14-10 lead and they never trailed after that.

The teams swapped field goals in the third quarter, but Randy Delaet's plunge from the 3 boosted Harding's lead to 27-13 midway in the fourth quarter.

Harding's defense held the Scots to a total net gain of 155 yards. Meanwhile the Bisons rushed for 389 and added 101 passing.

BERKELEY, Calif. (CPS) — The official residence of the chancellor of the University of California at Berkeley is one of those super-stately mansions set on a little hill and surrounded by meticulously manicured shrubbery.

On Monday a new flower was discovered in the garden, a flower called "cannabis sativa," occasionally known as marijuana.

Said Mrs. Roger Heyns, the chancellor's wife, "I don't think I'd know it if I saw it."

Said campus police Sergeant Joseph Halloran, "It wasn't blown in by the breeze."

Youth-In-Revolt Laid To Liberalism's Failure

"American liberalism needs to bring its commitments into balance with its resources—overseas and at home," says Daniel P. Moynihan, Director of the Joint Center for Urban Studies of M.I.T. and Harvard.

Its failure thus far to do so—and its consequent failure to deliver on its overly ambitious undertakings — are largely responsible, he contends, for the disillusionment that has prompted today's widespread radical protest of American youth, and such signs of danger as rioting cities and turbulent campuses.

"Unthinking encouragement of bloated expectation leads young persons to compare forecast with outcome and to conclude hypocrisy and duplicity are at work," writes the former Kennedy Administration official in the opening article in the special Youth Issue of THE AMERICAN SCHOLAR.

"What is asked of us is honesty; and what that requires is a great deal more rigor in matching our performance to our standards. It is now the only way to maintain the credibility of those standards . . .

"There is altogether too much that is shoddy and derivative, and in the final sense dishonest, about American life . . . The foundations of popular confidence in our system are proving to be nothing like so solid and enduring as the confident liberal establishment has supposed."

Mr. Moynihan suggests that the bizarre behaviour of the hippies and other youth-in-revolt signals something more im-

Gallup Poll Reveals Use Of Drugs On Campus Far Less Than Rumored

Reports of mass student involvement with the illicit drugs Marijuana and LSD are wildly exaggerated, according to the gallup poll.

Only about six percent of the nation's college students have ever tried Marijuana and not more than one percent have experimented with LSD, according to a survey of students in 426 colleges by the noted pollster.

For all the outcry about drugs on campus, a majority—fifty-one percent—of the students questioned said that they did not even know a single student who had tried marijuana or LSD. And they estimated with reasonable accuracy that only about four percent of those on their own campus had tried drugs.

However, when asked how many of their fellow collegians across the nation used drugs, the students interviewed jumped their estimates to a very high 13 percent. This higher guess for "Outside" campuses could be a reflection of exaggerated news accounts about use on campus.

Projected to the nation's six million college students, the gallup figures indicate some 300,000 drug users — A sharp contrast to the reported "Millions." Moreover, the percentage applies only to those who have tried drugs. It is likely that a far smaller group are regular users.

Accompanying the poll is as article exploding some of the myths about "Mind-Expanding" drugs such as LSD. Author Dr. Donald Louria, an associate professor at Cornell University Medical College and President of the New York State Council on drug addiction, says there is no evidence to support claims that LSD increases creativity. More likely the opposite is true, he states.

He notes for example that in one study a group of accomplished pianists played under LSD's influence. Although each thought he played superbly, all reacted with distaste when the recording was played back after the LSD had worn off.

As to the claim made by Dr. Timothy Leary and others that LSD is an phrodisiac, Dr. Louria says that it is "Totally Spurious."

"While an LSD Hallucination may have highly erotic content," he writes, "The drug is, if anything, an Anti-Aphrodisiac."

The students questioned in the gallup poll were not only reluctant to try drugs themselves, but felt that those who were "on" Marijuana or LSD were "lost" mixed up, sick." far from being the "in" group, those who take drugs are seen by their fellows as victims rather than heroes.

Do You Smoke Grass?

Using the format of the 1967 Gallup Poll concerning the use of drugs among college students, The Highland Echo is making a survey on the Maryville campus. Students are requested to give thought to the subject and to answer and return the questionaire found on page 3.

ECHO REVIEWS A CULTURAL WEEKEND

A View From The Bridge and "Curlew River"

Maryville College theatre-goers were greeted in an appropriate fashion last Friday and Saturday nights with the first production of the current Playhouse season, Arthur Miller's A View from the Bridge. This drama was the first Playhouse presentation under the direction of J. Dalton Eddleman, the director of the theatre.

Partial cast of A View from the Bridge

The action of the play evolves around the happenings in a burly dockworker's home when he and his family attempt to harbor two immigrant cousins who have entered the country illegally. The crisis of the situation arises when the longshoreman's niece becomes romantically involved with one of the cousins. Integral to the story is the longshoreman's possessive attitude toward the niece, whom he has reared like a daughter but loved, unconsciously, like a lover. These factors lay the ground for the violence which ensues, including the killings of the dockworker and the brother of the niece's lover by each other.

Philip DerPilbosian's interpretation of Eddie, the dockworker, grew with the intensity

On October 29 the second of the Maryville College Artists Series presentations, "Curlew River" by Benjamin Britten, along with a short orchestral work by the same composer, was performed by the Little Orchestra Society and the Concert Opera Association of New York. The entire program was one of musical excellence, in regard to the compositions and the artists alike.

Part One of the program was the performance of the orchestral Sinfonietta, directed by Thomas Scherman. The work was well-chosen because it gave the audience a degree of musical preparation for the principal composition on the program. The orchestra distinguished itself in spite of Mr. Scherman, who seemed to be having a bad night. The first violin merits recognition for her stage presence under difficulties.

"Curlew River" was excellent from start to finish. Based on the Japanese No-drama "Sumidagawa" and patterned after medieval English chancel drama, it is called a "Parable for Church Performance" and is the story of a miracle, "a sign of God's grace." This Parable is acted by a group of male singers dressed as if they are Monks. Three of these men take the parts of the Ferryman, the Madwoman, and the Traveller, and after a change of costume play their roles on a simple stage. The rest of the Monks act as a chorus. Accompanying the singers is a small orchestra.

This work is a difficult one both instrumentally and vocally, but the singers and the orchestra alike executed their parts with ease. Tenor Kenneth Riegel deserves special recognition for his splendid performance as the Madwoman. The Abbot, played by John West, is the figure who ties the whole of the work to-

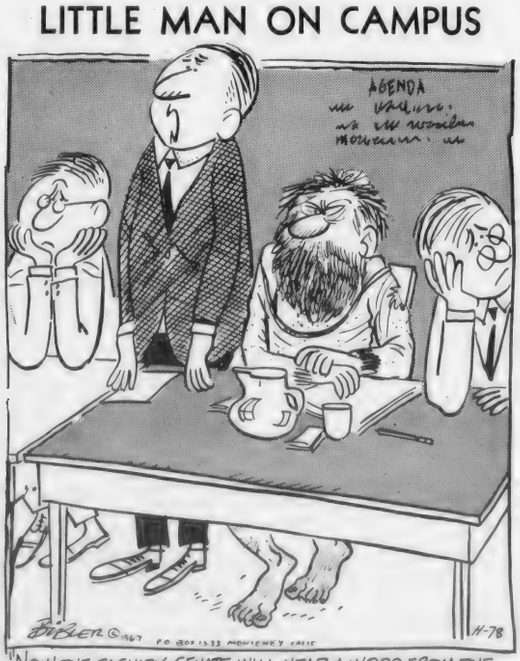
Why Compulsory Chapel?

Maryville College has had a tradition of compulsory chapel. But then, Maryville College has had a tradition for practically every aspect of undergraduate life. Like all traditions, this one of requiring attendence at daily worship must be examined in light of its appropriateness for today's college student.

"You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him pray," is an American truism (I think Mark Twain said it, or maybe it was the supreme court). The college does not require worship—it can't—it requires attendance. Surveying the bleary-eyed student body (and faculty) at 8:00 in the morning should convince anyone that actual participation in worship is limited to a distinct minority (the same minority who would attend if chapel were not compulsory). The very atmosphere is not conducive to worship. Announcements, awards, and other hoopla—all good in themselves—make it difficult to achieve a worshipful state of mind even for the dedicated few.

Merely changing the format of chapel to keep it strictly to a program of worship is not enough, however. The fundamental issue is whether the college has the right to force students at the pain of expulsion to attend chapel. And if the college does have the right, is mandatory chapel the best way to meet the problem of providing situations for worship at a church-related college?

Academically Maryville is emphasizing the right of individual choice in matters of class attendence. The idea is to allow each person to develop as he sees fit within a stimulating curriculum. Spiritually the idea seems to be to try to force the individual to conform to (not grow within) a program stagnant and listless with age. I personally find it unpleasant to be compelled to attend a religious service even if I am committed to the doctrine upon which that service is based.



Of course someone will drag out the tired argument that Maryville is a church-oriented college and anyone who does not like chapel did not have to come here. I really can't see where being church-related carries with it the obligation to cling to out-moded 19th century concepts of Christianity, ven if these concepts were handed down to Isaac Anderson on tablets of stone. And apparently the recruiting program of the college is running into the problem of many excellent prospects shying away from Maryville because of the nature of the chapel program. It would be indeed tragic to see the new academic emphasis hamstrung by a lack of qualified students.

What is advocated here is not the abolition of chapel. Maryville is a Christian College and worship is a necessary and vital part of the Christian community. Neither is a plan for a higher percentage of chapel cuts being proposed. What is needed is a non-compulsory chapel program where new, stimulating forms of worship are tried in order to make chapel something that one wants to attend. Of course it would be folly to suggest that there would not be a drop in attendence. But is it better to have a full house of largely-empty minds, or a small, fluid body of people really concerned with worship? Which is closer to the true Christian Church?

We certainly hope that this editorial will stimulate a response to both sides of the issue. The Echo will be happy to feature a reasoned reply supporting the necessity of compulsory chapel, as well as letters to the editor advocating its abolition.

THE MAD YAK

I am watching them churn the last mile they'll ever get from me.
They are waiting for me to die;
They want to make buttons out of my bones.
Where are my sisters and brothers?
That tall monk there, loading my uncle, he has a new cap.
And that idiot student of his—I never saw that muffler before.
Poor uncle, he lets them load him.
How sad he is, how tired!
I wonder what they'll do with his bones?
And that beautiful tail!
How many shoelaces will they make of that!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor:

Mark Twain, in his "Papers of the Adam Family," draws parallels between Methuselah's time and the time in which he himself lived. This parallel seems once again to have appeared as the following excerpt demonstrates. Draw conclusions on your own wall.

"The nation has sold its honor for a phrase. ('Our Country, right or wrong!') It has swung itself loose from its safe anchorage and is drifting, its helm is in pirate hands. The phrase needed help, and it got another one: 'Even if the war be wrong we are in it and must fight it out: we cannot retire from it without dishonor.' Why, not even a burglar could have said it better. We cannot withdraw from this sordid raid because to grant peace to those little people upon their terms — independance — would dishonor us. You have flung away Adam's phrase — you should take it up and examine it again. He said, 'An inglorious peace is better than a dishonorable war.'

You have planted a seed, and it will grow."

Wake up! It is time to open our eyes and take a good look at the situation that our college is in. We have to look into our student problems and do something about them, and this has to be done now.

We are into our eighth week now and the student body of Maryville College is showing off its trade mark: painful unawareness and unimaginative apathy. Big things are about to happen on this college campus and what will happen involves the student body. Some great strides have been made up this point in spite of the apathy on this campus, but if we can expect anything more to happen it is going to take an interested student body.

The Student Council is hard at work and is making great advances for the realization of honest student power on the Maryville campus. Did you know about the proposed Student Judiciary? Did you know about the possible change in the alcohol rule? Did you know that there is disscussion as to the validity of manditory chapel at Maryville? You have been told. You must know that these and other issues concern you. But do you know that none of these things will come about unless you the students of Maryville, the people that should care the most, generate some enthusiasm and help with some of the work that is involved. If you can't work actively, let the members of the Student Council know that you are behind them, and if you aren't, let them have some of your ideas.

Is there something about Maryville that you don't like? Why don't you change it? You can you know.

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the editorial Elliot Ness. The situation described was accurate and "the new set of realistic laws" is clearly necessary. I am in agreement totally with this idea of a new liberal alcohol ruling.

If the students who are performing violations don't respect the law it is up to them to change it. Until it is changed, drinker and non-drinker are both living in a private society and as citizens should uphold this law. Disobedience and rebellion of this law will only serve to make the faculty more resigned in the archaic view that the use of alcohol is detrimental. If we, as students, want emancipation then we must prove we are worthy of self-determinism by living according to the laws of our particular society. If social change isn't forthcoming by recognized means, then, and only then, are we justified in violation of this law in an attempt to relieve bondage.

To conclude, as members in a private society which is not entirely free it is our duty to make avail of peaceful means first to promote change. A responsible look at this problem is clearly necessary. If after this attempt no

SECOND ECHO FORUM PROBES COMPULSORY CHAPEL

Question: Should Chapel at Maryville College be compulsory?

Kathie Trowbridge-Senior-Christian Education Major
"No, I don't think it should be compulsory because students who really care will always go, and those who study or sleep will seldom be enthused. There is enough other religious life on campus, and perhaps a different type of service would be more appropriate. A worship service involves serving God in the way a person wants to. Students should be allowed to worship in a way meaningful to them. I know this is a church related college, but how many churches require attendance?"

Jim Cannon-Sophomore-Chemistry Major
"I don't personally like to go. Convocation is all right."

Jon Hancher-Junior-Physical Education Major
"Compulsory chapel hardly fits the new curriculum structure. Freedom is important in the new curriculum and should be important in chapel."

Fred Callies-Junior- Psychology Major
"I don't feel that man should be forced to accept a compulsory form of a ritual that should be left up to his own personal belief and have the opportunity to express it as best suits his needs. I get a lot out of it and would go anyway.

Don Brackbill-Senior-Phychology Major
"I can't see the need for chapel other than a wake-up time. A certain amount of convocations should be required if the speakers are pertinent."

Nancy Davidson-Junior-Elementary Education Major
"Chapel means nothing to me, but I can see why it is compulsory at a church related college."

Martha Hegner-Senior-Sociology Major
"No! At this age level, it should be up to the individual."

Lynn Raby-Junior-Physical Education Major
"We are supposed to be finding out things for ourselves, and compulsory chapel doesn't give us this opportunity."

Ralph McCampbell-Senior-English Major
"Compulsory chapel is more of a detriment to spiritual development than is voluntary worship. I got more out of sitting alone in the chapel for thirty minutes before the Georgetown game than from all the chapel services I have attended."

Mary Jo Martin-Freshman
"I don't get much out of it. People wouldn't go it weren't compulsory unless they get something from it. Chapel seems to be repetitious anyway."

Steve Horning-Sophomore-German Major
"Some good programs are presented in chapel, and everyone should go. It's part of a liberal arts education. We should be allowed more cuts, though."

Joan Michaels-Junior-History Major
"No, a service is more meaningful when it is not compulsory."

Anita Emerick-Senior-Art Major
"I think we are responsible enough to make our own decisions, but if chapel were not compulsory, few would go."

Janna Eerenberg-Freshman-English
"It's a Christian college; they have a right to make us go to chapel. We can go to a non-denominational college if we want."

Marc Woodward-Freshman-History Major
"We should have chapel, because this is a church related college. But making it compulsory is stretching the point."

Betty Vincent-Senior-Psychology Major
"We should clarify the fact that we aren't trying to do away with chapel; chapel will always exist. A bell will make you get up and go, but it will not open your mind. Voluntary chapel would mean that it would be more beneficial to those who are really interested."

Barbara Laverick-Freshman
"Well, I wouldn't go if they didn't have chapel; but that only means that I'm lazy in the morning. I get a lot out of chapel."

Sherry Wood-Senior-Elementary Education Major
"No. Maybe we should have chapel just once a week."

Steve Renegar-Freshman-History Major
"Yes, it's a good idea, but should be later."

portant than just another demonstration of the "old bohemianism" and the "never-ending conflict of generations."

Today's youthful rebels against society, he says, may be embarked upon "the first heresies of liberalism," somewhat after the manner of earlier groups of religious heretics to whom they bear certain resemblances—including the Christians of Second Century Rome who were " 'bad citizens, refusing public employment and avoiding service in the army' . . . They had no temples, no altars, no images, and boasted just that . . . Of learning they had little and cared less. Nor had they any great interest in respectable people who observed the rules of society and tried to keep it running, they cared only for the outcast and miserable. To be a sinner, they seemed to say, was the one sure way to be saved. They were altogether of a seditious and revolutionary character."

change is coming forth, then the citizens are free to violate the law in an attempt to bring change.

B. S.

Dear Editor,

I have become quite discouraged to hear the constant complaints of my fellow students around campus. Some students feel it is a tradition to complain about something, either the food, attendance policy, or the courses. The only thing I have to say to these students is that they stop trying to see the bad side of Maryville College but to look at some of the good qualities; such as, that Maryville College is one of the top thirty-five colleges in the South, the well trained teaching staff, and some of the liberal rules which some of the large universities don't enjoy. I feel that the constant complainers should take a look at the facts and see just how lucky they are to be at Maryville College continuing their education and building a better future for themselves.

Sincerely yours,
James Burkins

Editorial reply:

I think that Mr. Burkin is confusing complaining with criticism. There is a valid and very important distinction. I might also suggest that some weekend he visit a large university and then report to us on the rules those students labor under of which we are free. He can borrow one of the 9 cars on campus to get there. But he had better not touch alcohol while visiting, even if he is half a continent away from good old liberal Maryville.

of the play. He gave a convincing portrayal from beginning to end. In this production Jon Lutz as Marco, the avenger for his brother and himself, reached a new plateau in his acting in the Playhouse. Lutz exhibited pathos as the audience grew to feel the compelling factors of his existence: the duty to his caretakers in America and his duty in Sicily. More things may be expected of Mr. Lutz. In addition to the fine direction of the play was Dalton Eddleman's appearance as Mr. Alfieri, an omniscient lawyer-narrator who added to the unified effect of the play by providing the audience with additional information on the action. Mr. Eddleman's appearance as actor assured the audience of his proficiency in at least two areas of theatrical production.

Steve Wintermute produced a set which was unique without being busy or confused. The simplicity of the set, in fact, gave greater leeway as well as responsibility to the actors, to which they responded effectively.

The general effect of the presentation was potent. It was a good beginning for the Playhouse season. Perhaps for the next Playhouse production we may expect a better-than-average turnout from the college community.

gether by his addresses to the audience. Mr. West's fine portrayal did much toward creating the desired effect of religious reverence, as did the procession and recession of the Monks singing a Latin plain chant, Te lucis ante terminum.

Maryville College was privileged to have this fine program in the Artists Series. "Curlew River" is something which is experienced rather than heard and seen, and once experienced is never forgotten.

Pig Skin Re-Pre-View

The beginning of the 1967 football season saw the Maryville Scots in fine form. A winning season seemed inevitable. As the season progressed, however, it seemed as though a dark cloud had enveloped our fighting Scots.

The season opener placed the Scots at Hampton-Sydney. A few loyal fans found seats and watched their beloved team play a great first half. The tide was turned during the second two quarters putting Hampton-Sidney on top at the end of the game 14 to 10, sending the Scots home to face Georgetown the following Saturday.

A large crowd was at hand and the Big Red rewarded them with a T. D. on the first series of downs. The Lion's defense dominated the rest of the game, however, and our visitors became the victors. The defense of Maryville must be commended despite the outcome of the game. Twice the Lions were held from scoring attempts, and forced to try a field goal. A final score of 12-7 shows that this was a defensive game.

The coming of Mars Hill proved to be a break in the dark heavens. A fine game was played by our Big Eleven and a well deserved victory was attained. Again defense was the focal point of the game leaving a 7-0 final score.

The Wasps of Emory and Henry jolted our boys on their field. Thirty-five points were scored against us in this game as compared with only 26 pts. in the first three games. This was followed by a defeat by Livingston State the following Saturday.

The dark cloud seemed to be persisting, brightened only by the loyal spirit of the Scot's fans and the now grim determination of the team. Harding was our target for the big Homecoming game. Although the final score put Harding on top 27-16 enough cannot be said of the fine game which Our Big Red played. We were strong both on offense and defense. After the game the fans despersed, not with a feeling of defeat, but rather with great pride in the team who fought valiantly in every moment of the game.

The remainder of the season will be in contention with Millsaps, Carson-Newman, our arch-rivals, and Southwesetrn. With the highest amount of school spirit in two years, and the great potential of our team, these victories, especially Carson-Newman, will come.

STUDENT COUNCIL PASSES CHAPEL RESOLUTION

Compulsory Chapel Opposed

On Tuesday evening November 7, the Student Council of the Student Body unanimously passed a resolution declaring its opposition to compulsory chapel. This stand is based upon the idea that compulsory chapel is in opposition to the academic and spiritual rights of the student. This resolution was the result of a lengthy discussion concerning chapel at the Student Council meeting on Wednesday, November 1.

The discussion at the November 1 meeting of Council centered around two areas of major concern to the college: chapel and student judiciary. With the consent of those in attendance, Student Body President, Doug Gamble, dispensed with the standard committee reports in order to move on to the more pressing business of the meeting. Every representative attended the two hour meeting with the exception of Alan Cropper, Junior Representative.

The meeting opened with discussion of the chapel situation. Comments were made as to the over-abundant announcements and extemporaneous speeches which generally detract from the service. The set hour for chapel received token attention. The final concensus, however, was that the basic problem lies with the principle of compulsory chapel, a supposed worship service.

When Craig Rigell's motion for the resolution was passed, Gamble called on Brian Childs, chairman of the Student Judiciary committee, to report on the progress of that committee. Childs stated that while the committee has been working on the judiciary proposal to be presented to Student-Faculty Senate, the area of legislation acts as a stumbling block for a new judicial system.

Multiplicity and inconsistency of rules are not new phenomena at Maryville College. For many decades the Maryville student has

Con't. p. 2, col. 1

Resolved: That we, the Student Council of Maryville College, find obligatory chapel contrary to the spirit of a Christian academic community. Justification of this position is based primarily upon the following:

1) Our present chapel system is contrary to the spirit of the Collgee's statement of purpose, which states that "an education that truly liberates involves full and free exploration."
2) Required attendance at a worship service is contrary to the basic tenents of the Christian faith.
3) Academic penalty for non-attention violates the spirit of free thought necessary in a learning community.
4) We feel that compulsory attendance, in fact, defeats both the concept and the effectiveness of corporate worship.

May it be emphasized that our objection is not directed toward chapel as an institution, but rather toward its legalistic and compulsory nature.

AAUP Supports Student's Rights

WASHINGTON (CPS) — The American Association of University Professors has become the second of five national organizations to go on record in favor of a joint statement on the rights and freedoms of students.

The statement endorses such rights as a student role in policy-making and due process for students in disciplinary cases.

The AAUP's national council unanimously endorsed the statement during a closed meeting here last weekend. Although the statement still must be presented to the full AAUP membership at a meeting next April, passage there appears likely. The Council is the organization's policy-making body and its recommendations have considerable influence on the membership. The Council consists of 30 elected representatives.

The National Student Association was the first of the five organizations to endorse the statement. This action came at the NSA Congress in August.

In addition to AAUP and NSA, the statement was drafted by representatives of the American Association of Colleges, the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, and the National Association of Women's Deans and Counselors. The governing body of AAC will consider the statement in January, and the policy-making bodies of NASPA and NAWDC will review it next April.

These three hurdles for the statement are considered tougher than NSA and AAUP approval, since these groups, particularly the AAC, were more conservative in their views during the drawing up of the statement this summer. A survey of college presidents conducted by the magazine College Management showed that most of them agreed with basic academic freedoms of students in principle but were less willing to approve such practical applications as a free student press and free choice of campus speakers.

The statement is considered significant because the bodies which drafted it represent administrators, faculty members, and students.

Robert Van Waes, associate secretary of AUP, said the AAUP council was "very enthusiastic"

GRAMBLING COLLEGE

Students Demonstrate

GRAMBLING, La. (CPS) — Grambling College has suspended 25 students who have been leading demonstrations and class strikes aimed at upgrading the "academic environment" of the school and de-emphasizing sports.

The students, 22 males and three coeds, were given two hours to leave the campus. Among these suspended were the student body president and the editor of the student newspaper.

The mass suspensions, however, did not end a student boycott of classes which began last Wednesday. The college, which is predominately Negro, has a total enrollment of 4,200 students, but only 200 attended classes Monday. Student leaders said the strike will continue indefinitely.

The tense situation here last week came to a head Saturday when Louisiana Gov. John McKeithen ordered out 500 National Guardsmen to blunt possible student uproars. The troops never arrived at the campus, but are still standing by at Ruston, a town six miles away.

The suspension of the student leaders Monday came as a surprise. The students were called before a joint meeting of the college's Disciplinary Committee and the Interdepartmental Council. Three minutes after the meeting began the suspensions were announced.

Three students are members of the Disciplinary Committee, but two of them, the student body president and vice president, were among the 25 suspended. Other members of the committee are faculty members and administrators.

Grambling President Ralph Jones, who doubles as baseball coach, refused to make any comment on the week of demonstrations. However, Noldan Thomas, a member of a 12-man faculty mediating group selected by the students, characterized the school as ranking academically among the "lowest of Negro colleges in the country."

Thomas said athletics are definitely overemphasized at Grambling. "Athletics are prioritized in funds, the yearbook, and public relations materials, and even the president has made the baseball hall of fame."

About 3,500 of the school's 4,200 students met in a mass rally Sunday night and decided to continue the boycott of classes this week. Students said the strike will continue until their de-

WAR DECLARED ON U.S.!

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (CPS) — The independent republic of Bird Island, situated in the middle of a city lake here, has declared total war on the United States, according to the British news service reporters.

The newly proclaimed republic has a population of six. It would have been seven, but one of the founding fathers fell overboard from the landing craft—a dinghy—and had to swim back to shore.

Danish police on the Banks of Lake Sortedamssoeen were making invasion plans today because the Bird Islanders — students from an organization called Zenith—refused to give up their 1200-square-yard country.

The group has sent a telegram to the United Nations seeking membership and a cable to the U.S. Embassy here declaring total war.

Editorial

Student Council is apparently overcoming its early inertia and is beginning to deal with some of the pressing problems facing the Maryville student body. It seems to have defined three issues as deserving primary consideration: compulsory chapel, a student judiciary, and the alcohol question. The first tangible sign of action taken is the resolution recently passed concerning compulsory chapel (the text of this resolution appears on the front page of this issue of the Echo).

Let us not worry that the "small" issues will be ignored. The daily functions of Council are being performed quite adequately. Most of the various committees seem to be actively engaged in maintaining the normal course of campus activity. Minor problems are being dealt with, for instance the notable achievement of convincing Miss Ware to double the daily milk ration. (Miss Ware, we thank you from the bottom of our better-fed stomachs.)

An ever-present danger, however, is the possibility of losing the major issues in the trivia. In the past far too much time at Council meetings was devoted to committee reports and aimless discussion. The last couple of meetings have centered on significant problems and it is hoped that the individual Council members will now devote most of their time to the larger scope of campus activity. To insure this, the student body should be constantly confronting Council with opinions on issues. Students can exercise influence over matters concerning the college. In an attempt to keep the student body appraised of a current definition of "student power" the Echo plans to serialize portions of a "Joint Statement on Rights and Freedoms of Students" prepared by various national educational associations. The first installment of this appears on page 3. This should be vital to everyone on this campus.

In order to implement the concepts in this statement, the Student Council must be made aware of the opinions circulating among the student body. Contact your representatives. Tell them how you feel about the way things are going. Even (horror of horrors) attend a Council meeting—they are open to you, you know.

In the past Maryville students have been willing to sit back and bitch at the student leadership without becoming really involved in the problems. We can no longer afford this luxury. It is time to realize that the only way actual program can be achieved is through a student body that first makes its opinions known to its leaders, and secondly supports those leaders in their efforts. Students of Maryville unite! You have nothing to lose but your apathy.

Optimism was the reaction to the Convocation program when it was announced. It was believed to be another fine part of the new curriculum and that after a few stimulating speakers it would not have to be mandatory: people can't be forced to go where they want to go.

The feeling of excitement that was supposed to be generated is not felt, and indeed it could be true that if convocation were not mandatory the attendance would be remarkable low. What is the problem? How could a very exciting method of our new educational system become another Maryville pain in the neck?

The speakers that have been in the Convocation program thus far have been highly qualified. There is no doubt about that. There have been some interesting people and their points have been well said. The problem is that we have not had a real dialogue. To become truly educated, both sides of the issue, or issues, must be presented. Could it not be possible to have two opposing points of view, in two consecutive weeks?

We have had conservative Christains, a scientfic idealist and dreamer, and a land-owning aristocrat from Viet Nam (who, of course, does not want his land put in jeopardy). Why can't we have an atheist, or at least an agnostic, with something to say about humanity. Why don't we have a peace advocate speak upon the other side of the Viet Nam issue. (Perhaps we could have Eugene Smathers, Moderator, General Assembly United Presbyterian Church.)

We have a right to at least hear both sides of any issue. That is basic to the educational process. If Convocation is not to help us in our educational process, with dialogue, then we should have been told. Up to now, it has been misleading.

COMMENT ON COUNCIL

As a good farmer might say, "Good seed, well planted in spring, has a fine chance to produce a plentiful harvest in the fall." Is this important to the farmer? He's only staking his life on it, that's all.

* * * * * *

That sounds like what? — student government elections? How stupid! . . . Why, what's with all this planting stuff? Elections — that's just when you go and put an "X" for that nice guy who smiles a lot.

Did you vote for that nice guy who smiles a lot? You should run on over to a Student Council meeting some time — just to check your harvest. He most likely will be sitting (at that round table), watching (the discussion buzz by), and smiling (at how nice this position looks on his record).

This is a good time to observe that candidate whom you voted for last spring. Have you heard that amidst the discussions in the last Student Council meeting three representatives had not one word to offer? Have you heard that two defeated candidates of last spring were in attendance with pertinent comments . . . but no votes? It might interest some people to find out that they are being represented by a member who displays no opinion about such minor matters as chapel or a new judicial system.

Whatever the situation, those of you who have some opinion might just think twice. Remember . . . the smiler votes.

been living by several different sets of rules. Most common sources for such rules are the Student Handbook, Cues for Co-eds, and the little rule book. (This is the book which some person of authority, i.e. campus security officer, uses when he needs a handy rule.) One example of the inconsistency of the stated rules is the rule concerning "visiting in one another's rooms by members of the opposite sex," which appears on page eight of the Student Handbook. Last year this rule was applicable to women as stated in Cues for Co-eds, but there was no reference to this rule for the male population in last year's handbook.

The basic question involved here, of course, is the origin of the rules which appear occasionally without warning. From whence do these rules come? As one observant attendant stated, "LSD comes on the scene, Life Magazine runs an artcle on it, and Maryville College passes a rule against it."

Council hopes to move rapidly in both of these areas. These matters are indicative of the road ahead for student government this year.

After only 72 hours of having no sleep and no food, guess who has the NERVE to interrupt our much needed rest? You guessed it. A bunch of wild, happy-go-lucky guys who don't want rest, but silk, silk, silk! We only have a few words to say to them (are you listening, guys?): Thanks a lot, boys! We would have loved to help drag you up the balconies (as if you would have needed help?), but were slightly hindered by a few rules and regulations Why, we might have had our heads cut off! We had many, many more souveniers for you, but to hand them out might have meant twenty-five campuses — a month! Oh, you say you thought everybody already had a semester of campuses? That's understandable, but really, those are actually the closing hours! Please believe us. Oh, come on, now—the hours aren't that bad—as long as you don't want to go to a long movie, or off campus, or anything unreasonable like that. What? You mean you don't know what it's like to be locked up after 10:30 (sometimes it's as late as 12:00!)? It's really an experience. But then Alcatraz would be, too. We can't really complain—not too loud, anyway: we might get points for talking during quiet study hours. Now, boys, don't try to tell us you were just looking at her ring. We don't want the girls to get reprimanded for holding hands in the parlor! Don't you respect the rules like WE do? You know we should always sit around and study; what else is there to do? Oh, and don't you DARE sit in the parlor before noon every day, either. When we get really riled up or restless in the middle of the night, we can always go and take a walk. Of course, there is always the risk of getting dizzy from walking around the quads in circles, and the risk of getting yelled at for walking too loudly. We really get to know the dorm pretty well. We should only have as much time to get to know the campus, too. But who knows? Some day in the future (could it be nearer than we think?) we might get to know it. We might have curfew extended a full 15 minutes or half hour! But until then, keep trying, because we may be at the windows just waiting, waiting, waiting! But right now this typewriter is typing too loudly, so we say take heed, and follow these helpful(?), though somewhat mid-Victorian rules. We must respect other cultures, you know.

JOINT STATEMENT ON RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS OF STUDENTS

National educational associations representing faculty members, administrators, and students have developed this Statement on the Rights and Freedoms of Students and propose it for adoption as a joint statement of principle. Joint efforts to draft a statement began in the fall of 1966.

Under the auspices of the American Association of University Professors, thirty-three representatives from ten national educational organizations met in Washington, D. C., on November 13-14, 1966, to discuss the academic freedom of students and to explore the feasibility of reaching a consensus on standards in this area. Five organizations — The American Association of University Professors. the Association of American Colleges, the U. S. National Student Association, the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, and the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors — participated in the planning of the conference. Five additional organizations — the American Council on Education, Association of American Universities, Association for Higher Education, Association of State Colleges and Universities, and the American College Personnel Association — participated in the conference. Those who attended concluded the meeting by concurring in the establishment of an ad hoc committee to draft a statement for possible joint endorsement.

The drafting committee, comprised of one representative each from AAUP, AAC, USNSA, NASPA, and NAWDC, with the staff assistance of Dr. Peter H. Armacost, AAC, and Mrs. Robert Van Waes, AAUP, met in Washington on June 12, 1967. The joint statement which follows is a mutual effort in every respect. While it owes much to statements proposed by the AAUP, AAC, and USNSA, the suggestions and perspectives of other educational organizations have been taken into account. The result is a consensus that links good standards to viable practices.

The Joint Statement on Rights and Freedoms of Students as members of the academic community will now be submitted to each of the ten national educational organizations that contributed to its formulations for such action as their committees, commissions, and governing bodies consider appropriate. It is hoped that a number of these organizations will endorse the Joint Statement at an early date. The statement should not be considered the official policy of any organization until there has been formal action by that association.

Preamble

Academic institutions exist for the transmission of knowledge, the pursuit of truth, the development of students, and the general well-being of society. Free inquiry and free expression are indispensable to the attainment of these goals. As members of the academic community, students should be encouraged to develop the capacity for critical judgment and to engage in a sustained and independent search for truth. Institutional procedures for achieving these purposes may vary from campus to campus, but the minimal standards of academic freedom of students outlined below are essential to any community of scholars.

Freedom to teach and freedom to learn are inseparable facets of academic freedom. The freedom to learn depends upon appropriate opportunities and conditions in the classroom, on the campus, and in the larger community. Students should exercise their freedom with responsibility.

The responsibility to secure and to respect general conditions conducive to the freedom to learn is shared by all members of the academic community. Each college and university has a duty to develop policies and procedures which provide and safeguard this freedom. Such policies and procedures should be developed at each institution within the framework of general standards and with the broadest possible participation of the members of the academic community. The purpose of this statement is to enumerate the essential provisions for student freedom to learn, about the principles of academic freedom for students. He termed the join statement "a big step toward creating a national consensus on certain student rights and freedoms and a prelude to achieving a national concensus on the student role in institutional government."

Some of the major provisions of the statement include:

*A long list of due process requirements in major cases, including putting the burden of proof on the college and guaranteeing the student's right to defend himself.

*The right to attend college without regard to race, to invite speakers of students' own choosing, and to have complete freedom of off-campus action without fear of university punishment for the violation of civil laws.

*Protection of students from "arbitrary and prejudiced" grading by professors.

*A free student press. Whenever possible, the statement says, student newpapers should be legally and financially autonomous from the university as a separate corporation. When this is not possible, the statement urges a student press sufficiently autonomous to remain a vehicle for freedom of inquiry and expression.

The joint drafting committee also made recommendations for the implementation of the principles outlined in the statement. Perhaps the most significant was the recommendation for joint approaches to regional accrediting agencies to seek embodiment of the new principles in standards for accreditation.

charm and friendliness. All seems the picture of happiness and harmony. But there is discontent. This school has recently instigated a new curriculum, one that is designed to make the student think and examine his life, its values, and the world in which he will have to live. Its aim is to produce a more alert and knowing adult. This school also locks up its women students at 10:30 p.m. five nights of the week. It also requires them to sign out and in if they wish to attend a meeting, go to the library, or go out on a date at any time after 7:30 p.m.

It seems an ironic duality that on the one hand this school tries to make its students think, and succeeds well, only to show that the students aren't really to be trusted in forming values and accepting responsibilities. If the school is using the curfew as an enforcement of morals, the school had better realize the truth in the statement, "Love conquers all." If the curfew is to make sure that the students aren't out when they should be studying, then why take the "shotgun" approach? Why not set curfews and curbs along academic instead of sexual lines? I am sure the administration does not do this just to be nasty to us, but I really can't figure out their reasoning or see how it applies to today's college life. Curfews, sign-outs for dates and studies, and "campusing" should all either be eliminated or extremely libralized. On weekends the curfew should be done away with completely. Also, trust must be shown by the administration, possibly with the institution of an honor check-in system on nights with a curfew. These girls are not children. They are being taught and trained to think things out rationally as knowing Christians, I, for one, feel it is a time for trust.

30 Volunteers wanted for Archaeology "digs" in England in 1968.

A new and exciting opportunity in England is now offered to College students wanting to spend next summer in Europe in an interesting way.

You may help to reveal the secrets of a Roman villa, an iron-age hill fort or the structure of a medieval town or Anglo-Saxon cathedral before they disappear, perhaps for ever. Expanding housing programs, city centre redevelopment and new highway projects in Britain to-day have opened up many new possibilities for archaeological investigation.

You may help in this important work, earn credits, make international friends and receive valuable training in archaeology, by joining a program sponsored by the Association for Cultural Exchange, the British non-profit organization.

Volunteers first join a three-week seminar for training in British archaeology and excavation techniques at Queen's College, Oxford. They then split up into small groups for three or more weeks "digging" on an archaeological site. Total cost of the program is $725.00 including round-trip air transportation from New York. Part scholarships are available to acceptable student with a "B" plus average.

Write now further details to United States Representative: Association for Cultural Exchange, 539 West 112th Street, New York, N. Y., 10025. Closing application date is expected to be beginning of January 1968.

mands of the administration are met.

Among other things, an organization which calls itself the Informers has demanded the dismissal of seven Grambling administrators. They have also demanded that President Jones resign his other position as baseball coach.

Other student demands are that President Jones:

—Improve unsatisfactory conditions in the realm of administrative policy and see that the academics get primary stress.

—Perform his duty without prejudice and despotism and eliminate his paternalistic views of students.

—See that students' funds are handled honestly.

—Stress political awareness among faculty members and students, "thus providing a check on the white power structure in Baton Rouge."

Grambling has a nation-wide reputation for its athletic teams. The school has produced a high number of professional athletes, among them Willie Davis of the Green Bay Packers; Ernie Ladd of the Kansas City Chieftains, and Willis Reed of the New York Knickerbockers.

Saturday was Homecoming Day and more than 1,000 students refused to sit in the stands, preferring to remain under the scoreboard. In addition, the entire Homecoming Queen's Court left their appointed places to join the demonstrators.

CHEERING SECTION

"Howie, Howie, Chilhowee . . ." The Maryville College cheerleaders started off this year's cheering season during the second week of school with a trip to Hampton-Sydney in Virginia to cheer for the Scots as they met the Tigers in a tough grid-iron battle. Although the Scots were defeated (it was close!) and there were not many Maryville fans in the stands, spirit was high and the cheerleaders and the spectators were really behind the team all the way. The following week elections were held, and four new members were added to the squad — Linda Poe, Larry "Fang" Sharpe, Trudy Little and Bill Mathieson — plus two new alternates, Jane Strickland and Jerry Mullendore. The newly elected members combined with the "old" cheerleaders, Craig Rigell, Lynn Anthony, Tom Graham, and Mary Sue Harris ,to elect Craig Rigell their captain for the coming year. Under Craig's untiring pep-ability the squad has worked hard to build up the spirit since little was left over from last year. Posters and banners have been put up before each game, and send-offs organized for the teams departure for away games.

The squad has revived old and nearly-forgotten cheers to the usual list, and new chants, such as "hey, whomp'em up side the head." More practice has been done on the various gymnastic stunts that are used, and several new ones have been invented for more variety.

The cheerleaders unfortunately have had trouble finding transportation to most of the away games, but they have made it to Hampton-Sydney and Emory & Henry and are currently working on plans which will hopefully get them to Southwestern in Memphis on November 18. The college band made it to the Emory & Henry game last month, providing both musical entertainment and added pep and spirit. The band always adds to the cheers, and the cheerleaders are always glad to see this enthusiasm.

The Friday before the homecoming game on October 21 was Color Day when the Scots turned out in their patriotic school colors of orange and garnet. In contrast to this, the cheerleaders have planned an Clash Day, to be held on Friday the tenth, the day before the Carson Newman game. On Clash Day everyone is asked to wear his most hideously matching clothes. There may even be a contest to find the ugliest Scot.

A lot of work has been done and a lot of time has been put in by these Scot cheerleaders, but it has been a genuine pleasure for them to see the results: plenty of spirit to support our rough-and-ready team all the way. Let's continue to show our men we're behind them 100 percent!

M.C. - Millsaps Football Game

Coach Tomlinson's football team was disappointed last Friday afternoon at Millsaps, Miss. The game resolved nothing ending in a 0-0 tie. Maryville controlled the ballgame driving inside the 10 yard twice and inside the 20 yard line four times. The Scots were not able to score on a muddy field in cold; windy weather. The Scots' place-kicking specialist, Jim Cannon, missed two field goals in the windy weather.

The Majors gained 155 yards on the ground compared to 145 for Maryville, but could only penetrate the Scots' territory once when they missed their only field goal chance. Maryville's defensive team turned in an outstanding performance in the game.

Halfback Lynn Dodez led the Scots rushing attack with 65 yards. The bad weather hindered the Scots' passing game as they gained only 7 yards on 1 completion in 11 attempts. Both teams gathered 10 first downs.

Maryville is now 1-5-1 with games remaining with arch-rival Carson Newman November 11 at home and at Southwestern November 18.

"Can God Come?"

I am one of the flock that has gone astray. Somewhere along the way I got born into this world. When I got here I had no guiding hands or great protectors. Subsequently I took refuge from the cruel world in a church. One day a man said there was someone who loved me. This someone had been labeled as God (definition of God—a personification of man, but He is perfect). I was told this God was good. He was to be my guiding hand. I, like a lot of lost kids at the gullible age, believed it. But as I grew this God grew too. I wasn't afraid of this God. I wanted an education about this guy because I knew there must be more to him. I had no money to further my education so I said God is there a place I can go for help? The church has sponsored four years of my education or was it God? I came here to major in studying my God. Little did I know my education about God was to come from living with people. I have learned to watch people because they teach me about God. These past few days I have become skeptical of man, my teacher. If it weren't for man how would I have learned about this God. But now I see man on the run from God. I want to run too—because my friends are going? But I can't leave God. People have said read the signs on the suubway walls, look at neon lights, listen to popular songs, read the poetry—man is lost. Man keeps looking for himself. In mirrors he sees illusions of himself. Man is talking about God but "by God" he is not living. Do all the searching for your freedom. You want your meaning of existence but remember in each man lives his own God even if it be himself and when you run from God you are running from yourself. How long are we going to run before man the machine becomes man the reality. How many churches are we going to destroy before we realize they are our foundation. Man where are you going—can God come?

Wildlife lovers:

A snarling group of fierce wild cheetahs may be found in room 117 Carnegie Hall. We hope many of you will take advantage of this unique sporting opportunity.

On November 11, the Maryville Scots face the Carson Newman Eagles in Maryville's last home game. This game as in the past will be an exciting contest.

The Maryville vs. Carson-Newman game has become an annual event looked forward to by both schools. Through the years the Eagles have come to be the Scot's greatest rival, and the annual classic grows stronger each year.

In the light of Maryville's disappointing 1967 season, I cannot safely predict a triumph for the Scots this year. But, with reports of an unusually weak Carson-Newman team this year neither can I assure a victory for the Eagles. I do predict a hard fought contest with a close score deciding the victor.

NEW JUDICIARY FOR MC

The Executive Council has passed a new Judicial System for Maryville College. This new system is now in effect and is summarized in the following paragraphs.

The system consists of two main branches: the Judicial Council and the Review Board, or Commission on Judicial Procedure. Members of these two bodies will be selected by a Nominating Committee (Committee on Committees) composed of six persons, three students, and three members of the faculty. Dr. Shields is the chairman of this committee; also belonging to it are Dr. Davis, Miss Lightfoot, Janet Wells, Meta Robinson, and Brian Childs.

The Judicial Council will be composed of five members: two faculty and three students. The chairman of this council will be a student elected by the other members. The Review Board will consist of three members: one student, one faculty member, and the Dean of Students. This body rules in cases of suspension only.

A case may be brought to the Judicial Council in two basic ways: first, a case of discipline on the dormitory level may be referred to the Deans or to the Judicial Council by recommendation of the Dorm Council; second, all cases out of dormitory jurisdiction may be referred to the Council at the discretion of the Deans' offices.

The Review Board hears cases of suspension which the student in question wishes to appeal after the Judicial Council has come to a tentative or preliminary decision. First it is determined whether or not there is sufficient new information regarding the situation to warrant considering it a "Review Case." If enough such information exists, the Review Board arrives at observations which are shared with the Judicial Council. The latter comes to the final decision.

A record of documents (constitutions, regulations of the college, etc.) will be kept by the Review Board. In addition, a record of all cases plus principles of interpretation of existing documents will be maintained in the Dean of Student's office as a continuing workbook for reference purposes.

Prelude to FORT MUDGE

This will be a recurring attempt (by those who somebody, probably in a state of confusion, elected as representatives to the court of Saint Joe.) to relate some reactions, hopefully relevant, about Maryville College's future as revealed in reflecting upon the constant state of catching diverse species of hell.

Fort Mudge is a memorial dump (see Pogo) which contains at least one of everything. A column so titled three years ago was well read. Usually all of it. We hope this one will be.

FORT MUDGE

It is obvious that the white Anglo-Saxon Protestant has become a fading minority in the world situation. The once powerful idea that the existence of the Christian is the only existence desirable is badly shaken. The size of the Christian Church is shrinking in relation to the world in which it exists. As Mr. Cartlidge put it, "Maybe the Church can go back to being the church instead of being an arm of Western culture."

So what? Where does that put us? Maryville College, like most colleges related to the Church, has made a definite theoretical commitment to the Christian faith. It has developed an educational philosophy, best revealed on page eight of the Catalog, which gives the student, in theory, the comfort of knowing where the college stands concerning the order of values.

The College assumes Christianity's basic tenets and professes a belief in the individual's right to proceed "to establish his own identity and his own assumptions." At Maryville, "the total college experience is designed to prepare the student for effective participation and leadership in the larger community of mankind."

We all have an educational philosophy, whether we have ever identified it or not. Is yours Maryville's? Or Maryville's yours? Or does it matter?

In order to participate to any relevant degree in Maryville College, we have to have a theory about what a college related to (but hardly supported by) the Presbyterian Church ought to be doing. In light of the world. The whole world. Including China.

Your educational theory. Maryville's educational theory. Similiar? Not similiar?

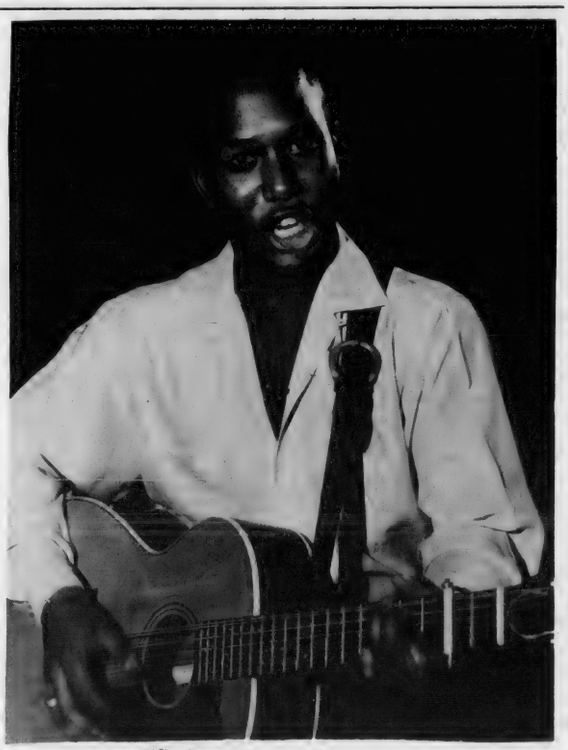
YALE GOES PASS-FAIL

NEW HAVEN (CPS) — The Yale University faculty has voted to replace numerical grading with a system under which students will be given one of four designations for their work—fail, pass, high pass or honors.

The new system will begin next year and continue on an experimental basis for at least five years.

Yale's present system makes use of a grading scale from 40 to 100, with 60 as the lowest passing grade. The university at present compiles cumulative averages for each student, but it will no longer do so when the new system goes into effect.



The change at Yale is largely the result of recommendations made by the faculty's Course of Study Committee, according to Strobe Tallbott, chairman of the Yale Daily News. Some student organizations have been working to end the numerical system, however.

Derek Shearer, head of the Student Advisory Board, said the new system "moves away from the pseudo-scientific claims of the numbers system." He added that "It should make for an improved class atmosphere, for there will be no more quibbling about numbers. There would, I hope, be more concern for the quality of a student's work in terms of his ability."

Still undecided is the question whether or not the university's two academic honor lists—the dean's list and ranking scholar designation—are to be continued. Talbott is hopeful they will be abolished, but indicated that the new grading system will have important consequences for students regardless of what is done about the honor lists.

When students apply to graduate school in the future, according to Talbott, "recommendations are going to be much more important than they have been. Graduate schools are going to

At a December meeting of The Highland Echo staff, John Braymer was elected Editor-in-Chief, following the resignation of Alfred Keim as Echo editor on November 27, 1967. Braymer is a senior English major, and other changes on the staff were made up of Brian Childs' appointment as Assistant Editor and Marilyn Small's appointment as Business Manager. Childs is a junior religion major while Marilyn Small is a sophomore with a major in English. Karen James, an art major, will also assume the duties of Art Editor. Other members of the staff remained unchanged from the Fall Term. Dr. Mark Davis is Faculty Advisor to The Highland Echo.

Business Manager of The Highland Echo, Marilyn Small, has announced that subscriptions to the newspaper are now on sale for the Winter and Spring Terms. The cost of the subscription is $1.50 and issues of the paper will be mailed immediately upon printing to those whom you would like to receive copies of the paper. Why not buy a subscription for parents, alumni, or other people interested in your existence at MC? Put the name and address of the person who will receive the Echo on a sheet of paper and remit with $1.50 to any member of the staff or to Box 2074 or 2436. UCM SPEAKER

Dr. Reinhart Wolff, a post-doctoral student in sociology at West Berlin University, spoke at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the Fine Arts Center music hall. His announced topic was "Viet Nam and the Cold War," and a question and answer period followed Dr. Wolff's talk. An informal session with students followed in the campus coffeehouse, the Lantern.

Dr. Wolff was brought to the Maryville campus by the UCCF. He was a foreign student delegate to the University Christian Movement's Process '67 and Cleveland Week held in Cleveland, Ohio from December 26th —January 1st. Since Cleveland he has been visiting college and university campuses in the U.S. for West Berlin University. Dr. Wolff is also a member of the University Christian Movement of Germany.

EDITORIAL

The Highland Echo, as it has in the past, hopes to be one of the main arteries of campus communication. The idea of "maintaining a dialogue" is of utmost importance. By means of letters to the editor each member of the college community is free to express his viewpoint on various issues. "Graffiti" will remain, according to its original conception in the Echo, as a page of opinion. Articles of exposition or opinion which are of interest to the college community will be accepted for publication. In these ways the editorial position of the Echo stands unchanged.

Freshmen philosophy students were informed by Mr. Cartlidge that they would find in the course of their education both room and freedom for disagreement. Perhaps the Echo will be the stimulus for this disagreement. If this be the case, let all members of the college community—students, faculty, and administration—bear in mind Nietzsche's idea that "the surest way to corrupt a young man is to teach him to esteem more highly those who think alike than those who think differently."

Sometime ago mention was made of the right to remain silent. With this goes the right to speak. That is, each man has the privilege to state his opinions, beliefs whenever and wherever he sees fit. The catch is that, in doing so, he must consider that others in his presence have the same right.

One weekend early in December, I had a most disturbing experience. In discussions that began with fruitful, constructive efforts, the fashion soon became to see—and hear—who could interrupt someone else the quickest. Too bad. Many sound ideas were lost in the battle of mouths and wits.

Somewhere I learned to let a man reveal his point of view before attacking him. It's only rational. After all, how can a man fight unless he knows what his fighting against? A good speaker is skilled in the art of listening.

Legislation Rocky Ground

In the October 27, 1967 issue of the Echo the students of Maryville College were introduced to the idea of a new judicial system—a system which would, because of its careful creation, be most effective in carrying out the object of a judicial procedure. This object, as presented on the "Graffiti" page "is to enforce and to assist the masses who live under it to live and grow with respect for the standing regulations of the community." This is an admirable objective, indeed, and the new judicial system as presented in this issue looks to be the "careful creation" which can aspire toward its objective.

Upon careful investigation, however, one may anticipate rough waters ahead for this new system. The quotation above alludes to "the standing regulations of the community." Several questions might be given some consideration at this point: Is the new judiciary going to be able to function properly while trying to enforce "laws which seem archaic to us, are foreign to us, and are not supported by us," as one student has expressed the situation? What "standing regulations" are the judiciary going to enforce? As it stands, Maryville College has yet to develop a cohesive set of rules and regulations under which a judicial system can function.

Inherent in these two questions is another problem—that of the origin of rules and regulations that are to be enforced under a judicial system. Rules have had a way of passing in and out of existence with little ado. Such was the case concerning the use of LSD and other drugs at Maryville—a prohibition which just reached the Maryville scene this year. It was not publicized by what means this rule came into existence. Another ruling of even more hazy origins concerns the hours for recreational activity. For at least the past four years, students have been able to use the Intramural Gym for a Sunday evening basketball game. Without notice the gym began to be locked at 5:30 Sunday afternoons. Who can or who is going to explain this particular ruling? (Chances are that anyone who intends to investigate its origin might save time in starting higher on the administrative chain of power than the office of the Dean of Students.) This ruling, of course, is not nearly so important in essence as is the means by which it was created. Similar rulings, in origin, can come into existence just as easily as this one did and we have little reason to believe that this will not happen again and again.

A codification of the rules and regulations seems to be the necessary drawing-in which would "assist the masses . . . to live and grow with respect for the standing regulations of the community." While a legalistic state of affairs sounds rather ominous at homey Maryville, the student would get a clearer picture of the "everlasting yeas and nays" under which he is actually living anyway. A well organized legislative structure with the Code as its product would hopefully discourage "independent study" in the field of legislation.

The January issues of the Echo will feature discussions and explanations of the organizations which play some part in the legislative process at Maryville. It is hoped that students will familiarize themselves with the functions of each. It is fairly certain that in light of this information the student body will be able to appreciate the merits of the new judicial system as well as the problems which will inevitably arise upon its facing the present legislative structure (?).

In the January 15, 1968 issue of Presbyterian Life there is an article by Robert McAfee Brown on why he is against the war in Viet Nam. The Echo would like to receive any answer to Rev. Brown's article which will challenge his position. If the Echo receives no reply may we all assume that no such challenge can be made? Does anybody care?

Editorial Comment

I hate to be like the grim reaper at a wedding but I suppose the truth must prevail. Before we all wish each other a happy new year we should think about it first. Is it going to be so happy?

None of us are prophets or were meant to be. But it takes no person with mystical foresight to see into our near furture.

Thousands will die on the highways. More will die in escalated foreign wars. We can expect a long hot summer in 1968. Some see nothing but . . . Burn, Baby, Burn. People really are starving in India. (But really, do we give a damn?) 10,000 will die by accidental gun-shot wounds and there is no telling how many more by non-accidental gun-shot wounds or rope wounds or knife wounds.

Not that we should all throw our hands in the air and lock ourselves into our rooms in despair; that isn't practical. What we really must do is . . . well some say it isn't going to be a happy new year. What are we going to do about it?

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS

"SAY, DEAN PHILLIPS, WILL YOU RUN OUT THERE AND SEE WHAT THOSE YOUNGSTERS ARE UP TO WITH THEIR NOON HOUR RALLY?!!"

LETTERS to the Editor

Dear Editor:

The article of November 10, 1967 — "Can God Come?" — really hit home. I, too, have seen four years of my college education supported by the United Presbyterian Church because it would have been impossible otherwise.

Somewhere along the line, I threw away the sunday school God, the God of my own "organized" religion, and underwent a period of agnosticism. I became somewhat apathetic and quite critical about what was happening outside myself. Rather I looked at what was happening inside myself. I wasn't happy — I was dissatisfied, but I knew that I needed something with more meaning in which to believe. So I searched — I read many books on theology — and I became even more depressed about what I couldn't seem to find within myself, until I read the late Paul Tilloch's Courage to Be. God is "the ground of my being" — no old man in the sky for me. And God is within me — not in the church I have chosen to "excommunicate" myself from. Worship is with my fellow man — not sitting in a pew looking at the back of someone's head, but rather in a grungy room talking to the tear-streaked mind of a friend. God is there — in the reality of the dust on the floor, the clutter of a special study-laden desk, and the face of a real person.

God can come with us—He must.

Sincerely,
Sue Carico

Editor:

I am not in the habit of writing "letters to the editor," but I would like to register my own reaction to the resolution which the Student Council passed regarding chapel.

As I see it, there are many "good" reasons for not wanting to go to chapel: you stayed up too late the evening before, you have to study for a test, you don't feel like singing at 8:00 in the morning, you don't agree with some of the things that go on in chapel, to mention a few. But I don't find any of these "good" reasons expressed in the Student Council resolution. Instead, "compulsory chapel" is apposed for reasons of highly questionable validity.

Let us consider the reasons one by one.

(1) "Our present chapel system is contrary to the spirit of the college's statement of purpose, which states that 'an education that truly liberates involves full and free exploration'."

I suspect an unstated assumption underlying this statement that the word "free" means without regulations. Anyone who thinks about this for more than two minutes knows that this is nonsense. We live in a "free" country but we have always had laws, police departments, and a judicial system. I am not free to shoot my neighbor if I don't like him. The Christian faith is characterized by great liberating freedom, but anyone who knows anything about church history knows that within a decade or two after its founding certain regulations were found necessary to deal with those who did not use their freedom with responsibility.

The college requires various core courses and hopes that there will be "full and free exploration" within those areas. In a sense, this is an infringement on the student's "freedom." He cannot limit his "full and free exploration" to the field of his

I heard this in Spanish over Christmas vacation. In the tranlation I hope that none of the beauty has been lost. It is an old Spanish song and I think one of the most moving ones that I have ever heard. It makes one wonder if there are any white angels and it is as simple as that.

ANGELITOS NEGROS

Painters of my country! Painters everywhere! Although the Virgin was possibly a white woman, it wouldn't be out of place for you to render a black angel. Good black people go to heaven as well as good white ones. You always paint the Nativity with lovely blonde angels. But if you paint with love why do you consistently neglect the black ones? You know that they are in heaven and that God loves them too. You paint all the saints in the alcoves of the churches white. Never once does it occur to you to paint a black although you're supposedly painting people whose souls were good in their bodies. Yes, you always paint fair angels in the churches, but never does it occur to paint a black one.

college major. He must broaden somewhat. By requiring participation in chapel, the college is trying to insure that the vital area of spiritual awareness may also receive "full and free exploration" and not be neglected as is the case in so many American colleges and universities.

(2) "Required attendance at a worship service is contrary to the basic tenants of the Christian faith."

This too is based on some faculty thinking. Just about every major Communion of the Church has some regulation regarding "required attendance." For Roman Catholics, attendance at Sunday Mass is obligatory, Presbyterians covenant to make regular use of the means of grace one of which is regular attendance at services, Episcopalians, Methodists, and most other bodies have similar regulations usually including some procedure for removing a person's name from the official rolls if the requirement is not followed with a certain frequency. Therefore, if the Student Council's second point is correct, the vast majority of church bodies in the world operate "contrary to the basic tenents of the Christian faith" in this respect. Maryville College is unashamedly commited to the Christian faith, and it follows that one would expect some requirements of attendance at services.

(3) "Academic penalty for non-attendance violates the spirit of free thought necessary in a learning community."

This statement seems to imply the same questionable use of the word "free" as the first point. It also raises the question of the meaning of that often used term "academic." If we use the root meaning of the word, namely, "pertaining to an academy or school," one could hardly expect anything other than an "academic" penalty since chapel is a part of the academy.

The fourth point seems to me to be the only one about which some intelligent discussion might be carried on.

I am not arguing for any particular type of chapel service or any particular hour, but I do think that it is very important that Maryville College, having begun some very exciting and needed new curriculum developments, should not lose the symbolic center of its life in imitation of the type of secularized education which is alerady being seriously questioned in the very centers where it is strongest.

PROCESS '67

The Cleveland Week

Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Orthodox member groups of the University Christian Movement presented UCM's first major conference: The Cleveland Week of Process '67, December 26, 1967 — January 1, 1968, in Cleveland, Ohio. The Cleveland Week was the twentieth in a series of international quadrennial conferences. It brought together 3,000 people concerned with social change through the reformulation of the university including members of university communities (students, teachers, administrators); representatives from a wide range of U. S. life—from religious and secular institutions and colleges, from Negro colleges, from urban ghettos; and students and resource people from abroad who represented diverse international perspectives. Students from Maryville participating in the conference were Deenie Barnett, Wanda Hannah, Steve Horning, Sue Ketchum, June Rostan, Jim Reynolds, Geoffrey Skrinar. Process '67 and the Cleveland Week embodied a style of education which was dialogical, nonauthoritarian, issue-or problem-centered, and future-oriented. SNEA Explores Desegreation

At a Teacher Education and School Integration conference, December 7—10 in Memphis, sponsored by Emory University and the Student National Education Association, 120 college students and faculty explored the various problems and situations which are involved in teaching in a desegregated school. A number of primary and secondary school teachers and principals were included as resource people, to relate some of their personal experiences and to give us some insight into teaching in an integrated classroom. These Negro and white professionals created an awareness of the many possible situations that may occur. A day was spent in the Memphis schools, observing and talking with teachers about how they teach children from lower socio-economic-class families. Margaret Anderson, author of the book Children of the South, told how the lives of the children in Clinton, Tennessee, were affected when the schools were desegregated.

The move from desegregation, a merely physical placement of children, to integration is a difficult process which calls for a certain awareness and sensitivity on the part of the teacher. Integration can exist when people of all races accept themselves and each other, recognize the value of their differences, and realize that they have prejudices and tendencies to use stereotypes and are willing to subject those prejudgments and generalizations to reality testing. School integration will exist when teachers and pupils exercise their own civil and human rights and privileges.

Most of us have had little contact with the lives of lower-class Negro, Spanish-speaking, Oriental, Indian, or Appalachian peoples. We are generally aware that poverty exists, but our only experience with it has been riding through the areas. When the middle class teacher faces the necessity of teaching these children and of dealing with their parents, many feel rather panic stricken. Teachers, like all people, have prejudices. Many teachers, not having known individuals be longing to these groups, and under the influence of sterotypes, imagine all kinds of difficulty in teaching these children.

Therefore, it is our responsibility to be sure that teacher preparation provides prospective teachers with the necessary information and insight through courses in sociology, anthropology, and race or intergroup relations. Also the curriculum should include enough actual experiences with children of different social class, racial and ethnic groups, to make the graduate feel comfortable about teaching all children. As prospective teachers, we have the opportunity to make a real difference in the lives of children, whatever their color or background. This challenge must be met with sensitivity and skill, making this an age when college students going into teaching will apply their understanding and intelligence in meeting one of the most urgent educational and human challenges of our times.

Maryville's educational theory. Maryville's educational practice. Similiar? Not similiar?

Educational theory, of course, must involve more than academic theory. It means social, sexual, religious theory. It means authority. It means who teaches what, and how . . . why It means curfews, and who makes them, and why. And slacks, and who wears them, and where . . . and why. And beer, and who drinks it, and where, and who says so . . . and why.

It means what about the war. Both sides (or is it all sides?) The draft. America. Proud? Or not? And why?

It means everything that happens to you, student, faculty, or whatever. Faculty too.

Unless we have some realistic theoretical framework, we cannot hope to be either relevant or effective. And a college has got to be both. On Sundays, too.

ON GOVERNMENT

The following article is the first of a three-week series in an objective effort to inform the students and faculty of the machinery involved in governing a group of people, and to stimulate awareness of and concern for problems which may arise in maintaining a man-devised system of government.

The Student-Faculty Senate is the only organization within MC's operational structure between the Student Council and the Executive Council of the Faculty. Its primary function is that of a recommending body. It has no final authority, legislative or judicial.

Senate consists of sixteen persons in addition to the Presidents of the Student Body and the College, who alternate as chairman. The eight students are elected by Student Council from its own membership. The faculty representatives are appointed by the President of the College.

The United Campus Christian Fellowship and The Women's and Men's Student Government Associations are represented by non-voting members, usually their Presidents.

Although Senate is structured as a go-between from Student Council to the Executive Council and vice versa, its practice is usually limited to that of receiving motions from the Student Council. Such motions are debated and either rejected or sent to the Executive Council.

Motions to be accepted in theory are often altered in form by Senate before being sent on.

Senate meets at least once a month and occasionally more often when specific needs arise.

Discussion in Student-Faculty Senate has become much more open and honest in recent years. Most policy changes which have been made at student request have been considered intelligently and responsibly by Senate before being acted upon in some manner by Executive Council.

There is a growing number of students and faculty who feel that this body could and would, if allowed, be quite able to handle increased responsibility.

have to look much more closely at what faculty members say about a student's work."

The new system is also likely to end the campus-wide competition for grades. A student's performance will be compared with the performances of other students in his department. At present, Talbott pointed out, students are ranked by grade average in spite of the fact that some departments give generally higher grades than others.

ATHLETICS IN BRIEF

The Maryville wrestling team under the eye of Coach Davis and the leadership of co-captains Ralph Johnson and Bob Nicholas is working to get back into shape after the Christmas holidays. The Scots open their 1968 year away at the University of Chattanooga. Looking for their first win the Scots will depend on experienced men such as Lynn Dodez, Scott Wood, Harry Burnett and of course their co-captains. Also aiding the Scot cause will be Ray Nye, Alonso Williams and Bob Van Dyke.

The Scots have lost three so far and need a big win this weekend to start off the year right.

The Maryville Scots suffered a 94-68 setback against a red hot Asheville—Biltmore team. Maryville had two men in double figures — Don Hickman 10 and Bill Padgett with 28. The Scots looked tough during the first half playing good control ball by setting up the good shots. But soon A-B's distinct height advantage began to show forth and by the end of the half Asheville-Biltmore was leading by a score of 41-29. The Scots were never able to overcome A.B.'s advantage and were outscored in the second half 53-37.

The defeat dropped Maryville's record to 2-5 for the season.

Summer Plans?

Grand Duchy of Luxembourg — The high season for skiing starts in February in the Alps. Do you want a job at a famous winter ski resort in Switzerland? The American Student Information Service announces that there are still jobs open for the winter season and many more are available for next summer in Europe. The ASIS has successfully placed students in Europe for over a decade. ASIS guarantees a job in Europe for any student applying. Some sales jobs pay as high as $400 per month. Many jobs are available with no previous experience or foreign language ability required. Room and board are arranged for with each job. The most requested jobs are resort work, office work, lifeguarding, sales work, shipboard work, factory work, child care and camp counselling work and farm work. Interesting work not found in the U.S. is living as a guest of welltodo European families in return for teaching their children English. Job applications and detailed job descriptions (location, wages, working hours, photographs, etc.) are available in the latest ASIS booklet which interested students may obtain by sending $2 (for the job application, overseas handling and an air mail reply) to Dept. CHAPEL, SOCIAL INVESTIGATION REQUESTED

Well girls, you've just been told you can wear slacks—after certain hours, that is. I suppose next you'll be permitted to wear patent leather shoes. Land sakes! "Oh foo, I felt it coming along time ago, but I thought surely that permitting them to smoke in the student center and letting them come in at night at 10:30 would quiet them for at least another 149 years." Who said that? We need curfews and locked dormatories to protect the girls—from what? Themselves? After students at Maryville squall just so long about matters such as alcohol and automobiles, a long silence ensues. Does anyone ever stop to think why? If anyone has surmised that it might be possible that they are content with the rules, guess again. Room inspections at this school? "Absurb!", said I, "A person should be allowed the rights of privacy, even in a private institution." Oh, oh, wrong again, Dougie. Big brother is watching you. Contrary to popular belief, privacy does not entail telling the rest of the world to go to hell while you sit behind closed doors with a cuddly mate, by your side and Chivas Regal in your hand while everything else passes you by. But now we're treading around responsibility which is another matter altogether. More privileges for the privileged? There is always that danger, of course. Of course, there is also the possibility that some people might want some straws removed that may be giving a heck of a backache to an otherwise rather healthy camel.

Maryville is an exceptional institution with the most admirable of goals. If one takes time to review the statement of purpose of Maryville College he will see some remarkably promising statements. Our commitment is "to the Christian faith"; our purpose is "the pursuit of truth in concept and in life", our experience here is "designed to prepare the student for effective participation and leadership in the larger community of mankind." If Maryville is able to meet its own challenge it may number itself among the best. The student must,meanwhile, claim some of the responsibility for his own preparation.

For one thing one might consider that on the outside someone else is protesting the Southeast Asia involvement of the United States. Black Power does not always mean Carmicheal and Brown but Black Power is often represented by Carmichael and cont. on p. 5, col. 3

At a Student Council meeting held on January 15, the following request for investigation and recommendation concerning certain aspects of campus life was made public. This proposal is subject to the approval of the Executive Council of the Faculty, which will meet to approve same on Monday, January 22.

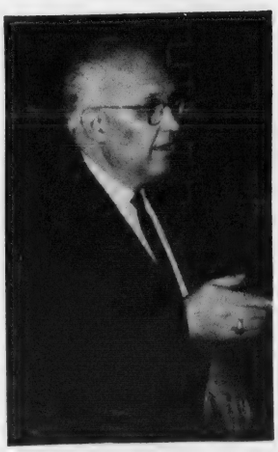
"We feel it necessary that the recently constituted Committee on Committees (see Echo, Jan. 12—Ed.), chaired by Dr. Shields, select a committee charged with thoroughly investigating the effectiveness of Maryville College's present chapel system. This committee is to consist of fourteen members, half of whom shall be students. It should determine its own chairman and methods of procedure, making sure that all possible expressions and considerations be examined.

"It shall prepare itself, by whatever means necessary, to present a recommendation of its findings about the most effective form for Maryville's religious expression. This recommendation should reach the Student-Faculty Senate no later than February 28, 1968.

"Student-Faculty Senate should then evaluate this recommendation and pass its own recommendation to the Executive Council of the Faculty for consideration beginning March 3, 1968. The Executive Council should then express a reaction before the end of the Winter Term.

"We also feel that the Committee on Committees should be charged to appoint a committee to investigate and analyze the procedure by which regulations relating to the students' social existence are determined. This committee is to be made up of ten members, half of whom should be students.

"It shall determine its own chairman and procedure, making sure to examine all possible expressions and considerations. It shall prepare a recommendation as to the most fair and effective methods to be used in determining and modifying all regulations concerning the social existence of the student body. Its findings shall be presented to the Student-Faculty Senate by the first Wednesday after Spring Vacation.



"The Student-Faculty Senate shall evaluate this proposal and report its own conclusions to the Executive Council of the Faculty for rapid evaluation."

Perhaps it deserves being reiterated at this juncture that Student Council meetings are open meetings. Interested persons are invited and urged to attend.

FACULTY RECITAL TONIGHT

Dan H. Kinsinger, tenor, will give his faculty recital this evening, January 19, at 8:15 in the Fine Arts Center music hall.

Accompanied by Robert J. Bonham of the music faculty, his program will include numbers by Charles Gounod, Hector Berlioz, Gabriel Faure, and Richard Strauss. For two numbers he will be accompanied by Maryville College students. Kathleen Saint, a sophomore cellist, will play as he sings a "Solo Cantata" by George Handel. For "Blake Songs" by Ralph Vaughn Williams, he will be accompanied by Edwin Best, Jr., a senior oboist. Mr. Kinsinger will conclude his program with "Songs of Solomon" by George Rochberg.

DAN H. KINSINGER

An Assistant Professor of Music, Mr. Kinsinger has been at Maryville College since 1954. He earned his Master of Music degree from Northwestern University at Evanston, Illinois, and has completed his residence and course requirements for the doctorate at the University of Illinois. He is now writing his thesis and expects to receive his degree next summer.

Besides his teaching duties, Mr. Kinsinger is quite active in music events and civic activities. He was recently enjoyed by Maryville College students and people from the surrounding area when he soloed in Monteverdi's "Magnificat" and Handel's "Messiah."

All students and the public are cordially invited to attend Mr. Kinsinger's faculty recital tonight. There will be no admission charge.

MACC Receives Grant

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland has announced that the Mid-Appalachia College Council, of which Maryville College is a member, has received a $20,000 grant from the Avalon Foundation of New York City. This grant is to assist the thirteen college members who comprise the Mid-Appalachia College Council in carrying on the functions of its central office at Bristol, Virginia-Tennessee. The thirteen college members are: Pikeville College, Pikeville, Kentucky; Emory and Henry College, Emory, Virginia; King College, Milligan, Tennessee; Warren Wilson College, Swannanoa, North Carolina; Tusculum College, Greeneville, Tennessee; Morristown College, Morristown, Tennessee; Carson-Newman College, Jefferson City, Tennessee; Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee; Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tennessee; Lincoln Memorial University, Harrogate, Tennessee; Cumberland College, Williamsburg, Kentucky; and Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky.

The Council was organized in 1966 and has been in operation for more than a year. During this time it has begun the summer courses at its biological station on Norris Lake and made plans for a permanent facility to be constructed there. It has conducted on the Union College campus at Barbourville, Kentucky, a summer honors course in English for students of all the colleges (which one MC student attended last summer) and it plans similar courses on other campuses next summer. It is studying the possibility of central purchases and a common card catalogue for its libraries. The Avalon Foundation grant will be used to support these and other united activities under the direction of the headquarters at Bristol.

The Avalon Foundation was created by Mrs. Alisa Mellon Bruce for the support of cultural and educational programs. The grant to Mid-Appalachia College Council is to be used over a period of two years.

PEACE CORPS DEFERMENTS

Washington — The Peace Corps announced today it will intervene on behalf of Volunteers seeking draft deferments for two years of overseas service.

Agency Director Jack Vaughn, concerned by mounting induction calls to Volunteers servoverseas, said he will take an "active role" in seeking future deferment cases before the Presidential Appeal Board — the court of last resort for draft reclassifications.

In the past the agency performed a largly informational function — advising Volunteers and trainees of Selective Service laws and procedures and confirming to local boards the fact of the Volunteer's service.

In future appeals, Vaughn will write letters to the board describing the circumstances in each case and urging board members to grant a deferment until completion of the Volunteer's overseas tour.

"We have a serious situation," he said. "The problem of induction notices to overseas Volunteers is becoming a major concern for us. Pulling a Volunteer off a productive job at midtour is unfair to the nation, the host country, the Peace Corps and the individual."

Vaughn said Peace Corps Volunteers have lost about 60 deferment appeals before the three-man board in the last six and one-half years. While adverse rulings by the national board have involved less than one-half of one per cent of the estimated 15,000 draft-eligible men to have served in the Peace Corps, "virtually all of these have occured in the past year," he said.

Of the approximately 25 Volunteers who have already re-

Quintet To Appear

The New York Woodwind Quintet will appear as the third attraction in the Maryville College-Community Artist's Series Friday evening, January 26, at 8:15 p.m. in the Wilson Chapel. This is the second appearance in three years of this group on the Maryville campus as part of the Artist's Series program.

For the past fifteen years, the New York Woodwind Quintet has maintained its position of pre-eminence in the field of chamber music through its numerous concerts at home and abroad, its television and radio appearances, and its highly praised recordings. The United States State Department has honored this group on three different occasions with invitations to tour overseas. Their appearances abroad have included tours through South America and the Orient as well as performances at the American Pavilion at the 1958 Brussels World's Fair.

The New York Woodwind Quintet will present a clinic for area musicians Saturday, January 27, in the Fine Arts Center. This appearance of the quintet is in conjunction with the Artist's Series program, and will follow their January 26 performance.

Information regarding reservations for the clinic may be obtained by contacting Mr. Dan B. Stallings of the Maryville College faculty, who is in charge of the clinic arrangements.

Editoral

At the opening of a school year, one naturally expects that certain prevailing deficiencies will find some remedy while the year unravels before him. When, in January, the deficiencies have either not found their remedies or have rejected them, there is definite room for alarm.

What greater deficiency can there be at an institution of higher learning than plain old apathy, of which you have heard so much? The newspaper as a communicative device has presented you, sometimes consciously, sometimes not, with entries to awaken, enlighten, or shock you. "Who cares" and "So what if" are only two expressions which have attempted to carry the present times to you.

While there is some amount of griping among MC students about the social life and the food, it appears that not only are many students failing to see the whole world as their community, but they are also failing to see Maryville College as their community. (While I will uphold or defend the qualities of neither food nor general social life, does it not seem strange to you that many of the "bitchers" about the social life at MC helped to make the Josh White concert a financial failure for the Pop Concert Series—a branch of student government? . . . Who was it who said, "Put up or shut up?)

One of the key words of the decade is "involvement". What is involvement? Is involvement only made up of doing some positive act or are we showing out type of involvement by doing nothing? Recently a quotation from Goethe caught my attention. Let me so share: "Behavior is a mirror in which everyone displays his image." Everyone is an important word here. While we might find anonymity in the megalopolis, can we really hope to find it on a campus of 800? No one is lost at Maryville . . . everyone plays some role . . . no one can play no role. There is need for a decision: Seeing that I MUST by my existence play some part, what kind of part will I choose?

Below is presented to you the results of a poll on drugs—a topic if interest and/or controversy among millions of people, our age and status. Some few might wonder at its appearance on a page generally given to "editorials." While such a few responses could hardly be labeled representative of campus opinion, such a sizeable number of those were traced to the Echo staff, that we will enter it as representative of the staff's opinion on drugs.

Results of the Poll on Drugs in the Echo, November 3, 1967

1. Just your best guess. What percentage of college students in the nation as a whole would you say take drugs such as LSD or Marijuana? The average answer was 3-10%.
2. Just your best guess. What percentage of college students in your own college would you say take such drugs?
   The average answer was 1% or less.
3. Do you personally know any students who have taken such drugs?)
   Yes 50%
   No 50%
4. Have you yourself, ever tried: Marijuana? LSD?
   a. Marijuana Yes 25% No 75%
   b. LSD Yes 10% No 90%
5. What do you think are the main reasons that college students take drugs? Fad, group acceptance, escape, rebellion, curiosity, to find self.
6. Do you think the taking of drugs is likely to increase, or do you think it is a fad that will die out?
   It will increase.
7. Why do you feel this way?
   The pressures of the modern world are great and people are searching for something to rely on.
8. What is your mental picture of the type of college students who goes in for drugs? How would you describe him?
   Not any one type. One person commented as follows: "two images: a free thinking individual who wants to make his own decisions and one who is trying to escape and is following for kicks."
9. If you were a parent with a son (daughter) at college, what position would you take in regard to the use of drugs?
   Most people said that they would be against the use of drugs, but several commented that they would explain the danger and then let their child decide.

These answers are based on twenty replies to this poll.

Any man who calls himself a religious leader and owns more than one suit is a hustler as long as there is someone in the world who has no suit at all.

REBUTTAL

In vespers this past Sunday Mr. Haydn White spoke on "What of the Institution?" subtitled "What's Wrong with the Church?" His opening statements showed clearly that he was defending the organizational church. This in itself is noble. Also noteworthy is the fact that Mr. White recognizes new developments in the present-day institution. But it was his tone of presentation which evoked my wrath and almost turned me off.

Perhaps this comment is a bit unfair to those people who did not hear Mr. White's point of view (and perhaps also to Mr. White), but I would here challenge his opinion—either stated or implied—that the young person who criticizes the church is being unnecessarily destructive. He has misconstrued the feelings of a large number of persons. I for one feel a great disillusionment with the institution as it is today. At the same time I believe in God, Christ, and the necessity and mission of the church universal. But I could reject the worldly church today and still be able honestly to call myself a Christian. Some people my age feel that they must turn their backs in order to be honest with themselves. Some have tried in vain to re-vitalize the congregations of which they are a part. (Perhaps we are too impatient, but I think not.)

We see the institution as being stagnant and irrelevant. The organization of churches into national and international bodies is, I agree, necessary in order to attempt the mission of the church. But what of the local institution in the metropolitan or rural area? It needs vitality within itself so that the members can minister to their friends enemies, and neighbors.

Change must come. And it is only too simple to allow it to enter. A different order of worship, fresh hymns, litanies, dramas, services in music, a meaningful tempo for hymns and other music (it is hardly possible to endure "Joy to the World" to the speed of "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind"), outdoor services, all of which must in time also evolve into or revert to something else. Isn't it possible to educate people to change, or must the church always be comfortable security?

Many of us do want the church even though we criticize or reject the institution. "The dead sticks outside of the church," as Mr. White denoted non-members who appear to be devoid of all concern, are not necessarily un-committed Christians. It's just that our complaints are expressions of our efforts to make Christ and the church relevant to us today. The problem is not new, but it is real to us.

Letters To The Editor

TO THE EDITOR:

To whom it may concern:

I have caused an ugly wound to inflame itself and become cancerous. Yet I further demonstrate my conscience because no one else has volunteered. If you are indolent in spirit, apologetic, preoccupied, in a foul mood, lazy, or fawning upon words of others, read no further.

The scene: a murky coffeehouse emblazoned with impressionist "statements" and stark souvenirs symbolizing outrage; fifty very earnest near-adults testifying to each other at scattered tables; anticipation of provocative discussion of an announced topic for which guest "resource people" have been invited. You were there. I wish I hadn't been.

I recorded interesting glimpses of my friends in various poses of anger, despair, bitterness, vindictive hell-raising, and "let's-be-reasonable-ness". And most of you had an opinion you thought worth airing. That was encouraging. My eyes smarted with the sparkling smoke billowing from passionate gushers of 20th-Century Man! For we had come because we were agreed that America and its black (also red and yellow, I think) inhabitants had a serious alienation problem. We agreed, "the facts are undeniable," and we agreed.

And where did we go from there? To a Christian Call for Action? To discuss solutions to cumbersome bureaucracy? To proclaim that educational institutions have a responsibility to guide character and attitudes? Toward none of these efforts—in fact, we made no effort at all, in any direction! Lack of time? God knows we wasted time: He stood outside in the cold, patiently waiting to be invited in.

What was the point of Raisin in the Sun? Or its value? I learned nothing from our adolescent flummery. Of course, some tried to create sincere statements of their own that rang true and mature. Damn your deluge of borrowed ideology, slogans, and pettiness that smothered this originality! I left the Lantern uneasy, simmering, and TURNED-OFF—that means prejudiced against further discussion.

More than one thinker who should have known better said something like this: "It's too late to educate away our prejudices. We're rotten, washed-up. Let their revolution take its toll now!" Personally disgusted, caught-up, but detached, don't you think? How about this: "We've got too many problems for us to handle. The Man has got to give us a chance, that's all." Maybe true, yet the big-picture facts of a success trend leave some doubt. My point? this dogma is not new, it is not constructive, it is trite, trite, trite.

I offer five theses to redirect our thinking toward contribution. First, endless cataloging of "race" problems makes us "black-conscious" and discourages solutions to disunity. I speak as one who realizes pettiness in public places has perverted natural brotherhood.

Second, the main social problems throughout the world today are of unscrutable origin, vast, and complex. They can be solved, and only in a vast, complex, and painstaking way. Reducing them to simple formulas is politically expedient; also irrational, irresponsible, and probably disastrous.

REVIEWS:

Josh White, Jr.

Although hampered and hindered by bad weather, airline inefficiences, and general bad luck, Josh White, Jr. appeared at Maryville College last Saturday night in what was one of the best pop concerts of the past three years. The snow necessitated his landing in Chattanooga, and he made the drive in a record dangerous hour and a half, without guitars but with his incomparable talent and good showmanship.

Mr. White's fine voice and excellent, subtle humor permeated the rather small audience and made the wait for his appearance seem negligible. His sensitive treatment of the music and his infectious wit established an immediate rapport with the audience which is unusual in any performance. Jewels among the numbers were "What Now, My Love?", "Up a Lazy River," "Suzanne," and the hauntingly beautiful "Impossible Dream." "Tie Me Kangaroo Down, Sport" will remain with the members of the audience as one of the freshest, most enjoyable bits of humor imaginable—mildly racy but in perfectly good taste. The interesting lighting effects added a great deal to the general good time mood of the show.

Special recognition should go to several members of the student body: Doug Gamble for his collected cool; Al Keim for his Marlboros; Dana Paul for his twelve-string guitar, which Mr. White used along with one of Pete Park's while his own were coming from Cleveland or Atlanta or Knoxville (or is that too close?): and further laurels to Pete for singing from 9:00 to 9:30 to keep the incoming audience in their seats, tranquil, and relaxed.

Aside from being a good performer, Josh White, Jr. seems to be a generally fine fella. Accolades to the Student Council for bringing such outstanding talent to our campus.

Reinhart Wolff

Dr. Reinhart Wolff was, for the most part, unappreciated on this campus. His problem was that he did not fit the mold of the normal guest speaker at Maryville College. He did not bring the staunch conservative argument of last year's lecturers for the American Studies seminar. He did not bring the moral tone of some of this year's convocation speakers. In general, he stood up for an unpopular (not to be confused with un-American) cause.

He brought us none of the apathy and "anti-eggheadism" of our community-minded student body, but instead brought us student involvement and sense of awareness. Living with the knowledge that apathetic students had once allowed a Hitler into power, and with the conviction that it must not happen again, Dr. Wolff brought us an example of what significant student protest can be.

He showed us that dissent and protest are on a much higher level than merely "the groovey" thing to do. In the words of Senator J. William Fulbright, "...if one feels certain that she (America) has the capacity to be doing very much better, that she is falling short of her promise for reasons that can and should be overcome, then approbation is a disservice and disservice and dissent the higher patriotism." This, if nothing else, is what Dr. Reinhart Wolff told all of us.

How Now, Brown Cow?

Bobby and Bill met on the neighborhood playground. They followed each other up the slides and tossed a little football back and forth. They watched the big kids scramble into the school bus, and they liked to play with Ruff, Mrs. Henry's spaniel. One day Bobby asked if Bill could eat lunch with him. Bobby's mother smiled and said "Certainly!", and Bobby and Bill ate together and laughed until it was time for Bill to return home. Bobby waved goodby and his grandmother turned to her daughter. "Isn't it nice," she said, "that Bobby plays so well with that cute little colored boy?" "Certainly," said Bobby's mother. "Nowadays our children don't make any distinction." Bobby looked puzzled. "Such a happy boy! And so well-behaved!" exclaimed the grandmother. Bobby's mother smiled gaily at him. "How did you two ever become such good friends?" Bobby stared out the window. How indeed?

What Price Freedom?

Is he a man?
In many ways he is, but in others just a small boy;
A boy-like man of twenty years.
Twenty years?
Now that's not a very long time,
But time enough to live and learn.
Learn about life;
Life with its ups and downs, laughter and sadness.
He's a man in his own attitude, a boy in his actions;
Actions sometimes hidden by childish fear and obligations,
But symbolizing a future of contentment and glory.
Yesterday, a mere boy, out of love and life;
His goal — a shining future.
Today a cloud hangs high above.
Shadowing his love for life in an overwhelming obligation.
An obligation that from the outside seems like a two-year jail sentence,
But once within it, an enormous quest.
Family, relatives, friends, and one particular being: a girl.
Whose tears are not those of sadness,
But of a rare, deep and sincere pride.
This love will never die,
And because he is far away,
Living in deep loneliness and being forced to be a man,
This love will grow more everlasting and sincere,
Not only by those few chosen loved ones,
But by an entire nation.
A nation which is free and stronger than all others.
This was and still is yours.
You own this nation, for it is you who strives to protect us.
While you are a million miles away,
Our country is still here, safe and free,
Living and growing, awaiting your safe return.
What you're about to face is not heaven nor hell,
It's not life and it's not death,
It's merely yourself.
So stand erect and be the man you are,
For freedom is worth any price,
Whether you're near or far.
We need your strength,
For without it; we could never be.

Central goals and values? Purely subjective—or are they? Environmental influence subjective? Impossible. As a product of environment, man is a whole part. Conformed, conglomerate, confused, consumed. Affected by media, man finds himself involved immediately—whether it's on-the-front coverage of the war, the hippies, or the riots. Privacy—a part of the past. Electricity—the media motivator — constantly determines what's new, what's good, what's bad. Man creates—is affected by his creation, learns from experience, recreates. Values—held in common. Among them—security, success, love. Self-centered. Can't be. Where's the involvement? Social involvement blanketing privacy. Swayed by media—why not? Public opinion—vital in the group. Advertising—vital to the mass society, the combination of goods splashed on pages, then on brains. Television—appropriate, peering into the lives of others, the fantasy world—escapism? Perhaps. An educational experience — conflicting with the old? Undoubtedly. Personality, attitudes, self—product or processor? cause or effect? Desire to fulfill increased—monetary success—material society, electric technology—the times they are a changing'. Freedom, preached—flower power, make luv not war, support our boys in Viet Nam. God is dead, Wallace Country, Impeach Earl Warren. Freedom, practiced? —violence, destruction, fear. Products—man creates and is devoured by his creation. And God said—let there be light—and there was—and there were radios, televisions, telephones, telling us. Moving forward—constantly improving, disaproving, removing. Who tuned us in? Nobody—in particular. Wake up tomorrow—Look Jane!—see, see, see!!! And one thing led to another. History says the pendulum swings from left to right. How can we stop the phone ringing, the presses—why bother. If it stops, so do we. If not tomorrow, next week—your phone rings—better be dressed—smile, you're on branded camera. Don't look now, but you're involved totally, inseparably. Values and goals—media doesn't curb them — won't, can't — instead, heightens, enlightens. Men—average, middle class, half-assed —created by the few and the many—both—(but not by himself)—the means, the media—the group, the whole group and nothing but the group. Television, telephone, Telstar—listen, man, the world is talking — there's something being said. Tomorrow it's history. Tomorrow, tomorrow, and tomorrow—the petty pace ain't creeping anymore—it's running for its life.

PART TWO

ON GOVERNMENT

The Women's Student Government Association of Maryville College is an organization in which all resident women hold membership. WSGA, concerned with the strengthening of individual character, underlines the importance of responsible freedom. To insure the best interest of the community, certain regulations are necessary and have evolved through experience.

WSGA, associated with the national organization Intercollegiate Association of Women Students, functions in the following manner: Every dormitory has a house chairman, secretary, treasurer, fire captain, and floor representatives. The house councils are responsible for upholding cooperative living within the dormitories. The Coordinating Council, consisting of twelve elected members, is the legislative body which coordinates the work of all the house councils. Forming the Coordinating Council are the president and vice president, positions of senior status; the secretary-treasurer, a junior, and two representatives of the junior class; the house chairmen of each of the dormitories (three sophomores and a senior); two freshmen representatives; and an IAWS correspondence consultant. Women students are encouraged to offer opinions of suggestion to the representative council members. The Coordinating Council's function of policy-making occurs as those matters of concern for women students are enacted, with the cooperative judgment of the Council and the Dean of Women. Constant revision is made of the regulations throughout the year with a through study of the handbook made in the spring of each year. A further function of WSGA is the sponsorship of the Sophomore Aide, Junior and Senior Counselor programs in the dormitories for freshmen and sophomore women.

The Men's Student Government is composed of four officers and a chairman for each of the three men's dorms. The four officers make up the Executive Council.

Meetings are held once a month or more frequently if the need arises. These meetings are open to any individual of the men's dorms.

Responsibilities of M.S.G. include settling any problems arising in the men's dorms, deciding on financial matters, arranging for open houses, and contacting speakers for each dorm. With the guidance of Dean Edward C. Thomas, M.S.G. handles all policies pertaining to male students living on campus.

Third thesis: most of what we commonly consider "race problems" are problems that concern us as universal humans in the broadest earthly sense. We call them "race problems" because of our love for labels that disengage us from personal commitment. Our obstinancy to pettily categorize is our greatest hindrance. Dogma should be junked. This you know.

I rejoice for those who anticipate my fourth thesis: Each of us can most effectively enrich the universal community of God—does that mean something to you?—by making personal fulfillment our whole-hearted pursuit. That is modern, progressive—as always. I did not say self-interest comes first. You know my context. I can hardly resist a mammoth outpouring here, but I will. Let's launch a frothing dialogue at this point! I propose a problem-solution chain I wish revolutionaries would remember: Love .... Concern — Faith — Initiative — Skill — Confidence — Guts — Love. And complete maneuver you atart.

Fifth, "having the power, we have the duty". Josh White hinted at untapped resources when he smiled with us at the advertising approach. If we leap up from our fundaments whose fat we have so assiduously protected we can accomplish. I proclaim this to Maryville, to the nation, to the world! We can do! Christianity is a working man's religion. It is not for the timid. Realize our power, and get it in gear. We are responsible.

That's all for now. But you read the mildest of the fury I thundered in pages you will never see. It was an ungodly situation. Don't let it happen again.

Stevan Horning

Dear Editor:

What would do if you were a Student Council representative and someone asked you,"What's happening in Student Council?," and all you could do would be to restrain yourself from saying "How the hell should I know? I'm only a peon member." Of course, if someone does ask what student government is doing, I don't make a reply like that, but that's very often what goes on in my head before I try to answer my inquirer in a more civil, or couth manner. Now I ask you, Mr. Editor, isn't that just about beyond the realm of conception; wouldn't that make you do a real SLOW BURN??? Here you are an elected member of a supposedly intelligent, well informed organization and you're not even close to being well-informed. Ya' see what I mean? Wouldn't you be a tinge perturbed in this situation, Mr. Editor? As a matter of fact, I'd like to go on record as saying that I'm disgusted, sick, puzzled, and p.o.'ed about the 1967-68 Maryville College Student Council. I'm GROSSED OUT!!!!!!!

My reasons? I'd be privileged to inform you and your esteemed readers.

First, of all, there's this huge void of information. To the best of my memory Student Council hasn't met for over six weeks, and I haven't heard any rumors that would prevent this from extending to as much as three months. (For undisputed justification of my gripe might I refer you to the Constitution of the Student Body of Maryville College, Article III, Section 4-a.) Whatever has gone on in the past six weeks or so I've had to find out for myself.

Second, there is no spirit in Student Council. Your paper, Mr. Editor, screams about apathy. Did you ever examine Student Council real carefully? I mean, so carefully as to question the spirit being generated right up through the president? There isn't a whole bunch, is there???

Third, there is no complete coverage of Student Council happenings in your paper, Mr. Editor, (when and if there are any.) I mean, things do happen besides the Judiciary and basketball on Sunday afternoon—don't they? I must admit that it sounds a little "Mickey Mouse" and and would hog a lot of costly space, but I think the information ought to be there even if only one person reads it—me!

Fourth, I'd like to speak of purpose, or rather the virtual lack of it which manifests itself in the student body, the Student Council, and even in your paper a little bit, Mr. Editor. What is the purpose of the Maryville College student body, anyhow? Can you honestly say you reflect this purpose, or even what you think it should be? I won't bother you with something as elementary as this though 'cause I can see the answer now. "How can we (the members of the Echo staff) reflect pure apathy. . . ?" There wouldn't be anyone left to write those heart-grabbing editorials. At times, that might be an honest-to-God blessing.

As my fifth grief I'd like to point out some insincerity, which may be purely conjecture on my part. I'm speaking of the current Chapel protest movement. Don't get me wrong, there's a lot of truth in both the Student Council proposal and the slightly milder, parallel faculty sentiment, however, there seems to be a hollow ring in the voices of many of the anti-eight o'clock advocates. I mean, those who are sincere I would support like a martyr—right down to a boycott. But, to those of lofty speech and dubious sincerity (who just want an extra half hour of rack time) I would like to extend to them a most sincere "go to hell."—Hypocrites bug me; you'll have to excuse the rash tone.

Pessimism is my sixth and final hangup. As I see Maryville College today there seems to be a prevalent air of pessimism on campus. Others might term it apathy; I call it cultured, or ingrained pessimism. This is by no means a problem which is unique to this campus. The "why even care" attitude is one of the greatest problems an active, concerned individual will ever run into. What's even worse is that it's a justified attitude. Even persons who are stubborn, persistent, and often too frank (like myself) find it hard not to give up. Some of the questions you ask, Mr. Editor, aimed at getting us off our duffs, often have the opposite effect. Pessimism (or apathy) is an attitude which is generated by a lack of interest, and to tell the truth I can see how it might run rampant on this campus. There's nothing to get shook about in the social life around here (unless you go to the trouble to participate), there's nothing exciting going on in Student Council (unless you're a "lucky" policy maker, or an inexpendible do-gooder), there's nothing in your paper that ever really rattles many people, Mr. Editor. My solution—I don't really have one. I could beg and plead with people to stop being apathetic, or I might do something to help them get interested (unapathetic) in the things that are going on. You could even help, Mr. Editor, with a NEW! IMPROVED! informing purpose for The Highland Echo. Who knows, people may even break the bonds of apathy and start to do something.

In conclusion I'd like to ask the Maryville College community for a little ACTION. There's an awful lot of wasted potential at little Maryville (where?) College. Maybe with a little effort, and a lot more guts Maryville could become almost great—(I can see the cynics dying from laughter. May They Rest In Peace & Apathy.)

Sincerely yours,
M. Shepard Spear

P.S. This letter might seem an unnecessary lampoon, Mr. Editor, but perhaps it will start someone thinking, it might even start someone DOING, who knows? For this reason I remain an optimist.

Editorial reply:

In attempting to answer your letter I hope that I have had enough insight to perceive issues from gripes. . .however. . .I think Mr. Spear, that you have, unknowingly, hit upon the crux of the issue in explaining the lack of spirit in Student Council. How possibly can a body meet and rule properly when it has such a small sense of its role or importance in the college community? At the same time, are the officers supposed to sit on their "duffs," if you please, and watch the year roll by with as little sense of "mission" as the other members of the council display? What would be the outcome if Messrs. Gamble and Price waited for the "elected" to measure and predict various issues and pervading attitudes on campus?

As for your allusions to the Echo, if the reading of the editorial page has proven a heart-rending experience for you, I am truly sorry, for it has missed its target in your body. Also I believe that student government-affiliated actions have had good coverage in the paper (although you are inconsistent in your evaluation of how much is really going on) and I feel that an objective evaluation of the paper and its areas of coverage will provide sufficient defense for itself—if, indeed, defense is in order.

He who seeks God has already found Him. —Graham Greene

We would like to present this editorial by A.S.K. which was in the November 3, 1967 issue of the Echo as the response to the Editor in the Echo of January 12, 1968 in regards to Chapel. We feel that this statement is representative of the feelings of the Student Council.

Why Compulsory Chapel?

Maryville College has had a tradition of compulsory chapel. But then, Maryville College has had a tradition for practically every aspect of undergraduate life. Like all traditions, this one of requiring attendence at daily worship must be examined in light of its appropriateness for today's college student.

"You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him pray," is an American truism (I think Mark Twain said it, or maybe it was the supreme court). The college does not require worship—it can't—it requires attendance. Surveying the bleary-eyed student body (and faculty) at 8:00 in the morning should convince anyone that actual participation in worship is limited to a distinct minority (the same minority who would attend if chapel were not compulsory). The very atmosphere is not conducive to worship. Announcements, awards, and other hoopla—all good in themselves—make it difficult to achieve a worshipful state of mind even for the dedicated few.

Merely changing the format of chapel to keep it strictly to a program of worship is not enough, however. The fundamental issue is whether the college has the right to force students at the pain of expulsion to attend chapel. And if the college does have the right, is mandatory chapel the best way to meet the problem of providing situations for worship at a church-related college?

Academically Maryville is emphasizing the right of individual choice in matters of class attendence. The idea is to allow each person to develop as he sees fit within a stimulating curriculum. Spiritually the idea seems to be to try to force the individual to conform to (not grow within) a program stagnant and listless with age. I personally find it unpleasant to be compelled to attend a religious service even if I am committed to the doctrine upon which that service is based.

Of course someone will drag out the tired argument that Maryville is a church-oriented college and anyone who does not like chapel did not have to come here. I really can't see where being church-related carries with it the obligation to cling to out-moded 19th century concepts of Christianity, even if these concepts were handed down to Isaac Anderson on tablets of stone. And apparently the recruiting program of the college is running into the problem of many excellent prospects shying away from Maryville because of the nature of the chapel program. It would be indeed tragic to see the new academic emphasis hamstrung by a lack of qualified students.

What is advocated here is not the abolition of chapel. Maryville is a Christian College and worship is a necessary and vital part of the Christian community. Neither is a plan for a higher percentage of chapel cuts being proposed. What is needed is a non-compulsory chapel program where new, stimulating forms of worship are tried in order to make chapel something that one wants to attend. Of course it would be folly to suggest that there would not be a drop in attendence. But is it better to have a full house of largely-empty minds, or a small, fluid body of people really concerned with worship? Which is closer to the true Christian Church?

AN EXPLANATION

University Christian Movement

Note: This article is an attempt to explain the role of the University Christian Movement and UCCF's relationship to UCM. Two papers, "Introducing the University Christian Movement," by Len Clough, UCM General Secretary and "Towards the Future of the UCM" have been used in preparing this article.

The student Christian movement had its beginning in the second half of the nineteenth century in the form of the YMCA and the YWCA. The Student Volunteer Movement, aimed at recruiting missionaries, and the Interseminary Movement followed. In 1944 the YMCA, YWCA, and several Protestant churches federated to form the United Student Christian Council. The USCC sponsored "ecumenical" conferences and served as a related body to the National Council of Churches. In 1959 a new "child," the National Student Christian Federation, was created by the uniting of USCC, the Student Volunteer Movement, and the Interseminary Movement.

During NSCF's life, areas of common concern were explored with National New Student Federation, National Federation of Catholic College Students, and the Orthodox churches. In September of 1965, NSCF's Seventh General Assembly decided to effect a structural and constitutional change because denominational student groups were waning and because the desire for a national ecumenical fellowship of Christians had been evidenced. On September 6, 1966, the University Christian Movement was born. Charter members of UCM are the Baptist Student Movement, the Campus Commission of the Standing Conference of Orthodox Bishops in the Americas, the Lutheran Student Association in America, the Methodist Student Movement, the National Canterbury Committee (Episcopal), the National Federation of Catholic College Students, the National Newman Student Federation, the National Student YWCA, the N.Y. State Student Christian Movement, the Northeast Seminarian's Study Conference, the UCCF, the Westminster Fellowship, UCCF at University of Delaware, and the Young Friends of North America.

Although UCM is just one-and-one-half years old, it has already defined its major aims, yet it has not limited itself merely to these aims. A close analysis of the three words University Christian Movement reveals part of UCM's aims. UCM is committed to involving the entire UNIVERSITY—administration, faculty, students, and the campus ministry, even though it has remained primarily a "student" organization. It has chosen to be CHRISTIAN while assuming a critical stance toward all of Christian tradition and the established Church, yet remains appreciative of the positive Christian legacy to human history. UCM has avoided theological hang-ups while working toward development of a theology of social change. It has avoided inflexible structured organization so that it might be MOVEMENT, implying action and involvement in working toward a more human world.

UCM is also dedicated to ecumenism, which in this case means much more than denominational co-operation. Ecumenism means participating in the whole inhabited world and identifying with people and issues dedicated to the same mission. Since the second annual assembly UCM has realized the need to set priorities as to which issues to become involved in. As a result, an organizing principle was developed by UCM: "To work for social change through the reformation of the university." Part of UCM's task now is to determine strategies of working toward social change.

UCM's first national conference was held in Cleveland, Ohio during the last of December. Probably, some new ideas and strategies for UCM will emerge from that meeting. UCM already has task forces on South African and Latin America and anticipates the formation of other task forces around issues such as the draft, Vietnam, internationalization, black power. These task forces hopefully will also relate their issues to the search for a new educational process. UCM is a young movement, yet it promises to offer alternatives for change and a chance for making the world a human community.

National UCCF has become an integral part of UCM and has put most of its energy into UCM rather than trying to retain a piece of the movement inside the UCCF structure. John Kernodle, UCCF's national chairman, is a member of UCM's General Committee, as are several other UCCF people. National UCCF anticipates a funeral for itself before the June assembly of UCM so it may dissolve a structure whose original aims have been answered by UCM and United Ministries in Higher Education in order to give its total energy to UCM. Individual UCCF's may choose to align themselves with UCM or to operate only in a campus sphere of influence.

Peace on Earth —Including Vietnem—

O Lord our Father, our young patriots, idols of our hearts, go forth to battle—be Thou near them! With them—in spirit—we also go forth from the sweet peace of our beloved firesides to smite the foe. O Lord our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to drown the thunder of the guns with the shrieks of their wounded, writhing in pain; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief; help us to turn them out roofless with their little children to wander unfriended the wastes of their desolated land in rags and hunger and thirst, sports of the sun flames of summer and the icy winds of winter, broken in spirit, worn with travail, imploring Thee for the refuge of the grave and denied it—for our sakes who adore Thee, Lord, blast their hopes, blight their lives, protract their bitter pilgrimage, make heavy their steps, water their way with their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet! We ask it, in the spirit of love, of Him who is the Source of Love, and who is the ever-faithful refuge and friend of all that are sore beset and seek His aid with humble and contrite hearts. Amen.

from THE WAR PRAYER, dictated by Mark Twain in 1905, first published in Harper's Monthly, November, 1916

At your side I lie,
Sweetly, purely, caressed by your kisses,
Your heart pounding against my still body.
At my side you lie,
Quietly, tenderly, my heart reaching out to you,
But its pounding fades with a hollow echo into the distant night.
In my mind I see your loving smile,
I feel the beating of your passionate heart,
I hear the soft strains of your voice.
Through the caverns of time and space
You come.

CREATION OF JUDICIARY REVEALED

As reported in the article of the Highland Echo of January 12, 1968, the Executive Council of Maryville College passed a new Judicial System. This system is now in effect and is in an operating status.

According to Doug Gamble the new judiciary has been in the making for some time dating as far back as last year before the end of the 1966-67 academic year. The final system, however, was created in the first ten weeks of the 1967-68 school year.

A committee was created by the Student Council headed by Brian Childs and Linda McNair. This committee later became a joint project of students and faculty and became a committee of the Student-Faculty Senate. The chairmen remained the same. After concentrated work during the Interim the committee presented the final copy to the Executive Council and it was passed by a unanimous vote.

Though not an entirely student judiciary, Gamble says, the people who worked on it feel that it is still in essence a student judiciary. The students hold a majority of chairs on the council and also hold the chairmanship. The next two terms are important as far as the new judiciary is concerned for it is a testing period for what appears as a most enlightened segment of Maryville College's changing atmosphere.

Brown. George Wallace is running for president. No Lulu, George Wallace is not the new Dean of Knoxville College. Crime is on the rise and the forecast for this summer in the cities is warm. . . baby. Student rights and student power? If a certain Dr. Reinhart Wolff from Germany knew more about America than you did, then you'd better get busy.

On the local scene—student council meetings are open sessions unless otherwise stated. Anyone interested? We regret that our budget will not provide for travel allowances to and from Thaw Hall. Student council also wishes to extend thanks all over the place for support of the Josh White concert. A man with something to say and a real pleasant way of saying it. He was worth most of the four million or so that we lost in sponsoring him. See you in chapel.

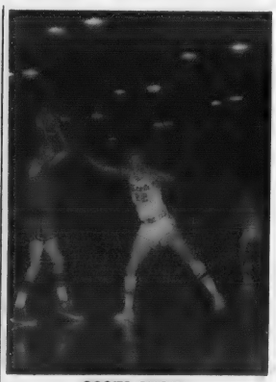
Thursday, January 11. Before an enthusiastic crowd of supporters, the Maryville Scots met the Tusculum Pioneers to try to revenge last year's one point loss, but were handed the same thing this year. The Pioneers chopped down a strong Scot defense to defeat them by a score of 68-67.

Led in the first half by Bill Padgett and Jon Hancher, the Scots took the lead and held it, despite a threatening tie score going into the second period. With strong rebound action on defense, the Scots maintained control and were leading at the half with the score 40-34.

The second half began much like the first, with Maryville keeping the lead. But a determined Tusculum tied the score once again, taking advantage of the tiring Scots who were having trouble controlling the ball. With tension mounting and ten minutes to go, Coach Baird substituted five men to see if they could pull the Scots ahead. Unfortunately, this failed, and with a little over six minutes left in the game, and the Scots behind by five points, the Scots' "press" team went into action. Despite a valient effort, the Scots had to remain behind by one or two points while time slipped by quickly. Unable to rally, the Scots saw their first-half efforts sink into a crushing one-point defeat.

Asked how he felt about the game, Coach Baird said that the Scots "played real good ball" and that it was "one of our better games." He added, though, that he felt the defeat was due to poor ball handling. About the future he would say only that the team has to play well and that there is a "fifty-fifty" chance whether we win or lose.

Commenting further, Coach Baird says that he would like to see more support at our home games, and wonders what happened to the little pep band of the past.



The team is doing its best; it's up to you to do the rest.

turned to the United States for draft induction, two were disqualified for physical reasons and returned to their overseas assignments.

The vast majority of Peace Corps Volunteers are granted deferments for two years of overseas duty because their service is deemed by their local boards to be "in the national interest," as recommended by Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, the draft director.

However, some local Selective Service boards refuse deferments even though Peace Corps service does not relieve Volunteers of their draft obligations. If the local board is upheld by the State Appeal Board, the case may reach the Presidential Appeal Board which makes the final decision.

He also said induction calls for Volunteers overseas "disrupts the continuity of carefully planned projects by host country governments who also have invested a large amount of time and money in the program."

ORF MUDGE AND BEYOND

—Doug Gamble

This week's topic is sterility Does anybody feel relieved?

There is a theory, rather local but by no means only so, that an institution which exists primarily for educational (religious?) reasons can best function in a relatively sterile environment. (That's "untainted by reality," in this case.)

There is another theory, propagated extensively by youth who are exhausted by middle-class American indolence, that such enforced sterility only extends American aloofness from those far distant (?) areas of our world in which real people are not so content.

In any rational evaluation of our role in Maryville College, we must think in terms of the whole present and the whole future. The past, fortunately or not, is the past.

Pardon the repetition. "The total college experience is designed to prepare the student for effective participation and leadership in the larger community of mankind." (p. 8, The Catalog)

Is it really? "The larger community of mankind" means EVERYBODY, EVERYWHERE. All colors, sexes, religions, ages, political theories, and ethical standards.

A faculty member who graduated from Maryville (that doesn't narrow it down much, does it?) says that he felt cheated and frustrated when he found out what was REALLY going on. Outside.

People do smoke (all sorts of things), drink, drive and . . . how do you say it? . . . all over the place. They go home when they want to. And leave home when they want to. Even after one.

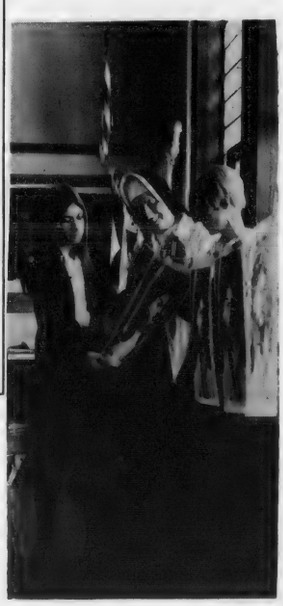
FEBRUARY MEETINGS SERIES TO BEGIN

Thurs., 1 — Sun., 4 Sister Marie Suzanne, art instructor at St. Mary's High School, Akron, Ohio, will conduct a three-day series of Liturgical Art Workshops.

Sun., 7 p.m. The reverend Mr. Harold Hunter, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church in Knoxville, will be the Vesper speaker.



Fri., 9 — Sun., 11 Dr. John E. Cantelon, Chaplain and Professor of Religion at the University of Southern California at Los Angeles, will speak at Convocation at 9:50 a.m. In the evening at 7:30 he will present a short address and will participate in a forum. Other members of the panel will be Mr. and Mrs. John Minear (John and Judy), students at McCormick Theological Seminary and now in a year's internship in Birmingham, Alabama.

Thurs., 15 Miss Lisa Sergio, Danforth Visiting Lecturer, will speak at Convocation at 9:50 a.m. Her topic will be "Today's Youth is Tomorrow's Power." In the evening at 7:00 p.m. she will present a public lecture on "The Changing Shape of World Affairs."

Friday, 23 Dr. D. T. Miles, a Methodist minister from Ceylon, general secretary of the East Asia Christian Conference since 1957, former chairman of the World's Student Christian Federation, and a noted speaker and exponent of the ecumenical movement, will present the Convocation speech at 9:50 a.m. He will also speak in the evening at 7:00 p.m.

Tues., 27 The moderators of the four Presbyterian churches in the United States will present a forum led by Dr. W. Glen Harris, planner and arranger of the meeting of these men. The four churches are: the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., (moderator Eugene Smathers), the Presbyterian Church in the U.S., the Reformed Church in America, and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Sister Marie Suzanne, the former Sue Guest, born in Monroe, Michigan, is a graduate of Marygrove College in Detroit, Michigan. While in college, she majored in art and during her summers participated in a youth program of college students at a resort in upper Michigan. After college, she entered the noviate of the Immaculate Heart of Mary sisters in Monroe, one of the United States largest and most progressive religious orders for women in the Roman Catholic Church. Then, as Sister Marie Suzanne, she became the art instructor at Marian High School in Birmingham, Michigan for six years. She has been art instructor at St. Mary's High School in Akron, Ohio for the past year and a half where she also participates in a humanities program.

Sister has published a set of prize winning sketches in Today Magazine. She has organized workshops in art for the Detroit Archdiocese and has taught art classes for the novices at Marygrove's Monroe campus. Currently, Sister is engaged in graduate studies in Fine Art at Notre Dame University, and is at present taking courses in Graphic art and Serigraphy at the University of Akron.

Sister's future plans are to study with Sister Mary Corita at Immaculate Heart College in California in the spring of 1968. In addition to her studies in art, Sister is interested in contemporary film study and hopes to pursue this interest.

Sister Suzanne will conduct a three day series of Liturgical Art Workshops in prelude to the February Meetings. The purpose of the Workshop is for publicity, Visual Aids and Liturgical experimentation. Members of the community as well as the Faculty and Student Body are invited to attend.

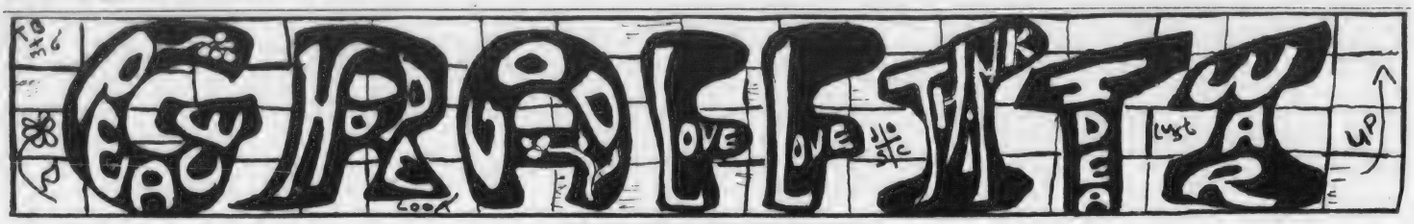
TESTS HELD IN SPRING

Alan T. Marshall, a Maryville College junior from Wilmington, Delaware, has been granted $525.00 from the National Collegiate Athletic Association to prove his hypothesis that the neck collar used in college football prevents injuries to the cervical spine to such a significant extent that it should be required as compulsory equipment.

The experiments will take place during spring football practice and during the 1968 season at Maryville, according to Boydson H. Baird, Chairman of the Department of Physical Education and Director of Athletics. Marshall hopes that he can complete his experiments in time to present them at the N.C.A.A. convention in Los Angeles, California, next January.

Marshall is majoring in physical education and hopes to earn a Masters Degree in physical training at Indiana University. He is the student trainer for all athletic teams at Maryville College and is number two man on the varsity tennis team.



The New York Woodwind Quintet clinic for area musicians that was to be held Saturday, January 27 in the Fine Arts Center has been canceled. The original announcement of the clinic appeared in The Highland Echo January 19.

INVESTIGATION HELD

On Friday, January 19th, a meeting sponsored and advertised by Shep Spear was held on behalf of better student government. Attending were Dr. Walker, Dr. Campbell, Dr. Shields, Mr. Mitchell, about ten student council members and a few interested, "non-apathetic" standers -by. Mr. Spear outlined for the group his gripes and grievances — as they appeared in his letter to the editor (Echo, Jan. 19). Although everyone present did not support Mr. Spear's point of view, perhaps he drew attention to the need for evaluating present council procedures and the need for a kindling of student interest.

The certainty of death is attended with uncertainties, in time, manner, places.

Editoral

The editorial page of any newspaper is the heart of the publication and the Highland Echo's Graffiti is no different. We, the editors, feel that it is one of the most vital portions of the entire paper. Graffiti was explained once before in September, 1967, but I feel that it is now time again to state what Graffiti is to us of the Highland Echo.

An editor has only his words. He must use his words and he must face reaction. An editorial is the opinion, sometimes passionate, of one person and one person alone. By no means does an editorial represent political policy. This does not mean that an editorial page may not support certain political policy or castigate it. This is the free and self-evident right of the editor and of all free people. We all must be free. Never, however, is the editorial to be a personal gripe of the editor. Always the situation of the community (that includes the other world "out there" that we have heard so much about but have never really seen while here at Anderson-Lloyd University) must be in mind and to this point the Graffiti has been faithful.

Because the editor has but words does not mean that the writer may risk insincerity. The editoral must be respected and respect is the effect of sincerity. The editors of this paper are sincere. Talk to us if you don't believe it. That is our policy.

I, for one, strongly believe that, as an editor of a newspaper in a small conservative college, I have an obligation to stmulate fair dialogue. This does not mean that an editor should compromise his conscience to stimulate this dialogue. That would be insincere. It happens that this year the editors are not conservative and some conversation has been stimulated. If you don't like what you read tell us and we'll tell the world. We will print anything that is received by us. We can prove it, read last week's letters to the editor. They weren't exactly Bouquets for the Echo and its staff.

That leads us to the most important point. The editors are not the only people with a sounding board in the Highland Echo. The editorials are ours. Fort Mudge is used by our (the student body) elected leaders. The letters to the editor are yours. Sing out, all of our heads may be cleared, and we may join you in the chorus.

Man would fain be great and sees that he is little; would fain be happy and sees that he is miserable; would fain be perfect and sees that he is full of imperfections; would fain be the object of the love and esteem of men, and sees that his faults merit only their aversion and contempt. The embarrassment wherein he finds himself produces in him the most unjust and criminal passions imaginable, for he conceives a mortal hatred against that truth which blames him and convinces him of his faults.

EDITORIAL

As a response to what I believe was a poignant sermon, I submit the following comment which capitalizes on a need of out time.

The Rev. Arthur McKay, President of McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, spoke at Sunday vespers on the topic "Faith versus Religion". His sermon was a call for Christians and non-Christians alike to become aware and involved in that for which they stand.

He began by echoing the scripture lesson when he described the world as "all incoherent, all in pieces." In response to this human predicament he suggested a search for meaning which would require of anyone wishing to call himself a Christian, an increased effort to become aware of and respond to his faith. Dr. McKay approached this by way of symbols, which as projections, are the ultimate expression of concern and awareness and therefore should be real and meaningful. He warned against falling for what Kierkegaard calls "dialectical deceit" in attempting to find meaning in symbols. The hollowness of religious symbols is indicative of a hollowness in Christian faith. Dr. McKay's response to this is not to pretend that it (the hollowness) does not exist, nor to absolute it, but rather, to find some middle ground of involvement.

Thus, the position of the gospel in a secular age requires re-examination by each generation and action on the basis of that re-examination. (Some have suggested "new" religious symbols as a possible response to the hollowness, and others have suggested an underground faith as a possible vehicle of involvement. I wonder.) This call to action is reflected in the reoccurent verbs —know, stand, point— in Dr. McKay's sermon. These verbs are a cry for faith to be more than just an "excercise in absurdity" to the faithless.

After vespers, Dr. McKay met in the Lantern with a small group, addressing his comments to symbolism in and of the Westminster and '67 Confessions, to Viet Nam oriented activities at McCormick, and to Chicago politics.

Unfortunately, the general response to Dr. McKay has not been very enthusiastic. However, his sermon, although aimed at an older age group, had some very significant implications for Maryville students. Basically he was saying that it is now time for our bubbles of selfsatisfied security to be pricked; that it is now time for us to be shocked from our self-pity into being awake and aware and (excuse the expression) INVOLVED!

Because the Church was not there in the nineteenth century, Communism had a chance to develop. There are people in this country that are not free, and only individuals of the Church are doing something about it. There are people being killed in wars around the world and the Church is ostentatiously mute. The Church is out making money.

THE MINISTER

I mastered pastoral theology, the Greek of the Apostles, and all the difficult subjects in a minister's curriculum,

I was as learned as any in this country when the Bishop ordained me.

And I went to preside over Mount Moriah, largest flock in the Conference.

I preached the Word as I felt it, I visited the sick and dying and comforted the afflicted in spirit.

I loved my work because I loved God.

But I lost my charge to Sam Jenkins, who has not been to school four years in his life.

I lost my charge because I could not make my congregation shout.

And my dollar money was small, very small.

Sam Jenkins can tear a Bible to tatters and his congregation destroys the pews with their shouting and stamping.

Sam Jenkins leads in the gift of raising dollar money.

Such is religion.

Letters to the Editor

Mr. Editor:

In the January 1968 issue of Motive there is an interesting editorial titled: Where Have All The Negroes Gone? Two paragraphs in particular seemed to me to present a challenge that may well relate to the Maryville campus.

"In the matter of recruitment and training, the churches and church-related colleges are being eclipsed by both industry and secular colleges. The radical experimentation currently undertaken by Wesleyan University in Connecticut (more than 10% of its current enrollment is from disadvantaged areas) illustrates the kind of vision which should characterize church-related institutions. But those who talk about 'freedom in the Gospel' aren't always the ones who manifest that same freedom.

"In the 19th century, denominational colleges dotted the frontier in America and became synonymous with obtaining an education. These same institutions could now take seriously the urban and racial frontiers and set the pace for radical innovation in higher education. The facilities and expertise currently accumulated by Protestant and Roman Catholic schools in or around America's major urban areas could be of major consequence in renovating some of the urban and human blight that festers in our cities."

We always seem to have our own day-to-day problems, but what do we do to really get involved in some of the "real issues of the day"? I think the title of the editorial is pertinent to Maryville College. What do you think? Or better yet, what do you think we should do? Or to raise you one more, what will we do?

David P. Young

Dear Editor,

We would like to voice an opinion in reply to Shep Spear's letter to the editor in the last Echo issue. First of all, we applaud his spirit, and his expressing what he considers to be out of line. It is people who stand up for what they believe that keep alive the American Dream. We realize that there may very well be a power elite, but at the same time we realize that everyone cannot be in on all committee meetings, etc. Who would have enough time?

For an optimist, Mr. Spear paints an awfully dim picture. We feel that his is giving few people credit for being interested and concerned. Or does he have a corner on these two commodities?

His invitational meeting was, it would seem, along the same line that he has suggested the accused council officers of taking. Criticism might more fruitfully be voiced at council meetings, but criticism based on grudges and slighted feelings is much different from constructive criticism, when the over-all "plans for progress" are kept in mind.

THREE "APATHETIC" STUDENTS

Dear Mr. Editor Sir;

As I sat there on my bed of doom waiting for my next pill to take effect, I picked up the Echo and after reading Mr. Spear's letter I needed the pain killers to keep me from dying of pain from laughter. Of course, I shouldn't laugh because of my recent operation, but being the "cynic" that I am, I had to. When I had finished "I WAS LAUGHED OUT."

I would like to take a few of his points and present more than a one-sided picture.

First of all let's look at the Chapel situation. I was on the committee that helped draw up the resolution that appeared in the last issue of the Echo. The purpose of the Chapel evaluation is to see how we can have better and more meaningful chapels and to look at the compulsory side of a religious worship service. Mr. Spear and about 4/5ths of all the other people of the college community look at the pro-

ON GOVERNMENT

The Student Council of Maryville College functions as the executive committee of the student body. It is an assembly of delegates from various student organizations including: four student body officers-the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer; one representative from Men's Student Government; one representative from the Women's Student Government Association; and five representatives from each class. Each council member has the opportunity to serve on standing committees and special committees of Student Council, some of which include: the Elections Committee, the Organizations Committee, the Pep Committee, Programs Committee, Projects Committee, and the Publicity Committee. Two very important special committees are the Judiciary Committee and the Academics Committee.

The Student Council strives to represent the authority of the student body in a meaningful fashion and to represent the acts and decisions of council to student body members. It seeks to discover and to relate particular areas of student interest. In addition it has a deep interest in cooperating with the faculty and administration toward the attainment of certain important goals. Student Council also has the responsibility of supervising the coordination and integration of student activities through its different committees.

posal and say "those radicals are trying to do away with Chapel." And immediately they stick their heads in the sand and refuse to talk to us "Bad Guys." Evaluation, not Abolition. Think before you speak.

Second, I feel I should deal with the elected representatives of our grand and glorious student council. That Stalwart body which meets occasionally, but not in the last six weeks. How long did we have off for Christmas? When was it? In the last six weeks? Basic Math. Now back to the stalwart representatives of the students. Everyone must use what he has. We must eat what is put in front of us (or starve), and the president and vice-president must use their elected representatives. Even if these representatives wanted the position to impress that certain someone, or it looked good on their record, or maybe they were genuinely interested. No one ever stops to think that an academic year is so long, decisions must be planned to take into account the hinderances of the dead-wooders and the near-sighted people. Plus the ever-present Administration's Red tape and put off tactics. (Never do what you can put off indefinitely). I know all this because I have to live with Doug Gamble, and I have been to Student Council meetings to see for myself. It was amazing and I was quite floored to see the people you and I elected sit and sit and sit without listening or contributing. A few voiced their opinions and all they could think of was trivia and their own little sphere of existence. Now that the majority has been handled, words of commendation should be showered on the minority who are working for the good of the college community. But we elected them all and we have put our future in their hands. Is the situation not better than the first of the year? Two milks, slacks sometimes, and the new judiciary system, Mickey Mouse? Why? I ask you.

Socially, what do you want? My compliments to someone for the fine job on the dance last Friday night. Don't tell my doctor I was there. Josh White, Jr. was well attended? I hear. I was in the hospital, where were you? Sure the advertising was poor but surely you heard about it someway. Now what about the Spring concert you ask? Who knows, we'll probably be able to afford the Slippery Rock Tabernacle Choir if we are lucky. We have the Artist Series, Lecture Series and Faculty Recitals, Yea, but you might learn something. Sure this place lacks Frats and now societies (sorta) but we have something better. When all else fails and the weather warms up a little or you can spare a blanket from your bed, HEAD FOR THE BUSHES! But until then don't despair, the parlors are wide open except for the (occasional) visits from the housemothers. LIFE IS FULL OF ENDURANCE CONTESTS. SUGGESTION TIME. Why don't some of you people, who don't have time to look into the activities of Maryville College because you are too busy sitting around griping, dig out last week's Echo and read below the Chapel evaluation propaganda. You will find a whole article on social evaluation. Then (if I may borrow a word from a "peon member") get up off your duffs and show some real interest. You might be surprised at what you could do. After all, you have to endure one, two or even three more years of this nonsense. Not me (I hope and pray), I'll be out in the real cruel world where life is to be lived, not endured.

I like the Highland Echo and feel that they, the editors and staff, can defend themselves much better than I.

Now as my pill wears off and the Sun sinks slowly somewhere, I realize that these lines will be taken as a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury probably signifying nothing. And as I reread this letter I can see hidden in it a real grabbing message. (Unintentionally of course). In this present period of total re-evaluation of Maryville College, wouldn't it be amazing if YOU, the total College Community, could re-evaluate yourselves and see what you can do so that Maryville College and possibly you will not, some day, end up in Abolition.

They do recognize order and laws. But they help make the order and laws themselves. Society makes up its collected mind and, eventually, it transforms its decision into order. Does ours?

The student body president at the University of Michigan told me that he wanted to convince 200 students (out of a student body of many thousands) that they were real, important, thinking, responsible, rational, and damn important people who had an unsmotherable right to help shape their own destinies. Sounds pretty reasonable, doesn't it? Try it sometime. Especially in a girls' dorm.

Do we not think enough of ourselves as humans to be bothered by a locked door?

Did you know that the faculty (which includes housemothers — yes, I said, "The faculty includes housemothers.") can't smoke in their offices. Or drink. Anywhere. Even the ones over 30. (anybody wanna bet?) And it can't elect anybody to anything which can change all that.

And students can't elect anyone to anything to vote to change anything that makes any real difference.

Yeah, I know. "You knew all this before you came, so shut up." Heart transplants make life longer. For colleges, too.

Student applications are down again. Students are leaving more. (to be reread, slowly) Enthusiasm for the institution is not what you would call overwhelming. Especially among seniors. Why?

I submit that little changes make big changes.

If you care and have an idea. Or don't care and have an idea.

Why not say so? Contrary to recently expressed opinion, Mr. Price and I really do have ears.

So does your council representative. I think.

BLACK POWER: For Those Who Try Harder

Having heard many discussions on our campus concerning the racial situation in our society, I thought that someone ?? might be interested in hearing the opinion of one who might be considered a member of the "ghetto cult." Having experienced (a few times) and having been a witness (many times) of discriminatory practices as they appear in our society; I felt that I, too, should throw my hat into the fire.

After more than one hundred years of probing racial and social issues, our society faces the exact same racial conditions that it faced directly after the Civil War. Just as it was then, the question today is one of: (1) blacks against whites; (2) federal power versus states' rights; and (3) Northerners with liberal ideas versus Southerners with conservative ideas. The question today is also one of removing segregation and discrimination from the Negro society. Whereas the conditions today closely parallel those of one hundred years ago, there is one outstanding dissimilarity. This dissimilarity is the predominance of youth in the movement; particularly the Negro youth. Today's Negro youth is more politically sophisticated than was the "old-fashioned" Negro. For this reason, today's Negro youth has a better idea of what he wants and to what extremes he is willing to go to attain these goals (even if it means consulting communist for "food for thought"). Thus, today's racial issues seem to revolve around the premeditated actions of well-known young men such as Stokely Carmichael, H. Rap Brown, Dick Gregory, and their constituents.

I suppose that no discussion concerning racial issues would be complete without mentioning the impact made by the Black Power Boys. One of the severe mistakes made thus far by this new breed was their refusal to define accurately the term-slogan-rallying cry "Black Power" for the benefit of many interested whites. As it stands today, the meaning of Black Power is so obscure, its intent so misinterpreted, its impact so abrasive that it has divided Negroes, alienated whites, and simply confused everybody. What does Black Power mean to one who hails from the ghetto? It means the fostering of greater human dignity and cohesiveness among Negroes through the emphasis of racial consciousness; it means black people being able to control effectively their own ghettoes; it means arousing the insensitivity of whites toward poor conditions that exist in many city ghettos, country ghettos, and just plain GHETTOS; it means being black and being able to feel proud of this fact in a system wherein the power structure is controlled by the white majority. Along with other Negroes in this nation, I do not believe that Black Power has to mean burning down Anderson Hall because there are only five Negro students enrolled in our Christian community here at Maryville. Violence, without a doubt, has marred the image of the Negro cause to a great extent; but one wonders what it will eventually require to awaken many persons to the existing critical situation in our society. (One often wonders the same about some members of our college community). One could rely on the old saying that "Time heals all wounds" but for the Negro in the ghetto, this solution possesses little validity because (1) the rats are constantly attacking the cats, and (2) there is little time left for waiting—it's been 105 years, you know. It is my belief that much of the violence that has erupted due to Black Power was caused by white apathy and racism within the power structure. True, more Negroes participated in and organized these riots than did whites; but it was the apathetic attitudes expressed by many Northern congressmen and mayors (not to mention the Romanticism of their Southern counterparts) that sparked last summer's occurrences. It is my further contention that until these factors are removed from our society, the riots of last summer may be annual occurrences.

Whereas it may be considered racist to form programs to get our society back on the course that was plotted for it by Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Dr. Martin Luther King, I feel that this action must be taken because the actions were racist that upset our so-called American system of justice and fair play for ALL. The best place to begin unraveling these problems might be where most of us spend nearly nine months of the year learning to combat heathenism.

GR-R-REAT

On Thursday, Jan. 18, 1968, the Maryville Scot wrestling team showed the spirit and the drive that wins matches. The Scots were wrestling the University of the South, Sewanee. Pre-game predictions forecasted the Scots to lose but the Scots, working hard since the Christmas vacation, had other ideas. The following is the story of the Maryville win over Sewanee, 23—19.

123 — Ray Nye was up against one of the co-captains of the Sewanee team but that didn't stop Ray. As soon as the whistle blew, Ray was in working for a takedown by using a Fireman's Carry. No points were scored in the first period. In the second period Ray had the down position, he sat out and reached back over his head and grabbed his opponent's head. By holding on to his opponent's head, Ray was able to turn his man over and PIN him with 4 min. and 24 sec. by in the match.

130 — Tom Chase wrestled the toughest man on the Sewanee team who was beaten in the S.E.C. tournament by Maryville's great Ron Pritts, only on riding time. Tom showed good moves, especially his stand-up, but was unlucky enough to fall into a pinning hold in the third period that he was unable to get out of.

137 — The "Big Grudge Match of the Century" was the 137 lb. class. The Sewanee boy, as it was publicized in a Chattanooga paper, was out to get Ralph. Needless to say — Ralph GOT HIM. Although Ralph had to lose four pounds the night before the match, he moved in the first period like a "bat out of *ac"! and was able to take his man down. In the second period Ralph was on the bottom and allowed his opponent to put a head lever — on him. Then Ralph made a move that appeared at the time to be a mistake but it turned out to be just right. Johnson rolled across his shoulders enabling him to double — underhook his opponent and PIN HIM with 24 sec. remaining in the second period. That "Farmer" didn't know what he was talking about when he claimed that he could beat Ralph!

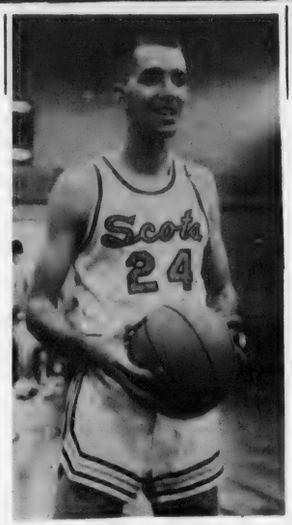
145—Bob Evaul was beaten by points and experience. Bob, one of the football players who has helped the team tremendously this year, showed great speed and "animal" while wrestling. Evaul, only a Freshman, has some great seasons ahead of him.

RALPH JOHNSON

LYNN DODEZ

152 — Scott Wood fought a hard match, but loosing too much weight too fast hurt Scott. Also a illegal slam on the part of the Sewanee boy shook Scott up a little so that the final score was 12—6 favor of the Sewanee man.

160 — Bob Nicholas wrestled his usual winning style against Sewanee by using a Bar and Chancery and a Lateral Drop to score the majority of his points. Nick allowed his man to score three points on a reversal and an escape, but he went on to win 7-3.



167 — Harry Burnett's match was one of the best of the evening. Harry took his man down in the first period with a Fake Arm-Drag and A Step Through. With little trouble at all Harry was able in the Second period to use a Head Lever and turn his opponent over and pin him with 43 sec. remaining in the second period.. A GREAT MATCH!

177 — Bob Van Dyke wrestled very aggressive against a boy who came in second in the Prep School Nationals. Earlier Bob has wrestled as low as 152 and it looked as if he was a little light for the 177 weight class. He lost 9—2.

191 — The total team scores at the beginning of this match were 18 to 14 in favor of Maryville. In order to win the Scots had to win one of their last two matches. Dodez, no small man by any means, was to wrestle a boy who looked like "John Henry" himself! But Lynn managed to duck under, for two pts. in the first period. During the second period Lynn was unable to escape and thus was ridden for three minutes. Counting riding time the score was tied 2-2 going into the Third period. Lynn needed to ride his man for at least two minutes to win but his opponent stood up and escaped early in the Third Period. Lynn now needed a takedown to win. WITH 15 SECONDS TO GO IN THE MATCH, LYNN TOOK HIS MAN DOWN AND PINNED HIM WITH ONLY 3 SECONDS REMAINING.

H. W. — John Forgety, a 180 pounder, wrestled heavyweight for the Scots against a very large heavyweight from Sewanee. John, with his speed, was able to do all right against his opponent until the Sewanee boy was able to get his weight on John and pin him.

The wrestlers came up with their first big win of the season by no other way than the hard work and sacrifice that is known only to a WRESTLER!

Bill Padgett is a quiet, unobtrusive man on campus. He commutes daily from his home in Alcoa, attends classes, and studies. If this were the entire routine of Bill we could write him off as just another student, but this is not the whole story of Bill Padgett. Bill is Maryville's star forward and high-scoring man on the basketball team.

Bill graduated in June, 1965, from Alcoa High School where he lettered in basketball. He came to Maryville as a transfer in January, 1966, and started playing for Coach Baird. He has lettered every season since then. He set a personal record of 45 points in a single game as a freshman. This year he leads the team with a point average of 25 points per game.

Bill is a 6'2" junior physical education major who plans to teach upon graduation Bill feels our team is better than scores have shown, losing several games by only a few points. Bill also thinks the Scots "should improve in the remainder of the season."

We wish Bill and all our men good luck and our much needed support for the rest of the season.

SCOTS!

There was no lack of excitement or spirit last Thursday Jan. 18, when the Scots were defeated by Florida Presbyterian College. The Scots played one of the best games of the year, losing by an eight point margin.

Up against an impressive and tough Florida Presbyterian, the Scots fought hard, yet were unable to pull ahead of F. P.'s halftime lead. Anyone who saw the game witnessed a fantastic Florida center whose 6'3" enabled him to grab 20 rebounds and 29 points, holding Maryville down depite Bill Padgett's 31 points.

The Scots were losing by two points at the half, after having taken advantage of several Florida mistakes and battling against one of the strongest rebounding teams they have been up against. Presbyterian's two-point margin stretched into an eight to twelve point lead early in the second half, and was only threatened once when the score was 59-61, with five minutes left in the game. They were not about to relinquish their well-earned lead, and walked off the court having outrebounded the Scots 74-36 and outscored them 76-68.

The Scots have had a rough season, losing by small margins in games that they have deserved to win. Despite their hard luck, however, the Scots have lost none of their spirit. It is too bad that more of the student body which they represent do not have as much.

* * * * * *

Dominating the majority of Monday Jan. 15's game, the Lee College Vikings sailed their way to victory over the Maryville Scots. It was a close game, but not close enough. Fouling was heavy, with the Scotties totaling 14 in the first half and 12 in the second, including three technicals called on Coach Baird. The Vikings took advantage of this, gaining 26 points on foul shots.

The Scots tried hard, often closing gaps into near-tie scores, but were outplayed on both ends of the court. Questionable refereeing had the fans jumping and spirits were high, but the hopeful spectators could not spur their team to victory. The boys played well, with Lynn Mize working hard to lead Scot scoring with 20 points.

Despite all the Scotties have been putting into it, they do not seem to be making much "net profit."

The final score was Lee-88, Maryville-80.

As it stands today, the meaning of Black Power is so obscure, its intent so misinterpreted, its impact so abrasive that it has divided Negroes, alienated whites, and simply confused everybody. What does Black Power mean to one who hails from the ghetto? It means the fostering of greater human dignity and cohesiveness among Negroes through the emphasis of racial consciousness; it means black people being able to control effectively their own ghettoes; it means arousing the insensitivity of whites toward poor conditions that exist in many city ghettos, country ghettos, and just plain GHETTOS; it means being black and being able to feel proud of this fact in a system wherein the power structure is controlled by the white majority. Along with other Negroes in this nation, I do not believe that Black Power has to mean burning down Anderson Hall because there are only five Negro students enrolled in our Christian community here at Maryville. Violence, without a doubt, has marred the image of the Negro cause to a great extent; but one wonders what it will eventually require to awaken many persons to the existing critical situation in our society. (One often wonders the same about some members of our college community). One could rely on the old saying that "Time heals all wounds" but for the Negro in the ghetto, this solution possesses little validity because (1) the rats are constantly attacking the cats, and (2) there is little time left for waiting—it's been 105 years, you know. It is my belief that much of the violence that has erupted due to Black Power was caused by white apathy and racism within the power structure. True, more Negroes participated in and organized these riots than did whites; but it was the apathetic attitudes expressed by many Northern congressmen and mayors (not to mention the Romanticism of their Southern counterparts) that sparked last summer's occurrences. It is my further contention that until these factors are removed from our society, the riots of last summer may be annual occurrences.

Whereas it may be considered racist to form programs to get our society back on the course that was plotted for it by Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Dr. Martin Luther King, I feel that this action must be taken because the actions were racist that upset our so-called American system of justice and fair play for ALL. The best place to begin unraveling these problems might be where most of us spend nearly nine months of the year learning to combat heathenism.

On Thursday, Jan. 18, 1968, the Maryville Scot wrestling team showed the spirit and the drive that wins matches. The Scots were wrestling the University of the South, Sewanee. Pre-game predictions forecasted the Scots to lose but the Scots, working hard since the Christmas vacation, had other ideas. The following is the story of the Maryville win over Sewanee, 23—19.

123 — Ray Nye was up against one of the co-captains of the Sewanee team but that didn't stop Ray. As soon as the whistle blew, Ray was in working for a takedown by using a Fireman's Carry. No points were scored in the first period. In the second period Ray had the down position, he sat out and reached back over his head and grabbed his opponent's head. By holding on to his opponent's head, Ray was able to turn his man over and PIN him with 4 min. and 24 sec. by in the match.

130 — Tom Chase wrestled the toughest man on the Sewanee team who was beaten in the S.E.C. tournament by Maryville's great Ron Pritts, only on riding time. Tom showed good moves, especially his stand-up, but was unlucky enough to fall into a pinning hold in the third period that he was unable to get out of.

137 — The "Big Grudge Match of the Century" was the 137 lb. class. The Sewanee boy, as it was publicized in a Chattanooga paper, was out to get Ralph. Needless to say — Ralph GOT HIM. Although Ralph had to lose four pounds the night before the match, he moved in the first period like a "bat out of *ac"! and was able to take his man down. In the second period Ralph was on the bottom and allowed his opponent to put a head lever — on him. Then Ralph made a move that appeared at the time to be a mistake but it turned out to be just right. Johnson rolled across his shoulders enabling him to double — underhook his opponent and PIN HIM with 24 sec. remaining in the second period. That "Farmer" didn't know what he was talking about when he claimed that he could beat Ralph!

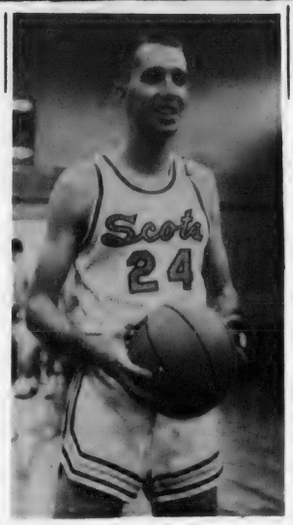
145—Bob Evaul was beaten by points and experience. Bob, one of the football players who has helped the team tremendously this year, showed great speed and "animal" while wrestling. Evaul, only a Freshman, has some great seasons ahead of him.

RALPH JOHNSON

LYNN DODEZ

152 — Scott Wood fought a hard match, but loosing too much weight too fast hurt Scott. Also a illegal slam on the part of the Sewanee boy shook Scott up a little so that the final score was 12—6 favor of the Sewanee man.

160 — Bob Nicholas wrestled his usual winning style against Sewanee by using a Bar and Chancery and a Lateral Drop to score the majority of his points. Nick allowed his man to score three points on a reversal and an escape, but he went on to win 7-3.



167 — Harry Burnett's match was one of the best of the evening. Harry took his man down in the first period with a Fake Arm-Drag and A Step Through. With little trouble at all Harry was able in the Second period to use a Head Lever and turn his opponent over and pin him with 43 sec. remaining in the second period.. A GREAT MATCH!

177 — Bob Van Dyke wrestled very aggressive against a boy who came in second in the Prep School Nationals. Earlier Bob has wrestled as low as 152 and it looked as if he was a little light for the 177 weight class. He lost 9—2.

191 — The total team scores at the beginning of this match were 18 to 14 in favor of Maryville. In order to win the Scots had to win one of their last two matches. Dodez, no small man by any means, was to wrestle a boy who looked like "John Henry" himself! But Lynn managed to duck under, for two pts. in the first period. During the second period Lynn was unable to escape and thus was ridden for three minutes. Counting riding time the score was tied 2-2 going into the Third period. Lynn needed to ride his man for at least two minutes to win but his opponent stood up and escaped early in the Third Period. Lynn now needed a takedown to win. WITH 15 SECONDS TO GO IN THE MATCH, LYNN TOOK HIS MAN DOWN AND PINNED HIM WITH ONLY 3 SECONDS REMAINING.

H. W. — John Forgety, a 180 pounder, wrestled heavyweight for the Scots against a very large heavyweight from Sewanee. John, with his speed, was able to do all right against his opponent until the Sewanee boy was able to get his weight on John and pin him.

The wrestlers came up with their first big win of the season by no other way than the hard work and sacrifice that is known only to a WRESTLER!

Bill Padgett is a quiet, unobtrusive man on campus. He commutes daily from his home in Alcoa, attends classes, and studies. If this were the entire routine of Bill we could write him off as just another student, but this is not the whole story of Bill Padgett. Bill is Maryville's star forward and high-scoring man on the basketball team.

Bill graduated in June, 1965, from Alcoa High School where he lettered in basketball. He came to Maryville as a transfer in January, 1966, and started playing for Coach Baird. He has lettered every season since then. He set a personal record of 45 points in a single game as a freshman. This year he leads the team with a point average of 25 points per game.

Bill is a 6'2" junior physical education major who plans to teach upon graduation Bill feels our team is better than scores have shown, losing several games by only a few points. Bill also thinks the Scots "should improve in the remainder of the season."

We wish Bill and all our men good luck and our much needed support for the rest of the season.

SCOTS!

There was no lack of excitement or spirit last Thursday Jan. 18, when the Scots were defeated by Florida Presbyterian College. The Scots played one of the best games of the year, losing by an eight point margin.

Up against an impressive and tough Florida Presbyterian, the Scots fought hard, yet were unable to pull ahead of F. P.'s halftime lead. Anyone who saw the game witnessed a fantastic Florida center whose 6'3" enabled him to grab 20 rebounds and 29 points, holding Maryville down depite Bill Padgett's 31 points.

The Scots were losing by two points at the half, after having taken advantage of several Florida mistakes and battling against one of the strongest rebounding teams they have been up against. Presbyterian's two-point margin stretched into an eight to twelve point lead early in the second half, and was only threatened once when the score was 59-61, with five minutes left in the game. They were not about to relinquish their well-earned lead, and walked off the court having outrebounded the Scots 74-36 and outscored them 76-68.

The Scots have had a rough season, losing by small margins in games that they have deserved to win. Despite their hard luck, however, the Scots have lost none of their spirit. It is too bad that more of the student body which they represent do not have as much.

* * * * * *

Dominating the majority of Monday Jan. 15's game, the Lee College Vikings sailed their way to victory over the Maryville Scots. It was a close game, but not close enough. Fouling was heavy, with the Scotties totaling 14 in the first half and 12 in the second, including three technicals called on Coach Baird. The Vikings took advantage of this, gaining 26 points on foul shots.

The Scots tried hard, often closing gaps into near-tie scores, but were outplayed on both ends of the court. Questionable refereeing had the fans jumping and spirits were high, but the hopeful spectators could not spur their team to victory. The boys played well, with Lynn Mize working hard to lead Scot scoring with 20 points.

Despite all the Scotties have been putting into it, they do not seem to be making much "net profit."

The final score was Lee-88, Maryville-80.

Vol. 53 | Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee, February 9, 1968 | No. 11

Some six years have fled since Maryville College's Board of Directors began the investigations and discussions which resulted in the tremendous effort which gave us our New Academic Life. Maryville is rapidly becoming one of the most progressive colleges in the country. If you doubt it, look around.

A progressive Board of Directors is in itself unusual. The advantage of such a situation over that faced by state schools responsible to popularly elected legislatures is obvious.

Though still not perfect (and whose is?), our Academic Offering is excellent. The faculty is rapidly becoming solid on all fronts. (Remember four years ago?). The calendar is helpful. The Freshman year doesn't look like more high school any more. It's becoming harder to loaf all the way through to a degree.

The physical plant will be sound in a few years. We may even get that new student center. (With a cigarette machine?)

Maryville, then, has made an obvious decision. We are no longer trying to be a good Southern school dedicated to the proposition of making Tennessee literate. We are preparing to compete nationally. With Earlham, Wooster, Grinnell. Maybe even Goddard and Antioch?

Can we help make our alma mater, or whatever MC will be to you, succeed in this commendable effort? I think so.

When the Board asked for an examination of the curriculum, it also asked for an examination of everything else. Everything.

After considerable prodding, it may be beginning. We seem to be really willing to look at the rest of our life.

If we can bring our social and religious expressions into this century, we might just have something like what our propaganda says we have today. Admissions would go up. So would our morale.

There are to be committees of some sort to investigate these things. Soon. This week. Or at least next week. They are going to want to know what we think about MC. Honestly.

Students are going to play a big part in both the asking and the answering.

We can really maybe change the things we yell so much about, but we have to be willing and ABLE to speak up.

MC is close to being as unique nationally as it is in Tennessee, but if we don't do the things we must do to bring the rest of us up to our Academic Endeavor, we will not succeed.

So think about it before somebody asks you. Some people know we have to change some more.

See you in chapel.

OLD BUSINESS

Dr. Copeland and Dr. Blair attended the meeting to explain and clarify the Jan. 22 action of the Executive Council. It was explained that the action came as a result of various groups' interest in the total picture of the life of Maryville College. With the upgrading of the academic aspect, other areas of vital concern needed to be examined. Specific action taken by the Executive Council included the following; the formation of a special committee on the College Community Life and Structure, composed of representatives of the faculty (administration), students, and Board of Directors, the purpose of which is the devising of ways and means of implementing the recently approved statement of purpose; the constituting of research and evaluation committees concerning such areas of community life as the Religious, Student Standards, Social-Physical-Recreational, Academic, and Special Concerns (four such research committees being composed of both students and faculty (administration) in approximately equal numbers, with the fifth, the Academic Committee, composed of the presently constituted Curriculum Committee; and the determining of the Executive Council whether, after this academic year, there be a need for the continuing function of the aforementioned committees. These sub-committees will include between 40 and 50 interested faculty and students who are willing to become involved in an intensive study and investigaton of areas of vital concern. The Special Committee on College Community Life and Structure will direct this investigation and challenge each committee to explore its topic in depth. Other responsibilities will include receiving and correlating committee reports and channeling them in the right directions. This Special Committee will not abuse the present structure or functions of other exist-

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW ABOUT THE DRAFT LAW . . . COULD KILL YOU!!!

The draft commands compliance to its rules without telling everyone concerned what all those rules are. It is entitled to compliance but not through ignorance of those affected. We discovered how little is known about the draft law and how difficult it is to find any information and decided something had to be done. We have spent months researching the law and have found a lot of facts that are not generally known outside the Selective Service Headquarters.

1. MANY persons are NOT EVEN REQUIRED TO REGISTER for the draft.
2. If you are not required to register and volunteer, you will be registered WITHOUT BEING TOLD YOU DO NOT HAVE TO REGISTER.
3. Few persons have seen the draft law.
4. The government does not give out copies of the law to the public.
5. A "GLASSBLOWER" is a "critical occupation" subject to deferment; there are dozens of other "critical occupations."
6. There are two "services" which FULFILL your military obligation besides the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marines and the Air Force.
7. If you are scheduled for induction there are many postponements available.
8. It is possible to appeal classifications to the President.
9. There are 22 other classifications avialable besides "I A."
10. The American Council On Education says: "Enrollment in the first two years of graduate and professional schools next fall will be limited to women, veterans, men physically disqualified and those over the age of 25."
11. Beginning in July, 1968, almost 75% of all men inducted by Selective Service will be college graduates.

DON'T BE DRAFTED UNNECESSARILY! Get expert information on the facts about the draft law. We provide a free service for students who send a brief resume of facts partinent to their classification, this clipping from your newspaper, and a SELF-ADDRESSED, STAMPED envelope:

THE COMMITTEE FOR INFORMED YOUNG AMERICANS
FRIENDSHIP STATION
Washington, D. C., 20007

Recently, communication, (verbal, physical, or printed) concerning the topics of war, nationalism, or the draft have had the tendency to gather opprobrious labels like a magnet. "Communism," "subversion," and "treason" are among those not uncommon labels.

For this reason I wish to offer a bit of explanation, before a misunderstanding is created. "What you don't know about the draft law . . . could kill you!!!" is a press release from The Committee for Informed Young Americans. It is printed by the Echo, with the realization that the statements made are quite general in nature. The generalities might lead to some doubt.

The committee is a private group with three goals:

1. "To help every potential draftee in America become aware of what action he may take to be placed in the most optimum classification for his individual goals.'
2. "To publicize little known ways, which are allowed by the draft law, to serve your country other than by being classified "I-A" and being inducted."
3. "To focus the attention of the country upon the merits and liabilities of the present draft system."

Being objective (that is—not worrying about losing our friends or our young bods in the jungle), it should not be difficult to commend a group which is concerned with the general welfare of the draftees-elect, and whose desire it is not "to make headlines but to share . . . sources of information," without the theatrics of some who oppose the draft system.

I detect a spark of life;
A spark can cause a fire.
Unrest and noise make known the spark
And also demand a change:
Change is the way of God.
Now I pray for God to blow
The spark
Within each cool heart
Into a Flame of fervent Love:
Love that lives;
Love that shares the human anguish
And also the fullness of Joy;
Love that cares enough to work
And think and sweat;
Love that tries and cries, that has its ups and downs.
This then is the love Christ starts within us,
And we let flow unbounded.

NAUSEA

b.c.

I don't see this poem as "anti-war" or "pro-war." I don't really think that this applies to any war in particular. This poet is just expressing his conscience; something as interested persons we must all do. (Yes, it is a matter of conscience no matter what side of the "war" debate you take.)

Last night, as I tried to sleep a lyric awkwardly set to music rang high and troublesome in my ear:
"Is there a sane man anywhere who is not a war protester?"
Who cannot hear screaming in the purple-deep midnight of his soul that high, piercing note of naked oneness that binds him hopelessly in blood to the mystery man half a world away who his bullet kills who his army kills who his vote kills who his silence kills.
Sing a song of freedom, sing a song of death,
Sing your song at midnight til you're out of breath:
Onward Christian Soldiers marching to a whore,
With the cross of brotherhood going on before.
Each of us has heard a lonely song.
But fortunately it is easy to ignore, to submerge in an orchestra of expediency or dominos or national honor or other foggy-bottom melodies blended with the lulling mood music of freedom.
Yes, in the silence of his aloneness every sane man hates war;
but then I achingly wonder:
"Jesus H. Christ, am I sane?"
It's ok.
I'll smile at you tomorrow, and confess
"It's too complex,
It is far too complex," and we'll watch the tv news happy hour.
But later at midnight
how the hell
can I stop this ringing in my ears?

EDITORIAL

The United States is in a dilemma. Some of her people are determined that she fight the Communists; others are convinced that war is inhuman; the government officials, who represent the people, have the facts of the war in Southeast Asia, cannot seem to decide what is right, but say that "there is no way out." I, too, am in a dilemma.

Let us first discard the name "Communist," it means nothing specific to me because I can see just as many cruel capitalists as I can see cruel communists. The word is a general socio-economic term; and beside that, the two types are converging in some societies. Therefore, let us rather say that some people are positive that the U.S. should fight "Charlie."

What is the U.S. accomplishing in South Vietnam? Robert McAfee Brown says that she is wiping out villages and doing other such damage. Several GI's that I knew (and one in particular) say that the armed forces provide a stability in South Vietnam so that a nation can be built. A word of background. Before Vietnam was divided, the South was prominent in agriculture; that is, it produced the food for the entire country. Because Hanoi was the nation's capital and the center of industry in the North, it was the Rome to which all roads led. Produce was taken from the South to Hanoi by roads that led only north, not east or west. Finished products were taken from the North to the South by these same vertical roads. Consequently, when the nation was divided, the roads no longer had any connection; food had no market; and neither did products. In the time since that division, South Vietnam has slowly built herself up from a land with no capital city, no industry, no unity (as evidenced by the lack of east-west roads), and no nationalism, to a nation with a government and with some national consciousness. The United States has helped provide the stability in which South Vietnam could develop.

Now perhaps the U.S. should not have entered Vietnam in the first place. That is not the question; rather, what is the U.S. to do today with trouble in Korea, South America, the Middle East, and Africa? Can she just pull out of Vietnam? Those who purport that war is inhuman would say she should. But I ask: Would not it be just as inhuman for the U.S. armed forces to leave South Vietnam at this point? The government officials and their supporters would die and any semblance of government and nation would no longer exist. The U.S. cannot pull out wholesale; she must do so gradually and completely—ultimately.

You see my dilemma in a small, incomplete picture. I, too, see the inhumanity in wars, although I refuse to be a militant pacifist. But I am also realistic enough to realize the seeming inevitability of war. Fighting among or between nations is called war, but it is no different from fighting among or between animal groups. Men try desperately to protect their territory and their leadership in it just as animals guard against enemies to their region. The Korean scene is renewed and other differences crop up around the world involving the U.S. But we cannot afford to become pessimistic, or continue to be so. Each person has to live and extend his influence as far as he can do so effectively. Optimism, involvement, understanding the person next to me, living . . . How else do you think I remain sane??

—Beverly Minear

Note: I would suggest The Naked Ape as an interesting study in human behavior.

". . . I sometimes think that I'm a man of genius half-finished? The genius has been left out, the faculty of expression is wanting; but the need for expression remains, and I spend my days groping for the latch of a closed door."

What Happened to Maryville's Gospel?

"Then Jesus went to Nazareth . . . And on the Sabbath day he went as usual to the meeting house. He stood up to read the Scriptures . . .

'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me.
He has anointed me to preach the Good News to the poor,
He has sent me to proclaim liberty to the captives,
And recovery of sight to the blind,
To set free the oppressed,
To announce the year when the Lord will save his people!'

They rose up, dragged Jesus out of town, and took him to the top of the hill . . . to throw him over the cliff."

* * * * * *

Like many church-related colleges, there is a lot of religion here (mostly in the form of Puritan-oriented social rules and required chapel). But there is more irreligion, We are secular from top to bottom. Of course it is well-hidden under a "Christian" residue of the middle-class niceties and of good-mannered apathy. (Don't ever care enough to lose your temper!) But what is really Christian? What happened to the Gospel?

It is about time that we get back to the roots, take a good long look at Scripture, and listen afresh to Jesus (and the Prophets and Paul and Luther and Bonhoeffer and . . .). No, this is not a plea to return to the nineteenth century "old-time religion" (a' la the green Hymnals under the glare of the blazing mercury-vapor lights) or even to the badly misunderstood and wrongly idealized age of the first century. But it is a plea to allow the gospel of God's free, unfettered grace in Jesus Christ to confront us and to let something happen which transcends nineteenth or twentieth century religious culture and which just may be best expressed in emerging twenty-first century forms.

It hurts to hear it, but the gospel of Jesus Christ is anti-religious but pro-person.

By religion I mean all the stuffy and boring tradition which goes by the name and which rightly turns us off: the form without the substance, the arrogant attitude without the love.

Jesus faced the form without the substance. They had read the rule-book to him from childhood! "Don't ever break the Sabbath! Keep the thirty-nine laws to see that it isn't broken!" Alas, the Pharisee forgot that "the Sabbath was made for the good of man; man was not made for the Sabbath."

Luther felt the form without the substance until he was "scraped marrow and a dying jelly" (John Osborne, Luther, Act One). Then the knife of the Word of God cut deep into the marrow: "He who is righteous by faith (NOT BY FORM) shall live."

Now hear us at the gray dawn as we joyfully raise our scattered voices in the form without the substance:

This is my Father's world,
O let me ne'er forget
That though the wrong
Seems oft so strong,
God is the Ruler yet.

But, is He? Napalm-scorched babies in Vietnam (a plague on both your houses, Washington and Hanoi!). Is He? Assassination in Seoul and intrigue off Wonsan. Is He? Blood-stained streets in Detroit and burned-out rat holes in Newark.

It is too much. Maryville, build high the walls on the citadel top! Close the real world out and purify us all to practice the "priestly snuffing around in the sins of men in order to catch them out" (Dietrich Bonhoeffer, Letters and Papers from Prison, p. 213).

I reiterate: The Gospel is anti-religious. It stands against the form without the substance, against the dishonest, superficial, false, arrogant attitude without the love.

But to negate the negation, the Gospel is pro-person. GOD IS LOVE (not the Prime Mover Unmoved and certainly not just the sublime and fiery Law-Giver). Love came down in Jesus Christ, who was stern to the Pharisee, contemptuous of the rule-bound traditionalist, angry at the money-grabbing priest but kind to the backward, compassionate to the poor, and forgiving to the prostitute.

"He has anointed me to preach Good News . . . liberty . . . and recovery of sight . . ." Among others, Paul picked it up and preached it in all kinds of traditional synagogues. They called him anarchist (technically, antinominian, or basically, anti-religious). But he was a brave man and took his chance on the Holy Spirit, who always makes the Gospel contemporary.

Some of us pick it up, and they also say: "He wants to destroy the image, ruin the structure, and create chaos out of order!"

But does not a loving Gospel say to Maryville: "Find the real priorities? Does not the Holy Spirit supersede all laws? Are not people more important than principles?" The Gospel calls for person-centered action. This may well be the twenty-first century form.

Dr. David Young has given us the best of all good examples of this. Why not admit some culturally deprived, socially oppressed, intellectually blind freshmen who want "out" from the ghetto? By some, I suggest 15% of the entering class. Now this is what I mean when I say, the Gospel is pro-person: Can we pay the love-price of upperclass student tutors (I mean time), of professor-counsellors (again, more time), and of administration money (I mean a crash scholarship program and a special pre-college course in the summer).

As a witness to the conservative community, as a service to the fragmented nation, for the awakening of our dying Christian community, we say it is time: "Maryville, be a lamp set on a Southern hill. O ghettos of the North, open your gates. The roads lead South."

Now, what happened to the Gospel?

ing committees nor will it overshadow the purpose and work of the Student Council.

Following Dr. Copeland's presentation there was a lively discussion concerning the structure and its relationship to Student Council and Student-Faculty Senate. It was felt that Student-Faculty Senate should have more responsibility in the committee structure. A motion was presented to accept the action of the Executive Council with the addition of more responsibility for Student-Faculty Senate. There was not a second due to confusion on the issues, so Student Council was adjourned and rescheduled to meet Thursday night at 8:30.

* * * * * *

President Doug Gamble called the meeting to order and discussion continued concerning the role of Student-Faculty Senate. Two plans were presented incorporating Student-Faculty Senate in the committee proposal. The first plan proposed that the Special Committee and the Committee on Committees select the members of each of the sub-committees. Then the function of the Special Committee would be to designate responsibilities to these 5 committees with any recommendations being sent directly to Student-Faculty Senate or Executive Council. The other plan placed the Student-Faculty Senate under the auspices of the Special Committee, but the power and function of the Senate would be similar to the first plan. It was then moved that Doug Gamble and Doug Price be given the authority to negotiate for Student Council in Executive Council with the idea of suggesting possible dates for committee reports. This motion was carried. A second motion was presented requesting that the first plan be presented to Executive Council as the preferred proposal of Student Council. This was a unamious decision. Final action involved council's decision to give a one-year subscription of Ramparts magazine to the library. The meeting was adjourned at 9:30.

Come on the weather's fine
the sidewalk's dry
From one to ten and back again
Here's the stone now throw and bend down low

It's ours until you miss
Whoops, it's on the line
Now watch me go

Another game?
What's this?
From one to ten and on?
But why?
Why not?
Come on Let's play
Yeah? What way?

A guitar, a crowded little chapel; Rodin's The Kiss, the words "we not I," . . . and . . . two people, talking about love. This was the Pray-In Thursday evening, February 1. Reading a dialogue mostly from the Bible, some from Walt Whitman, and some from Bob Harner, Winifred Welling and Bob talked about love: not the ordinary kind of sex love, but peopled love, love given freely to one human being from another, and, love received openly by all who want it. The room was small, the people silent, and they prayed about love.

ON GOVERNMENT

A fourth part to this series has been added to give students and faculty information concerning another important system of government at Maryville.

The Executive Council of the Faculty, which is a representative body responsible for making all faculty decisions and regulations, meets twice a month to discuss and help determine policy in all areas affecting the total community. One of its chief concerns is the academic life, including curriculum, calendar, and requirements for admission, promotion, and graduation. It is ultimately responsible to the president and the Board of Directors of the College. The process by which the recent curriculum revision was made illustrates one way in which the Council operates. After receiving reports from the joint committee of the Board and the faculty appointed to make preliminary studies and formulate plans, the Council deliberated and approved the recommendations that were then presented to the Board of Directors for final approval. The Council recommends to the Board all candidates for degrees, including honorary degrees.

When major policy changes are not involved, the Council takes final action. In addition to matters that arise from within the body itself, it receives and acts upon recommendations from the Student-Faculty Senate and various student and faculty committees—such recommendations as those concerning standards and regulations, new organizations, and all-campus programs. One of the most recent actions was the delegating of its authority in disciplinary cases to the newly created Judicial Council and Review Board.

The twenty-five members of the Executive Council are chosen from three different categories: (1) three-fifhts of the department chairmen, on a rotating basis, for terms of three years each: (2) six additional representatives of the instructional staff, appointed for terms of two years each; and (3) administrative officers and librarian. The president of the College serves as chairman, the academic dean as vice-chairman, and the secretary of the faculty as secretary.

Will the North Koreans make a deal with the Pueblo?
Can we afford two fronts in Southeast Asia?
Where does the money for defense come from? education? poverty program? space program?
Will Defense Secretary Clifford change our war policy?
Will Detroit's new employment policy avoid a hot summer?
What will Arkansas Governor Rockefeller do about the disappearance of some two hundred inmates within the walls of the state penitentary?
Whom do you support for President of the U.S.A.?
Is Johnson's reputation completely unsatisfactory?
Is Nixon necessarily a loser?
What of Wallace?
Any other bids? New York Governor Rockefeller?
Are there any predictions as to when World War III will be officially declared?

The Maryville Scots dealt the Mars Hill Lions a 79-76 setback last Saturday night. After a slow start, the Scots took the lead at 7-5 and never relinquished it. The lead continued to build as the Scots hit well from the floor and the foul line. The team's defense was also a key factor in building a twelve point first half lead. On numerous occasions the Scots cleared the ball off the backboards and moved quickly down court for the score. Bill Padgett lead the first half scorers with 20 points.

The second half saw the Scots cool off a bit from their hot first half. Mars Hill's press slowly cut down the lead that it took the Scots the whole first half to build. But they could never catch the Scots as they often hit the clutch foul shots and scored from the field when they needed it. The Scots put four men in double figures. The two starting guards, captain Don Payne and Dave Maxwell, scored 20 and 10 points respectively, including Don's perfect night on the foul line (8-8). Forward Bill Padgett lead the Scots with 24 points and forward Mike Barrows contributed 11. The Scots now carry a two game win streak into the game against Milligan College on Monday night.

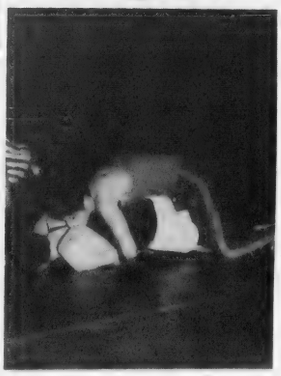
RALPH JOHNSON

Ralph Johnson is Maryville's record-setting and record breaking wrestler. He holds to his credit a National Prep School Wrestling Championship, two SEC wrestling championships, and a personal record of pinning his opponent in 52 seconds.

Ralph is a senior history major from New York. He came to Maryville four years ago as a champion, and has furthered his record since. During his freshman and junior years he became a SEC champion, and hopes to do it again this year.

About wrestling Ralph had several comments. He feels that wrestling is one of the most demanding sports, not only for the match itself, but also for the hard preparations. Besides strenuous daily workouts, there is the trial of making weight. Ralph has to lose about thirty pounds to begin the season plus weekly diet curbs. Ralph also feels that the individuality makes it rougher. "There aren't 11 other guys you can count on, it's just you to win or lose."

Maryville was ranked as a possible third in the SEC ratings this year, and Ralph feels we have some good men who could put us there. He is especially hopeful for Harry Burnett, Lynn Dodez, and Ray Nye.



Maryville has a fine wrestler in Ralph Johnson, so let's all give him our support for a good ending for this season.

SPORTS

WON

On Thursday, January 25, 1968, the University of Chattanooga, which had earlier in the year "begged out," finally showed up on the mat. The Scots looking in the best shape ever proved to be the top team. All of the Scots wrestled aggressive, hard-fought matches, which showed that their hard work both physical and mental was paying off. The evening was highlighted by pins in the 120 lb. class by Ray Nye, 137 lb. class by Ralph Johnson, and the 191 lb. class by Lynn Dodez. But the two most exciting matches of the evening were the 160 lb. and the 177 lb. classes, neither of which were pins. Harry Burnett who had been sick all week with the flu went on to win a magnificant match at 177. Likewise Nick at 167 wrestled a great match, but because the man who was keeping riding time failed to record thirty seconds in the first period, the match ended in a tie. The Scots are really wrestling as a team, a team that will place very high in the S.EC.

I would like to be able to love my country and still love justice.
Albert Camus

Don't let the score decieve you because the Maryville grapplers wrestled another tremendous match last Saturday night. The Scots were host to a very powerful and experienced Milligan College team. It was this same squad that all but shut-out the Scots earlier in the season. Thus having improved tremendously in the past weeks the Scots really gave Milligan something to think about. Again the Scots depended on their "Old Reliable Four" Nye, Johnson, Nicholas and Burnett all of who had wins for the Scots.

Maybe a good way to illustrate the improved abilities of the team would be to single out a man such as John Forgety. John, always a aggressive wrestler, wrestled his best match of the year last Saturday only because his hard work in practice enabled him to set up and execute moves important in developing a winning style.

It was a long awaited and well-earned victory that lit up the Scots' scoreboard Monday night, Jan. 22. Playing well on both ends of the court, the Scots kept the Bryan College Lions OUT of the "cage" and bagged a respectable 54 percent field goal average and a 61-45 rebound advantage to win the game by a score of 99-77.

Although the Scot defense in the second half was not as strong as in the first, they were able to maintain their 10-point half time lead. A rally by the Lions failed and the Scots' lead enabled Coach Baird to introduce some new faces to the Maryville fans. They all played a great game and show good potential for upcoming seasons.

Come growl a little—for us!
P.S. The Sports staff would like to apologize to Coach Baird for sticking him with three technical fouls in the Lee College game when he only received one. We're giving him the other two on credit and hope that we can repossess them at the end of the season!

Investigation Proposal Passed by Executive Council

Some definitions:

1. hypocrisy — the false assumption of an appearance of virtue or religion.
2. generation — a group of individuals born and living contemporaneously.
3. individual — a single human being as contrasted with a social group or institution.

In this environment, which does little to recognize the fact of participation in the consumption of alcohol or the enjoyment of sex, which demands and assumes at least a passive adherence to Christianity, and which would be aghast at the standard vocabulary of the normal student (male and female), many people (students and faculty) are beginning to vocalize a feeling of being forced into a great act of hypocrisy. Or of being forced into leaving.

Is this a valid comment? Is there really a generation gap at MC? I feel that an emphatic "yes" is in order.

Is an individual welcome? I mean an honest individual who choses to stray from the acceptable mold, no matter how flexible it may be? In theory, yes. In reality, probably not. Unless he plays the game and smiles on cue. And this is not a denial of the need for regulation.

A reaction will be, "We don't want any such people. They knew our stand before they came."

If we accept this attitude, we are denying membership in our community to a great portion of those now present. What does such a reaction do to Drs. Stine and Young and their call for us to mean what we say?

It has been quite adequately proved that a great many MC'ers drink. And it is not a passing fancy. Some smoke pot. Or cigarettes. Or worse. Many engage in sex. Many drive cars. Many are quite agnostic.

Has anybody demonstrated why this should not be so? Such a demonstration, which may be possible, would involve a recognition of these facts. So far, the college has not been ready to do so.

When MC has a pot raid, what will the college do? Should the college provide means to prohibit pregnancy? Is the prohibition of anything the most practical and effective educational method?

Have you read the Graffitti in the Chapel? What makes students in a Christian college say those things? If you don't know, do you not think you should? If you don't care (or if you hope it

At the January 24th meeting of the Student Council, President Copeland and Dr. Blair were present to explain the changes made by the Executive Council in the newly proposed Committee on College Community Life and Structure. The proposal was submitted to the Executive Council three weeks earlier.

The problem, and the one that remained the central issue throughout the meeting, was the elimination, by the Executive Council, of the Student Faculty Senate. Under the revised system of the Executive Council, the Student Faculty Senate would have been relegated under the Student Standards Committee. After debating the issue, with Student Council mmbers as well as student body members, President Copeland agreed to discuss the problem with the Executive Council, along with Doug Gamble and Doug Price. The following is the result of the Action of the Executive Council on February 7. The starred portions of the proposal are those added by the Executive Council after the January 24 meeting of the Student Council. A diagram showing the structure of the committees, and the new position of the Student Faculty Senate appears in this issue of The Highland Echo.

February Meetings Continue

Lisa Sergio, specialist and lecturer in world affairs, will be on the campus of Maryville College on February 15 as a Danforth Visiting Lecturer.

While here Miss Sergio will give a public lecture on "The Changing Shape of World Affairs" and a convocation address, "Today's Youth is Tomorrow's Power."

The visiting lecturers program under which Miss Sergio comes here was initiated in 1957 by the Arts Program of the Association of American Colleges, and is supported by a grant from the Danforth Foundation. Its purpose is to assist colleges in their efforts to strengthen liberal education. Each year several men and women of outstanding intellectual stature from this country and abroad are made available to colleges and universities. They remain on campus from two days to a week.

A pioneer in mass communication, Miss Sergio was the first woman radio commentator in Europe, and a trail blazer among women newscasters in the United States. As a platform and classroom lecturer, she is regarded as one of the best informed and most effective analysts of international affairs both here and abroad.

The only child of an Italian nobleman and his American wife, Miss Sergio was born and reared in Florence, cradle of the Renaissance, where, still a school girl, she began her professional career. At fifteen she translated a play from French into Italian and witnessed its production; at seventeen she was associate editor of the only English weekly in Italy to which many famous writers became regular contributors. Soon she turned from journalism to archaeology, worked on excavations at Ostia and Pompeii, wrote a guide book to the latter place, and at Ostia had an ancient Roman tomb named for her.

In 1932, when Mussolini's regime was still regarded as an asset for Italy, she entered the field of broadcasting and, at the suggestion of Marconi, the inventor of radio, became Europe's first woman commentator and the official English interpreter for the Fascist dictator. By 1936, when the regime invaded Ethiopia and in other ways revealed its aggressive purposes and despotic objectives, Miss Sergio became one of its most daring opponents. In 1937, it was only through the aid of Marconi that she was able to evade arrest and reach the United States in safety.

A few days after landing in New York she was signed up by the NBC network and, among other programs, was the first woman musical commentator on opera broadcasts and symphony concerts. With the outset of World War II she turned exclusively to news broadcasting over the ABC network and station WQXR, and was recognized among the nation's twenty leading news commentators. During the war Miss Sergio entered the lecture field, and later taught a course in propaganda analysis at Columbia University in New York.

An indefatigable world traveler, to keep constantly abreast of the news, she is intimately acquainted with all of Europe, the Communist countries as well as the free nations, is familiar with the Middle East, East and North Africa, and much of Southeast Asia. Under State Department auspices she has lectured all over India and Pakistan. She visited several countries of Latin America in the fall of 1967.

Active in public affairs, Miss Sergio has served on two Presidential Committees on International Cooperation, on the Board of the International Business and Professional Women, on the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the Council of Churches, Church Women United, the Department of Information of the Episcopal diocese of Washington, and other organizations both religious and secular. Her volunteer activities include a weekly Sunday morning broadcast (WMAL, Washington, D. C., 8:00 A.M.) called "Prayer Through the Ages." She has also published a book entitled "Prayers of Women."

The recipient of many awards for broadcasting, Miss Sergio has also received two honorary degrees (Doctor of Laws, St. Mary's College, Notre Dame; Doctor of Humane Letters, Keuka College. Keuka Park, New York) and was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor by the French Government for her work as a news commentator.

PEACECORPS IN TROUBLE

WASHINGTON (CPS) — The Peace Corps, once the Mecca of many student idealists, is on the threshold of what could be the most crucial period in its seven-year history.

Few will deny that the Peace Corps has been one of the most successful and popular of the New Frontier programs initiated during the Kennedy Administration. But the Peace Corps now faces many new and delicate problems, most of them a direct result of the war in Vietnam.

The tactfulness with which these problems are solved within the next few years may well determine whether or not the Peace Corps can survive on a large scale, and if it can, how effective it will be in accomplishing its original mission.

Peace Corps officials—who in the past have had little trouble convincing young people to give up two years of their life to work in an underdeveloped country—now find themselves on the defensive for the first time. The major problem is the Peace Corps' close association with the federal government at a time when the government is unpopular among young people.

Peace Corps officials, including Agency Director Jack Vaughn, are not ready to admit the Corps has problems. But some other high-ranking government officials have confirmed privately that the Corps may be in trouble.

Recruiting figures alone indicate the Peace Corps has less appeal now than it had a year ago. In November, 1966, the Peace Corps received 7,097 applications from college seniors. Last November, applications were filed by only 3,768 seniors, nearly a 50 per cent reduction.

Overall, the Peace Corps received 9,661 applications last November, compared with 12,411 in November of 1966. Recruiting also was down in December, with the Corps receiving 7,095 applications last December, com-

SUSGA Meets

On the weekend of January 26 the President, Vice-president, and two members of the Student Council went to Cookeville, Tennessee, home of Tennessee Tech, for the annual Tennessee regional SUSGA (Southern Universities Student Government Association) convention. The four students who went, Gamble, Price, Shep Spear, and Brian Childs, attended discussions concerning campus entertainment, student powers and rights, judiciaries, constitutions, and academic involvement.

As the meetings went on, it appeared to the Maryville delegates that they had more to contribute, as far as academic progress is concerned, than most other Tennessee schools, and they really learned very little of what the other delegates called "new material and ideas." In the words of one of the delegates "their mouths dropped when we told them of our Student Judiciary and New Curriculum."

It was stated by the President of the Student Body of the University of Tennessee, Martin, that the main purpose of a Student Government was to provide campus entertainment. This appeared to set the theme for the entire weekend. Most of the meeting time was taken up in talking abstractly of some "ideas" concerning progressive education and very little time was afforded to the actual process in obtaining these modern concepts. All four Maryville students agreed that though Maryville has much to do to make it an ideal institution, it does appear to be far ahead of the other Tennessee schools represented at the SUSGA conferance. As Gamble told the Chairman of the Tennessee Area SUSGA region, "We aren't interested in being categorized with the other small colleges; we are competing with the big boys."

Other schools represented at the meeting were the University of Tennessee, the University of Tennessee, Martin, Tennessee Tech, Lambath College, Austin Peay, Peabody, Lincoln Memorial University, and Carson-Newman College.

EDITORIAL

Since the Student Council proposal first appeared in the Echo on January 19, those concerned with the re-evaluation of various aspects of MC's life have anxiously watched the growth of these plans, even while they experienced momentary setbacks. The first draft of the issue through Executive Council did not comply with the wishes of Student Council on the matters of definite dates for committee reports, nor was the Committee on Committees (Nominating Committee) given a place in selecting committee members for the study groups which were being formed. (This Committee on Committees was developed by the Judiciary Committee of Student Council when the new judicial system was developed, with the idea that committee would be exercised in the formulation of other college committees.) What did become part of the Executive Council action was the Special Committee on College Community Life and Structure, a committee which will oversee study groups concerned with five various aspects of Maryville College. With the assistance of negotiation between Student Council and Executive Council, we see ourselves with five committees for studying the total life of MC and the assurance that we are going to see action immediately. Reincorporated deadlines for committee reports and the Committee on Committees can assure the Student Body that definite movement is imminent.

None of the actions above were as easily formulated as they appear when reading from a paper. There was misunderstanding galore on Student Council. The Executive Council did not receive the original version of the S.C. proposal to act upon, but rather one that incorporated some of the ideas of the S.C. proposal. The first action by the Executive Council was unacceptable to those who listened to the explanation of it by Dr. Copeland at a Student Council meeting. To top off the student "activism" on the subject, students' interests and reactions were interpreted as mistrust and negativism.

Among the many things that Dr. Cantelon said to a few last weekend was that an institution in turmoil is a healthy state of affairs. It is that group of "creatively anxious" people who will work to get things accomplished. While mistrust may have been part of the student reaction to the state of affairs surrounding the first Executive Council action, is it not possible that the "negativism" was actually this creative anxiety? If we accept the ideas of analysis (cutting up) and synthesis (putting back together—hopefully improved), I feel that much, heretofore interpreted as negativism and positivism, can actually be seen by observers as analysis and synthesis carried on by those whose spirit, I dare say, will stand a rigorous test against real negativity.

Examine the actions passed by the Executive Council and gather up your views on the issues involved. The student views are tremendously important to the entire study — a study which, we have no reason to question, will bring the sweeping changes to the other phases of life at MC as the curriculum study has brought to the academic life this year. Let us move forward and speak, with analysis and synthesis not far from the center of our word choice.

I don't think of marital infidelity when I read this poem. Really it can be applied to many situations. With sadness we often abandon people, institutions, and countries out of utter despair and we turn to things that really aren't alternatives. But if that's all one has to be true too . . .

Fish

News of a bright idea put to work was reported in the February 1 issue of Presbyterian Life, our denominational trade mag, as the first of "Saturday Thoughts." The idea: make known the offer of the "Community of the Fish" to supply help where it is needed. Now Box 2470 has offered to receive volunteers for membership in our College Community of the Fish. Send your name and/or box number to Box 2470 if you are willing to do what you can to help individuals in distress. If the need is transportation, a baby-sitter, brainstorming session, study help, emergency supplies, an extra hand, or a friend to listen, etc., the coordinated community effort will fill the need. For now, put offers or requests in Box 2470, or make a sign appealing to the Fish. Faculty and townspeople are urged to participate. To tap resources of willing Fish is a fun thing.

EDITORIAL

As far as the other schools represented in SUSGA are concerned (see article on the Tennessee SUSGA meeting) Maryville College seems to far ahead in idea if not it practice. SUSGA seems to be slow, and Maryville I am glad to say seems to at least want to progress and "catch up" to the "big boys" that it wants to compete with. Having been a representative to the Tennessee SUSGA meeting I have strong doubts as to the relevance of SUSGA to the unique Maryville situation.

It appears to the majority of the student body that the primary concern of a Student Government is NOT to provide entertainment or set standards of "good sportsmanship" or just talk about student power. Certainly campus entertainment is important, as long as the student body wants it, and good sportsmanship is always desired. But student power and involvement is NOT something to be just talked about. Something must be done.

SUSGA's constitution clearly states that it intends to have no off campus involvement. It wants to stay completely non-political. It seems to want to stay encapsulated on campus and reject just what the student body at Maryville has been wanting: more involvement in the "real" world. As far as a student organization is concerned SUSGA is not concerned about the war in Viet-Nam, or the race situation, and it has nothing to say or do to help church related colleges . . . well, like Maryville.

I think that it is time we the students of Maryville gave a long hard look at SUSGA and then give another long look at NSA. What do the two have to offer to Maryville College?

NSA (or USNSA, United States National Student Association) is the largest student organization of its kind. It offers something to every member. Everything from lawyers to protect the rights of student body presidents and newspaper editors to chartered planes for tours of Europe at remarkabley inexpensive rates. But most important it has an office dedicated to work with the problems of the student bodies of SMALL CHRISTIAN COLLEGES! The NSA has made statements on student power, Viet-Nam, Pot, and presidential elections. But not only is NSA making statements it is doing something about it. Many students can vote in national elections, lest we forget.

I ask for an investigation of SUSGA and NSA by our Student Council and then when all the information is recorded we should have a student reforendum about withdrawing from SUSGA and joining NSA.

Meanwhile I will remember the dialogue at the Tennessee SUSGA meeting that went something like this:

SUSGA Speaker: "What do ya'll think of course evaluation, I hear it is a new thing!"

Doug Gamble: "I filled out an Interim evaluation yesterday, ah . . ."

Letters to the Editor

February 10, 1968

Dear Sir;

I have just finished reading the Editorial titled "What you don't know about the draft law . . . could kill you!!!" and am reacting. That is the reason this is being written, as a reaction to something that bothered me greatly. Perhaps I am responding in a manner that might well be classified as a 'sentimental female.' By some chance combination of chromosomes, I do not have to be drafted or weigh the heavy life and death question. However, I cannot help thinking that this thing called freedom must be worth something. People have dared against tremendous odds to get it; others have decided that it was worth dying for. For some reason they were "willing to die so that honor and justice might live." Those are words from a song called 'The Impossible Dream' Maybe freedom is just an 'impossible dream,' yet men in the past thought it enough of a reality to strive to secure it for future generations. Sometimes it occurs to me that people accept this gift without considering the great responsibilities that go with it. It's true that these responsibilities don't always include war, but sacrifices still must be made. There is something in the idea of bring able to live without being afraid to say what is in your mind, or to write those feelings, publicly, without being branded a traitor for doing so, that makes me think freedom is worth having. Yes, there are risks and obligations. In a movie called 'The Great Escape,' fifty men dared to get it; in the end, only three really made it. This idea that many men would die for it, is staggering. Thus it really bothers me when 'draft card burners' object; they seem to forget that being able to object is a big part of a freedom that can so easily be taken away.

This is not meant to be a call for all men to run out and enlist. No; merely, as stated above, a reaction that had to be aired. I feel there are demands that must be faced, obligations that one must bear simply because he was born. It is easy, I guess, to write such ideas from this vantage point, yet I cannot help but think that the half-million guys over there are making it possible for somebody else to someday know the joy of freedom I know. The patriotic sermon is over.

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Lynne Taylor

There is absolutely no inevitability as long as there is a willingness to contemplate what is happening.

ACTION OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

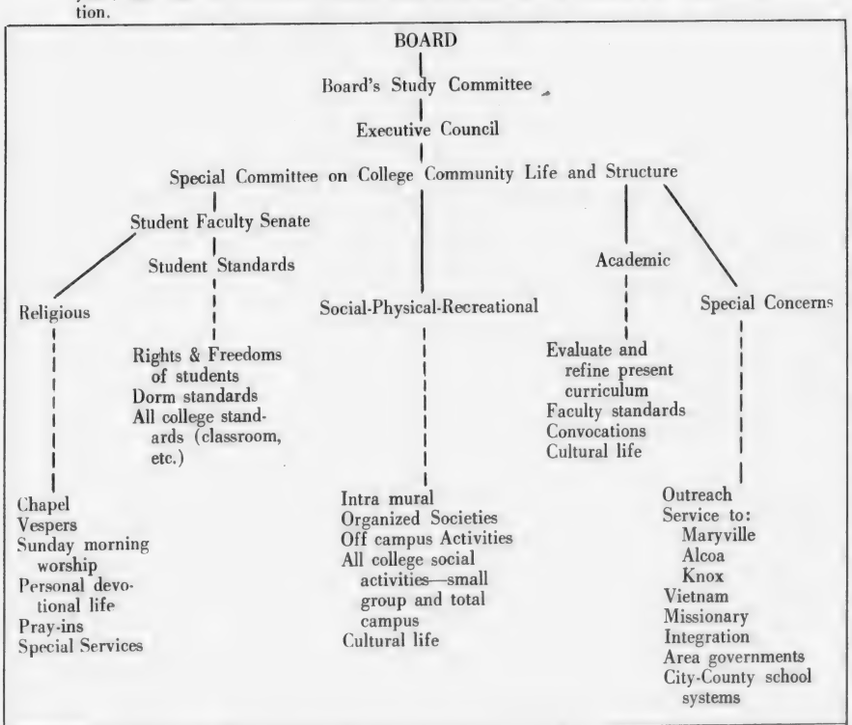
February 7, 1968

I That a special committee on the College Community Life and Structure be formed, composed of representatives of the faculty (administration), students, and Board of Directors, the purpose of which is to devise ways and means of implementing our recently approved statement of purpose.

II That there be constituted research and evaluation committees concerning such areas of community life as the Religious, Student Standards, Social-Physical-Recreational, Academic, and Special Concerns. (Note chart.)

III That four such research committees be composed of both students and faculty (administration) in approximately equal numbers; and that the fifth, namely, the Academic Committee, be composed of the presently constituted Curriculum Committee; and that for the purpose of evaluating and refining the curriculum and dealing with other academic matters, it meet with the Student Council committee on academics.

IV That each committee be related to its cognate group in the present structure, and that the newly constituted Committee on Religion has overlapping membership with the UCCF and Religious Life and Activities Committee. (Examples of other such relatedness are:
The Special Concerns Committee and the present Development Council and Sesquicentennial Committees
The Student Standards Committee and the Student/Faculty Senate and Residence Hall Councils)



V That the Research and Evaluation Committees on our Religious Life and Student Standards be so structured that present membership on the Student/Faculty Senate be well represented.

VI That the reports of the Religious Life and Student Standards committees be presented to the Senate, and that the Senate be invited to register its judgments on any or all parts of such reports.

VII That the Special Committee and the Religious Life and Student Standards committees be encouraged to proceed in such a manner that reports in these two areas might be considered by the Senate next month and by the Special Committee and Executive Council during April.

VIII That we request the Administrative Committee of the Board to designate at least two and not more than four Board members, and that in addition the membership be composed of:
Students: Stevan Horning, Linda Jones, Gary Meyer, Mary Jane Schussler
Faculty: Carolyn Blair, Dean Boyd L. Daniels, David P. Young, The President (Convenor)
Further, that this committee, or its representatives, consult with the Nominating Committee before determining the membership of the other new committees.

IX That the Special Committee and the research committees function during the remainder of this year; and that the Executive Council determine thereafter if there be a need for their continuation.

THE UN-AMERICAN

by Ralph Linton

Our solid American citizen awakens in a bed built on a pattern which originated in the Near East, but which was modified in Northern Europe before it was transmitted to America. He throws back covers made from cotton, domesticated in India, or linen, domesticated in the Near East, or silk, the use of which was discovered in China. All of these materials have been spun and woven by processes invented in the Near East. He slips into his moccasins, invented by the Indians of the Eastern woodlands, and goes to the bathroom, whose fixtures are a mixture of European and American inventions, both of recent date. He takes off his pajamas, a garment invented in India, and washes with soap invented by the ancient Gauls . . .

He puts on garments whose form originally derived from the skin clothing of the nomads of the Asiatic steppes, puts on shoes made from skins tanned by a process invented in ancient Egypt and cut to a pattern derived from the classical civilizations of the Mediterranean, and ties around his neck a strip of bright-colored cloth which is a vestigial survival of the shoulder shawls worn by the seventeenth-century Croatians. Before going out for breakfast he glances through the window, made of glass invented in Egypt, and if it is raining puts on overshoes made of rubber discovered by the Central American Indians and takes an umbrella, invented in southeastern Asia. Upon his head he puts a hat made of felt, a material invented in the Asiatic steppes.

On his way to breakfast he stops to buy a paper, paying for it with coins, an ancient Lydian invention. At the restaurant a whole new series of borrowed elements confronts him. His plate is made of a form of pottery invented in China. His knife is of steel, an alloy first made in southern India, his fork a medieval Italian invention, and his spoon a derivative of a Roman original. He begins breakfast with an orange, from the eastern Mediterranean, a cantaloupe from Persia, or perhaps a piece of African watermelon. With this he has coffee, an Abyssinian plant, with cream and sugar. Both the domestication of cows and the idea of milking them originated in the Near East, while sugar was first made in India. After his fruit and first coffee he goes on to waffles, cakes made by a Scandinavian technique from wheat domesticated in Asia Minor. Over these he pours maple syrup, invented by the Indians of the Eastern woodlands. As a side dish he may have the egg of a species of bird domesticated in Indo-China, of thin strips of the flesh of an animal domesticated in Eastern Asia which have been salted and smoked by a process developed in northern Europe.

When our friend has finished eating he settles back to smoke, an American Indian habit, consuming a plant domesticated in Brazil in either a pipe, derived from the Indians of Virginia, or a cigarette, derived from Mexico. If he is hardy enough he may even attempt a cigar, transmitted to us from the Antilles by way of Spain. While smoking he reads the news of the day, imprinted in characters invented by the ancient Semites upon a material invented in China by a process invented in Germany. As he absorbs the accounts of foreign troubles he will, if he is a good conservative citizen, thank a Hebrew deity in an Indo-European language that he is 100 per cent American.

Basketball-Wrestling Homecoming

You too can help establish another Maryville tradition! Come stag or drag to the First Annual Basketball-Wrestling Homecoming Dance. Let's give these two great sports the recognition they deserve! The dance will take place on Feb. 16 (Friday), at 8:30 p.m. in the Intramural Gym. Music is to be provided by "The Devil's Food." Dress will be semi-heel and no tie. The cost for the dance and festivities—75c per person. Each of the boy's dorms will be responsible for nominating one girl for this year's "Highland Lassie." A queen is to be selected from the nominees and will reign, along with her court, at Saturday night's game against Emory and Henry. The members of the court will be escorted by the captains of the basketball and wrestling teams. Yall come!

Harter Publication Accepted

Dr. Harry H. Harter, Professor of Music and Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at Maryville College, has had his 17th choral work accepted for publication. With Contrite Hearts Return, a choral work written for the Maryville College choir concert of 1967, will be published by Belwin Inc. and released in late spring.

Dr. Harter has been director of the Maryville College choir for the past 20 years and many of his published works have been written especially for the choir. The scores include a short oratorio, symphonic pieces, a tone poem for piano and orchestra, a ballet suite, solos for voice and various instruments, and choral pieces and arrangements.

The New "Hope For International Understanding"

In international affairs Maryville College has generally expressed more concern than most colleges throughout the United States, but it has not been enough. There has usually been a wide representation of foreign countries; this year seven foreign students are registered at Maryville and more than fifteen students have homes overseas. How many of them do you know? Too often we view international relations as the affairs of people "out there" in a world separate from ours, for we fail to see in our immediate environment the many factors directly or indirectly affected by other countries. There is an imminent need to increase our awareness of global affairs and problems today.

Several years ago the International Relations Club faded into oblivion and has not been heard of since. The Fred Hope Fund, has for many years been an outlet for Maryville's expressions of concern, but this fund was always limited by the image of a one-way charity drive for a foreign missionary undertaking. This year the former Fred Hope Fund has changed its name to "Hope for International Understanding," and with the change in title will come a change in operation. This organization will combine the earlier efforts of the extinct International Relations Club and the Fred Hope Fund to increase Maryville's awareness of the world situation.

One function of the H. I. U. will be to help send members of the student body overseas in the hope that their return to Maryville will increase our understanding of world offairs from a personal standpoint. Under the auspices of the H.I.U., Jim Spotts will work at the Adura River Station in Ethiopia and Dinni Drake will help with the Crossroads program in Ethiopia this summer. Many opportunities for overseas study and work are being made available for interested, qualified students of Maryville College. There are a number of summer projects each year available through Miss Margaret Flory for college students who want experience in working overseas. Besides the opportunity to spend the junior year studying in some other country, there is the possibility that a combination of the 4-week interim period and the winter vacation will provide a chance for students to study in foreign institutions. As people have a chance to travel more extensively, there will follow a keener interest in foreign cultures, education, and thought.

Within the campus scene itself, there should be more recognition given to the number of students who represent other nations. Forums, chapel talks, dinners, and displays are being worked on to demonstrate to the student body the need for better international understanding. One project of the H. I. U. will be to provide aid for a Tibetan refugee school in the Himalayas where are gathered orphans and children of exiles from Communist China. Through this project, each person in Maryville (campus and community) will have a chance to express his or her concern, for it is entirely on individual contributions that H. I. U. projects depend.

A sublime religion inevitably generates a strong feeling of guilt. There is an unavoidable contrast between loftiness of profession and imperfection of practice. And, as one would expect, the feeling of guilt promotes hate and brazenness. Thus it seems that the more sublime the faith the more virulent the hatred it breeds.

Wind bathed,
Rain rinsed,
Sun dried,
They be woke,
Be ware.
Eye wheels begin to roll,
To watch face painted windows
Give glassy stares
At giant square-freckled legs
That never bare feet
In grass past growing.
Eye lash shadows wink
Their way over tombed toes, and
Up down legs,
To flutter at some lost lash,
To flirt with haunted shades
Shooting bull
On every street corner smile.
Necks of doorways ache
From holding weary walled minds
That throb from standing Still.
Nose knobs sniffle,
Snuffle out-doors
By turning closed
Boxed off jaws teething time.
Nowthen betweening madeupstuck lashes
Rain slips,
Making wrinkles of Tear washed gutter lines
Reaching out to mouthed street corner
Frowns, forgotten how to laugh.
And every shadow becomes a habit.

Blinks blush back
Bits of ci gard black,
'Til white new snow
Falls slightly,
Ever so lightly
On mouse-brown lashes
That scurry to "go-be-free" fields of grass
Now growing,
Take meltless flakes
Clinging to the eye
Of Never.

pared with 8,288 in 1966.

Peace Corps officials, however, claim these figures should not be interpreted as meaning the Corps is losing its appeal to students. "The decrease is attributable to the style of recruiting in the fall of 1966 compared to that in 1967," one official explained. "In late 1966, we put on a major recruiting drive which hit its peak in November. In 1967, however, we visited 25 per cent fewer schools in the fall. During the current academic year, we will have our major recruiting effort in the spring."

Since most Peace Corps volunteers come directly from the campus, the Corps' recruiting figures are based on the academic year. So far, applications this year are running about 4,000 behind last year. "But with our major recruiting drive still ahead of us, we expect to at least equal last year's figures," Vaughn said.

Despite efforts by Corps officials to convince the public that it is not losing its appeal, officials admit the Corps is more controversial on the campus today than at any other time in its history.

The main reason for this, Vaughn said, "is a feeling that we are an official part of the Establishment." One government official explained, "Before the United States became deeply involved in Vietnam, young people did not mind so much being associated with the government, but now they do."

However, Vaughn says the expanding group of student radicals who want to be completely disassociated with the government is not affecting the Peace Corps. "We don't in any sense, or never have, tried to tailor a message for the activist. Our message is more to the concerned, and the concerned can be of almost any political stripe," he said in an interview.

But Vaughn admits Peace Corps recruiting on campuses is more difficult now than it was several years ago. "Most campuses are boiling," he said. "There is more noise and more turmoil, which makes it much harder for us to get our message through." A few years ago it was easy for a recruiter to talk with students, he said. "But now there's a lot of rivalry, and it's harder to get that conversation for a half hour."

Although the Peace Corps is associated with the "Establishment," there have been no problems between recruiters and student radicals, Vaughn said. "Words have been exchanged on occasion, but nothing to consider a confrontation."

The major problem for Corps recruiters comes when a college or university gives them space in their placement office rather than a prominent open area on campus, such as in the Student Union Building, Vaughn said. "We don't seek respectability. All we seek is a chance to talk, and if nobody knows where you are, your exposure is so limited you don't have a chance to talk."

When Vaughn talks about the present status of the Peace Corps, he emphasizes that the total number of volunteers overseas—now about 15,000—is higher than ever before, and the Corps is expanding at the rate of about eight new countries a year.

Whether this expansion can continue or not, however, is uncertain. "In the past," Vaughn admits, "the only thing holding us back has been the lack of enough candidates to serve as volunteers." Since the Corps must appeal to young people who as a group are becoming more and more anti-government, this problem may be just beginning.

Dr. Ralph S. Collins, Chairman of the Department of Foreign Languages at Maryville College, has been appointed to the post of Chairman of the Auditing Committee of the South Atlantic Modern Language Association. This appointment was announced by SAMLA President, Professor John E. Keller of the University of Kentucky.

Enovid Takes The Worry Out Of Being Close

Abortion is a revolting word. One conjures images of a clandestine meeting in an upstairs room with some almost-doctor and dirty shades and (please dear God let them be) clean instruments and money given and . . . a murder. The "package" (child of love?) disposed of, several lives are prevented from being made . . . uncomfortable. There is, however, another kind of abortion performed half a world away. A sickly woman crudely aborts herself with a rusty pin and packs her wound in cow dung for magical healing. This is India where a baby is not an inconvenience but rather another share taken from an already insufficient food supply. A pregnancy means not adjustment but starvation. In India you see women coming to a hospital (a mission hospital—you ready Jesus?) to be cleaned out after a self-inflicted abortion and dying because it was too late, or because relatives refused to give blood, or simply because the will was not there.

Come back to America and not have a culture shock (maybe I'm too arrogant for that), but a culture discomfort. Perhaps an embarrassment. Not at our material riches while Indians starve. Rather at our common poverty of values. misuse abuse misuse abuse misuse abuse

But now our brother science has given us another gift for which we are philosophically not ready. Abortion is outdated. The leering killer is replaced by a scrubbed, fresh-from-college pharmacist. But what of us—and India. How ironic that both India and America are forced by technology into coming once more to grips with the same age-old, always-avoided problem. abuse misuse abuse misuse abus misuse will go away), do you think that is an educationally rational reaction?

If you didn't like chapel last week, why? Why did they read all that stuff anyway?

It could be that the student generation (and its friends), or a part of it (and look which part), is playing on different assumptions than did the one before. We may be apathetic about the things we are supposed to care about and quite active in areas some assumed boundaries do not include.

What to do? Talk. Now and honestly. Student government, or some of it, is ready if anybody is interested. So are very many others.

Anybody curious?

FINE ARTS REVIEW

Photography on Display

Forty-four photographs from the outstanding private collection of Mr. and Mrs. David H. McAlpin will be on view at Maryville College Fine Arts Center Gallery Thursday, February 1 through Wednesday, February 21, from 8:30 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. Daily Monday through Saturday. A circulation exhibition of The Museum of Modern Art, New York, selected by John Szarkowski, Director of the Museum's Department of Photography, it shows major works by four masters of American photography — Edward Weston, Charles Sheeler, Ansel Adams, and Brett Weston.

The McAlpin Collection, begun in the mid-1930s, is one of the significant private collections of photography. "Not only do the individual works in the collection reflect high critical standards," Mr. Szarkowski has said, "but the collection as a whole expresses a vigorous, personal perspective."

In his introduction to the exhibition, Mr. McAlpin writes: "Our collection is not intended to be comprehensive or representative, as a museum collection should be. Rather, it reflects our personal tastes and our identification with the concerns and aspirations of the artists whose work it represents. First among these shared concerns has been an interest in the unspoiled natural scene of this country's unique wilderness areas — which photography has done so much to record and interpret, and hopefully, preserve."

The photographs exhibited reflect this concern in Edward Weston's famed interpretations of the dunes at Oceano in California and in his photographs taken at Aspen Valley and White Sands, New Mexico; Ansel Adams' views of Old Faithful Geyser at Yellowstone National Park, Mt. Williamson in California, and clouds over the Sierra Nevada mountains; and Bret Weston's photographs of Nevada dunes, the Sierras, and Yosemite National Park. The subjects also include urban and rural architecture, and an homage to industrial forms in Charles Sheeler's Meta-Mold, Cedarburg, Wisconsin. Two were taken outside the United States, one being from Sheeler's 1929 series on Chartres Cathedral.

In 1933, Mr. McAlpin, who had long been interested in the graphic arts and photography, met Alfred Stieglitz, who since the beginning of this century had propounded the expressive possibilities unique to photography, and who had been a central and inspiring figure to artists and photographers. At that time, Steiglitz had for the most part retired from active photography and was devoting his time and energy to his third gallery, An American Place, at 509 Madison Avenue, New York.

In October of 1936, Stieglitz presented a one-man show of photographs by Ansel Adams; four prints from that exhibition formed the beginning of the McAlpin Collection.

In 1938 Mr. McAlpin began a friendship with Charles Sheeler. About the same time he also met Edward Weston and his son Brett, and began to collect many of their prints.

Mr. McAlpin's association with The Museum of Modern Art dates back to the same period, when he met Beaumont Newhall, then the Museum Librarian, whose greatest interest was in photography. In 1940 the Museum's Department of Photography was established, with Beaumont Newhall as Curator and David H. McAlpin as Trustee Chairman. Mr. McAlpin served on the Board of Trustees until 1948 and is currently a member of the Museum's Sub-Committee for Photography and the Museum Corporation.

Born in New York in 1897, Mr. McAlpin is a special partner in the brokerage firm of Clark, Dodge and Co., Inc., in Manhattan. He was graduated from Princeton University in 1920, and received a law degree from Harvard in 1924. He and Mrs. McAlpin make their home in Princeton, New Jersey.

The four photographers represented in the exhibition have been leading exponents of the "straight approach," in which the image seen through the camera is unchanged in transcription to pictorial form. Of Edward Weston (1886-1958), John Szarkowski has written: "Like Stieglitz, Edward Weston was a creative personality of remarkable and original force, and no man's follower. He believed that meaning was within the thing itself; his eye and intuition were the means of discovery, not its end. Blessed with an awareness of power not only within himself but within his subjects, his pictures were an enlargement of the external world, as well as a projection of his own spirit. The sensuous physical pleasure that Weston discovered in the landscape exists not only in his prints; it exists for us now in the landscape itself."

Charles Sheeler (1883-1965) is best-known as a painter. He took up photography first as a livelihood in 1912, and two years later discovered the beauty of indigenous American architecture, which was reflected with force and purity in both his painting and photography. Sheeler valued photography for the things it alone could accomplish, and once said: "Photography is nature seen from the eye outward, painting from the eye inward."

Ansel Adams, born in San Francisco in 1902, is described by Mr. Szarkowski: "In a time when the pattern of creative statement has favored the personal, the oblique, the esoteric, and the scarce, Adams' work has been epic, frontal, popular, and prolific . . . At its best — intense, extroverted, and heroic — Adams' is a major vision. In persuading a nation of park visitors that his seeing is their own, he has perhaps helped to teach his countrymen to revere what remains of their native landscape."

Brett Weston, born in Los Angeles in 1911, is the second son of Edward Weston. At the age of fifteen, shortly after taking up photography, he had his first exhibitions with his father, and later shared portrait studios with him. Both Westons stress essentials, not only in photography, but in a way of life. Of Brett Weston's early work Nancy Newhall said: "Already his intense love of blacks and whites is evident — black as space in which forms move, black as active force or repeating rhythm; white as pure continuous line, an accent like a chisel cut, or frost on darkness. Equally strong is his feeling for dynamics. Force and rhythm are as important to him as form . . . Content and mood are there too-the strange magic of the moment when fog advances towards the roofs and steeples over the dark islands and the gleaming bay."

Following the final concert in Tucker, Georgia, the choir will travel back to Maryville.

Some of the added pleasures and educational benefits in store for the touring choir will be a personal guided tour of Cape Kennedy, a swim in the Atlantic at Cocoa Beach, a trip through the Everglades, a beach party outside of St. Petersburg and a motorboat trip to privately owned islands from the inlet of Dunedin, Florida. Several high school programs are in the process of being arranged.

The full choir will give its home concert after returning, on Sunday, March 31, at 8:15 p.m. in the Chapel.

Men have lost their reason in nothing so much as their religion, wherein stones and clouts make martyrs; and, since the religion of one seems madness unto another, to afford an account or rational of old rites requires no rigid reader.

EUROPE ON $5 LESS A DAY

By Arthur Hoppe

The President flew around the world and then announced he was going to appeal to our patriotism to stay home this summer — perhaps, say the experts, by imposing a $5-a-day tax on Americans traveling abroad.

The tourist industry is wringing its leis. But the announcement has proved a boon to the guidebook business. Already in preparation, for example, is a new work entitled: "Europe on $5 Less a Day.' Excerpts follow.

How to Get There

Planning a trip to Europe this summer? Remember, getting there is half the fun. Particularly, if you don't get caught.

Several interesting routes will be offered to the tourist this year. The one that will undoubtedly prove the most popular is the C.E.C., or Canadian Escape Corridor.

This tour, which departs regularly on moonless nights, includes an exciting crossing of the Canadian border on snow shoes and thence, by Underground Railways, Ltd., to Free Quebec with overnight stops along the way in quaint old barns and haystacks.

There we board a luxurious Mongolian Airways Fokker biplane, which lands regularly on coded flashlight signal, for the thrilling hop across the Atlantic.

For the crossing, travel-wise tourists will want to go light. A wash-and-wear wet suit and a stay-Pressed parachute should prove adequate.

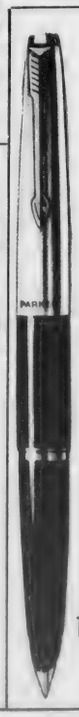
Some Do's & Don'ts

Once abroad, do avoid the tourist traps — these being any well-known hotel or restaurant where U.S. Treasury Agents will be waiting to trap unwary tourists.

Do try to make your trip more pleasant by memorizing a few phrases in a foreign tongue. For instance, you are bound to enjoy your trip more if, when being questioned by a T-man, you can respond, "What makes you think I'm an American, Mac?" in Hindi or Urdu.

Do take photographs of the sights you see as evidence for your scrapbook of where you've been. Don't for heaven's sake, though, get in the picture. Remember, that's evidence, too.

How to Get Home



To make a Great Circle tour of your trip you should consider taking a Czechoslovakian Airliner to Havana and thence by small fishing boat to Key West. Should you be stopped by the Coast Guard en route be prepared to say in Spanish: "Madre de Dios! How glorious it is to escape at last from Fidel's slave state to make a new home in the land of the free."

* * * * * *

So have an exciting, adventure-filled trip abroad this summer. And don't, above all, miss the great monuments of Europe that have so influenced our own culture. Be sure to see, for example, the Berlin Wall.

Your heart will go out to those poor victims imprisoned behind it whose inalienable right to travel has been abridged by their totalitarian government.

ATHLETIC SCHOLARSHIP ACTIVATED

The Lombe Scott Honaker Memorial Academic Scholarship Fund has been activated at Maryville College. The scholarship program is designated to encourage high school scholar-athletes to enroll at Maryville. Dr. Robert D. Proffitt, President of the Honaker Club, has presented a $2,500 check to the college representing the balance of the funds needed to activate the fund.

The Honaker Club was founded for the purpose of expressing in perpetual memory the true virtues epitomized in the life of Coach Honaker, leader of athletic teams at Maryville for more than 30 years. These virtues are sportsmanship, Christian living, athletic prowess when on the field, and gentlemanly conduct when off the field.

The fund has been established to support a permanent academic scholarship to be awarded athletes in keeping with the high academic standards set at the College. These scholarships are designated to bring outstanding students who are also athletes to the campus as part of the Maryville student body.

These academic scholarships may be granted to high school graduates who enroll at Maryville College, to transfer students, or to students already in the College, who participate in one or more sports in which Maryville engages in intercollegiate competition (football, basketball, track, baseball, wrestling, tennis, and other sports in which the College may compete in the future).

New freshmen must be admissable to Maryville College, meeting all admissions requirements including satisfactory qualities of character, purpose, personality, and health. In addition they must score at least 1050 on the combined tests of the College Entrance Examination Board, or have a composite score of at least 24 on the test of the American College Testing Program, and must have an average of not less than 2.6 on a 4.0 scale for the high school record in the subjects required and accepted for admission to Maryville College. Transfer students and those already enrolled must have a cumulative average of at least 2.6 on all college level work to date.

Each scholarship recipient will be recommended in writing to the Student Help Committee by the Director of Athletics. The Committee will review the recommendations, making awards from the list submitted and on the basis of the terms of this proposal.

Continuation of a scholarship will be dependent upon the maintenance by the recipient of a grade average of at least 2.6. The cumulative average will be figured at the end of each academic year for continuation the following year. In addition, the Athletic Director must continue to recommend the recipient.

If a scholarship recipient's cumulative average drops below 2.6 at the end of any academic year, he will be dropped from the scholarship list. On recommendation of the Athletic Director he may be reinstated at the end of the following year providing his cumulative average has been restored to at least 2.6, and funds are available.

Any recipient who is prevented from continuing in a sport through illness or injury shall be continued on scholarship as long as his grade average remains at 2.6 or above. Any recipient who voluntarily leaves membership on a squad loses his scholarship. Any other loss of scholarship privileges will be determined by the Student Help Committee after consultation with, and recommendation by, the Director of Athletics.

The second step in the Scholarship program is to continue to add to this permanent fund to a minimum of $100,000 allowing the College to increase the number of scholarships to be awarded. The Honaker Club members are encouraged to continue to build this Fund.

Annual interest earned on the $25,000 permanent fund may be matched by cash from the Honaker Club treasury to provide additional funds for the scholarship program. Interest accrued to date is $1,100. Thus, $2,200 can be made available for grants to qualified applicants for the 1968-69 school year if the Honaker Club chooses to match the entire amount.

This amount, plus the $5,000 the College has made available from its general scholarship fund, should enable the coaches to recruit good student-athletes who meet the required academic standards of the College.

Dr. Proffitt said, "This is a long awaited goal for supporters of the Honaker Club and Maryville College and I hope Honaker Club members and others will continue to designate gifts to the Honaker Memorial Academic Scholarship Fund. The success of the Honaker Club has been the result of the hard and generous contributions of many people and my personal thanks goes to all who have had a part in it."

He asked for continued support of this effort which should better the overall athletic program at Maryville College without the sacrifice of a sound academic emphasis that Coach Honaker lived and taught during his lifetime.

GR-R-REAT SCOTS!

With back-to-back wins on their home court, the Scots went up against Milligan College and stole the game, winning by a score of 85-78.

After a rough first half of fumbling, bad passing and too many missed shots, the Scots shaped up and recovered from Milligan's four-point half time lead. The Scots pulled ahead with the score 48-46 and maintained a wavering lead until the end. The second half was exciting. with the Scots scoring 57 of their points and playing excellent ball on both ends of the court. The team was really getting up there on the boards and grabbing the rebounds. The second half showed the fans what the team can look like and should look like.

The Scots play two games within one. The first half is hardly ever the same as the second. A weak first half, such as in the Milligan game, is usually followed by a strong second half, and vice versa. In order to have a winning team, however, it is necessary to play both halves with equal strength. The Scots have the potential to win. It is true in every sport that Maryville College sponsors. But our record of achievement does not show what it should, or what we would like it to show. Perhaps there is something lacking somewhere. Anyway, it is something to think about.

Last Saturday night the Scots' wrestlers came out of the Alumni Gym with their best win of the season. They beat Emory University of Georgia 37—3. The Scots came up with five pins all of which were in the first or second periods. Those men that got pins were Nye (127), Williams (130), Evaul (145), Burnett (167) and Dodez at 191.

There wasn't anything that Emory could do to tame the Scots; when they got tough the Scots got tougher. The Scots out moved Emory in every period, especially the first period where the Scots have improved tremendously in the abilities to take men down. In fact Emory's only win came on a lucky move with less than a minute left in the match of the 177 pounders.

It appears that the Scots' reputation as good wrestlers is beginning to spread because there were close to three-hundred people present at the meet.

Summer Jobs!!!

Latest information on 50,000 summer jobs throughout the United States and Canada has just been received by the Library.

The new 1968 "Summer Employment Directory" lists specific openings, salaries, dates of employment, names and addresses of employers and helps on making application. Employers invite applications from high school seniors, college students and teachers.

Outlook for 1968 summer jobs is cheerful! There are 12% more jobs last summer; salaries are $50 to $200 higher for the season.

Camp counselors and resort workers continue to be greatest in demand; students for camps of special children and adults are increasingly needed. Also, for the more unusual jobs, counselors are wanted for fly-tying, origami, judo and/or karate, fencing and puppetry.

College students are the most sought-after summer workers, followed closely by teachers; high school seniors are a definite third.

Information on summer job openings is obtained from extensive research conducted among many thousands of potential summer employers throughout the country. Included are camps, resorts, resort hotels, national parks, ranches, restaurants and summer theatres. Findings are compiled before December for each annual edition of the book.

ART MUDGE AND BEYOND

What does it mean to be educated? How effectively is Maryville educating it's students? We at Maryville may consider ourselves fortunate in having as part of our community those who possessed the insight necessary for the formulation of a remarkable new curriculum. Fine. What happens now? Do we allow ourselves to watch it degenerate into a bland program different only in form from what was present before it was initiated? We still have the option of making the education offered here unique in a world of ever-growing intellectual desolation. However, new curricula do not the institution make; we must ask some significant questions about what's going on around us here.

Education concerns not only subject matter; it also involves a critical evaluation of the process of education itself. What is to be taught? How is it to be learned? Will it be learned? Freedom? Experimentation? Where are we at this point?

We have all been in school at least twelve to fifteen years. Anyone care to do it over again? I didn't think so. Our first twelve years have been devoted to a process of slow, painful regurgitation. Will it be a repeated experience in a college setting or will it be negated by refreshing new methodology? Education does have a purpose. I think it is safe to assume that most of us are ignorant about a good many matters. So what? For one thing, do we treat ignorance with insulation (unnecessary requirements, attendance regulations, etc.) or do we educate? Do we allow persons just out of high school to start becoming original? Are they "ready" for such drastic measures and challenges?

How effective is the lecture method? Should educators have booted this system out years ago? Why hasn't someone screamed before this? Surely it bothers someone. Perhaps we haven't even learned how to scream unless we are told how to. Education is becoming an immense game wherein we play to obtain the prize of an impressive grade point average or a diploma. We are not affected, nor are we effective. Professors are evaluated (at least verbally) by the criteria of hard and easy, like and dislike, exciting or boring. That's about as valid as a padded bra. When do we quit studying just to get it out of the way? Life does not begin after school is over; at least it shouldn't. Too often time is spent trying to anticipate what will be on the next exam. If this becomes the most

MC Senior Receives Honorable Mention

Merry L. Burlingham, Maryville College senior from Deerfield Beach, Fla., has been named to the Honorable Mention list of the 1968-69 Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation.

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation has designated 1,124 college seniors at 309 colleges and universities in the United States and Canada as among the best future college teacher prospects on the continent.

Graduate deans are receiving a list of the designates' names with the recommendation that all are "worthy of financial support in graduate school."

This marks a change in the Foundation's program. In the last ten years, with funds from the Ford Foundation amounting to $52 million, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation was able to make direct grants to approximately 1,000 American and Canadian students annually to support their first year of graduate study.

"Now our major role is to identify for graduate departments those students who in our view have the best potential for college teaching," said Sir Hugh Taylor, president of the Foundation, in announcing the names of the Woodrow Wilson Designates. "This year's Designates are as distinguished and carefully selected a group as last year's Fellows. We hope all of them will receive assistance from the graduate schools or from federal or other fellowship programs."

Merry L. Burlingham

The Ford Foundation is continuing its support of the recruiting and selection procedures of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation through an annual grant of $1.2 million which also provides for 50 first-year graduate school Fellowships for Canadians and up to 200 Woodrow Wilson Dissertation Fellowships annually. Out of funds from other sources, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation expects to support 100 American students with direct grants as Woodrow Wilson Fellows, Sir Hugh explained.

Fifteen regional committees made up of members of the academic profession selected the 1,124 Woodrow Wilson Designates out of a total of 11,682 who had been nominated by their college professors.

The selection process involved several stages: 1. The initial nomination by a faculty member; 2. An invitation to the nominees to submit credentials, including college transcripts, letters of recommendation and a 1,000-word statement of their intellectual interest; 3. Committee reading of dossiers and selection of the strongest candidates in each group; 4. Interviews by the committees of the top candidates; 5. Selection by quota (based on the proportion of liberal arts degrees awarded by colleges in each region) of Woodrow Wilson Designates and those to be given Honorable Mention.

Woodrow Wilson Designates and the 980 Honorable Mention winners are now in the hands of graduate school deans and departmental chairman for fellowship consideration.

Text of Hersheys Draft Telegram

WASHINGTON (CPS) — Following is the text of Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey's telegram to all state draft directors:

"Under advice received today from the National Security Council with respect to occupational deferments, the lists of essential activities and critical occupations are suspended, leaving each local board with discretion to grant, in individual cases, occupational deferments based on a showing of essential community need.

"With respect to graduate school deferments, the National Security Council advises that it is not essential for the maintenance of the national health; safety, and interest to provide student deferments for graduate study in fields other than medicine, dentistry, and allied medical specialties; except that this recommendation does not affect existing regulations governing deferment for graduate students who entered their second or subsequent year of graduate study in the fall of 1967. It does affect students graduating from college this year, as well as those who entered the first year of graduate school last fall.

"The sequence of selection in filling calls will remain unchanged. A change in the order of call is not justified at this time. Fairness and equity to all men in the eligible age groups, as well as the interest of the Nation, require that this long standing practice be maintained."

PENTAGON COMMENTS ON UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

by Walter Grant

WASHINGTON (CPS) — Although opposition to secret research on university campuses has increased during the past six months, the Pentagon claims universities have not responded by backing down on their classified research agreements.

In fact, a Defense Department official said some college and university administrations have responded by writing the Pentagon expressing their willingness to take on secret research projects, or to increase the number they now have. These administrations apparently want to make their positions exceedingly clear in case some universities decide to drop their classified projects.

Dr. Arwin A. Dougal, assistant director of the Pentagon's office for research and engineering, would not say how many universities have expressed an interest in conducting secret research. He also declined to list specific schools which have written the Pentagon in this regard.

He did, however, indicate that the number of schools expressing a willingness to conduct secret research outweighs the number expressing concern over whether or not universities should engage in such projects.

Dougal conceded that some university administrations, recognizing the possibility that some schools may discontinue their secret Defense Department projects, are grabbing for the research dollar. "Some of them may be like good businessmen who are always trying to get more business," he said.

But Dougal says the "large majority" of the letters have shown the universities "have a sincere concern about the national security." These universities have indicated they realize that classified research, although possibly undesirable, is necessary for this nation's security, he said.

Dougal said he can sympathize with the opponents of secret research on university campuses. "But many aspects of Defense research simply have to be withheld from foreign knowledge, and the only way we can do that is to classify the project. We do not arbitrarily declare that a project has to be kept secret."

Defense Department research is conducted in four basic sectors: in-house Defense research laboratories; industries; Federal Research Contract Centers, and universities. "The university sector is one of the very strongest sectors," Dougal said.

Dougal also said many professors who have been involved in secret research projects attempt to retain their security clearances when their projects are completed. "Many attempt to get involved in conducting more classified research, and others want to serve as advisers laboratories," he explained.

In the past two months, there have been some indications that the government has been responding to the protests against classified research by easing its policies toward secrecy. Two specific events support this trend. They are:

—The Pentagon announced that it is "declassifying" some projects now underway at universities. But the announcement applies only to classified projects in the area of basic research, and most secret research falls under the category of applied research.

—The State Department announced that it has drawn up an anti-secrecy code designed to apply to all research in the behavioral and social sciences and Alternative?

The latest of the Vietcong offensives and the two-week-old order from Selective Service Director Lewis Hershey denying occupational and graduate school deferments have added greater intensity (and despair?) to the dilemma in which many of my peers find themselves. The United States is a land of freedom, we are told. (Right? Wrong?) Of course . . . freedom within a certain standard . . . freedom without the standard is nothing but anarchy. So, mostly we agree: we need standards and laws; and then, we hope, we have a system that does not stifle individuality, but rather, protects the individual from oppression by those who may think differently. Utopia, thus far.

Then, we are told, this freedom is so important (and wonderful) that each person must do something to add to it. In the past it has been important enough that people in our country have fought to defend it. Very true. The brave colonists sweat blood and tears in such defense. Then men realized that this freedom was so important that the message must be spread. So has it spread and so has it been challenged. And again, it must be defended. Quite logical. (Except for some people who wonder why freedom is not good enough that many of the South Vietnamese will not buy the idea, let alone defend it)

So we laymen ask questions . . . do we have no choice in the course which the government chooses? . . . which we as individuals choose? We may even ask again why this freedom cannot rally more support in Nam . . . and then . . . some prophets even wonder when India, with its starving people and aborting mothers, might be the hot spot . . . or the backward countries of Africa . . . or the already-hostile countries of South America. Do we continually fight, jumping from one hot spot to the next? . . . or . . . do people jump from their windows when they discover that the hot spots are all bubbling at once? So some of us feel: something must be done.

Doctors and dentists have some corny line about prevention rather than cure. Idealistic, yes, but machines installed by the state and tooth-brushing really do work. Even some other people think about prevention as applied to their ideas on freedom. The problem at this stage is that the doctors and dentists are the only people who can continue with their ideas of prevention. Suddenly, someone has decided for us that we worry only about the cure and to hell with the prevention. We suddenly realize that someone has told all of us free individuals how to think about this freedom. (Some cynical people might even line up the fighting vs. the preventative approach with the negative vs. positive approach.)

If Miss Sergio said anything to anyone who didn't turn off at her third inaccurate statement, she told me that if I think this freedom is so great, then I must demonstrate that it is great. She told me not to put myself on the defensive (or the negative). She told me to prove that this was a great thing by teaching and convincing with self-assurance. So much for the inspirational base of my opinion.

I have become psyched-up by my view of the role I can play. (With some characteristics of idealism and many of non-violence, I, for once, see what could be a very effective path ahead. I can help man be free—in India, Ethiopia, Pakistan, Uganda, Ecuador, or Tennessee. By this I can even make my rather secular view of Christianity come to life. I am happy . . . and there is a sense of fulfillment just on the other side of the street . . . or the world.

But suddenly, again, I realize that in the name of the freedom which I, as an individual, love, someone has told me that the only legal . . . and some say the only honorable . . . way to further the cause of that freedom is to tote a gun or in some other way aid the killing of the man I want to help. (Or are we only supposed to want to show freedom to those south of the DMZ?) My individual channel for aiding freedom is, even within the structure, limited as to alternative. My "alternative" becomes limited . . . to four branches of the service. The real alternative for those with my equipment for expressing the greatness of freedom has been undermined, in fact, by one concept of that freedom. The Peace Corps has undergone general stagnation under Mr. Johnson's general disinterest, and, in the future, (for some men at least) the Peace Corps will serve as the last chance to show real freedom to some uncivilized people . . . or perhaps . . . as the stop-gap between college and their induction into the service from their Peace Corps post. VISTA, as other internal programs in wartime, lacks the real financial support which it needs to run at maximum effeciency.

At any rate . . . 240,000 graduates, many losing their means of individually expressing the freedom they really do cherish, may have among their ranks those who, in the next four years, will wonder occasionally if 8th grade classes are still sending pencils and tablets to Caney Creek, Kentucky . . . or if there are any more Navaho Indians and their animals freezing to death this winter in the snow blizzards, with only the protection of their adobe huts . . . or if the Chileans are still angry because Mr. Johnson did not attend the funeral of their president, while he traveled to Australia for the funeral of the president of that country . . . or was he just en route to Vietnam?

Do not look back. And do not dream about the future, either. It will neither give you back the past, nor satisfy your other day-dreams. Your duty, your reward—your destiny—are here and now.

This is enjoyable.

There is music in me, the music of a peasant people.

I wander through the levee, picking my banjo and singing My songs of the cabin and the field. At the Last Chance Saloon I am as welcome as the violets in March; there is always food and drink for me there, and the dimes of those who love honest music. Behind the railroad tracks the little children clap their hands and love me as they love Kris Kringle.

But I fear that I am a failure. Last night a woman called me a troubadour. What is a troubadour?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Sir:

". . . a time for war, and a time for peace."

Several weeks ago an editorial entitled "What You Don't Know About the Draft Law . . . Could Kill You!!!" was placed in this paper. Even though the author made a valid attempt to create no misunderstanding, I feel that a misinterpretation can be made.

Yes . . . it is well to know your draft law. It is good for some of us to know that it can save "our young bods" from the jungle. It is good for others of us to know that we can serve our nation . . . that because we are in college does not mean we don't want to serve our nation.

"A nation under God . . ." No, I'm not being an outdated fundamental conservative when I say these words. There was a time when men in this country believed (more so than many of us) in this. Today, in our troubled America and world, we look for the answer to this war and others. We seem to forget that this is a nation under God. Have our demonstrations, our opinions, our debates given us the answer? Who will give the answers? What prophet will judge America? Who will deliver us from these times? And what about these times?

It is this last question that we have to consider, for there is a time for everything:

time to be born . . . , to die . . . , to plant . . . , to pluck what is planted . . . , to kill . . . , to heal . . . , to break down . . . , to build up . . . , to weep . . . ,

Dr. Martin Luther King's proposed nation wide demonstration centering on Washington, D. C. this summer could very well be a turning point in American history. The reaction of our government to King's demonstration of civil disobedience will be an indication of the policy that the present administration intends to follow. Just what is this and what will it mean to us?

It appears that there are only two political reactions. If Dr. King ties up Washington traffic and business as he intends to do, he could be arrested or shot in a following riot or he may be asked to talk with the promise of honest non-political action before any trouble results. If he is arrested or shot, there will be the militant reaction so often promised by various civil rights groups. The government's reaction to this would have to be militant, with street fighting (yes in American streets . . . Sounds like civil war?) and more arrests and imprisonments. The other reaction would be civil action. More than $57.00 dollars a year will be spent per underdeveloped person in this rich country of ours. Streets will be cleaned up and jobs will be created for those fellow Americans without a job. What is the reaction that is the most American? Which would we all rather see? Is there any question involved?

Here is where the real problem is situated. This is an election year. This fact puts Washington in an even more unique situation. The proverbial game of politics is being played by those seeking re-election to public office. Because of this, political futures are being guarded much as a mother bear guards her young: very well.

The Dilemma that is to be faced this summer is therefore in a very touchy situation. The future of our country will be at stake, here at home. But the nervous politician also sees his political future at stake. His reaction to the impending showdown may make some of his potential voters angry and anger towards a politican implies no vote—a thing politicians have bad dreams about, no matter how much money they have.

The people that we elected to run our country's government have some very important decisions to make before Dr. King's demonstration. Some questions are going to have to be asked. The country's future is at stake and some political futures are at stake. Which of the two are more important? Then ask yourself about your senators and congressmen. Which comes first in their minds? How do you support him and if you do, or don't, let him know. Our future as a great nation is hanging in the balance. I hope our leaders have the right amount of American guts.

Connoisseur of Finer Foods,

Is your stomach ailing you? Are you eating less and enjoying it less; or are you eating more and enjoying it less? If this is the situation then stand up and be counted. Any suggestions, criticism, or praises you have for our present dining hall situation should be submitted to Fred Callies, Box 2800. We are anxiously awaiting your letters of reply as there seems to be a great deal being said about the food at Maryville. This is your opportunity to speak out, and help us in solving our dilemma. In essence we are saying, "Speak up or eat up!"

The road to self-knowledge does not pass through faith. But only through the self-knowledge we gain by pursuing the fleeting light in the depth of our being do we reach the point where we can grasp what faith is. How many have been driven into outer darkness by empty talk about faith as something to be rationally comprehended, something "true."

to laugh . . . , to mourn . . . , to dance . . . , to cast away stones . . . , to gather stones together . . . ; to embrace . . . , to refrain from embracing . . . , to seek . . . , to lose . . . , to keep . . . , to cast away . . . , to rend . . . , to sew . . . , to keep silent . . . , to speak . . . , to love . . . , to hate . . . ; a time for war and a time for peace.

So, what times are these? Certainly yesterday was the time to speak, but what time is it today?

If today is the time for peace, let it be a time of healing, loving, building, planting . . . If this is what time it is, then listen, America. Lay down your arms. You . . . in the foxhole . . . put your rifle down — embrace "Charlie."

If today is the time for war (which it seems to be), let it be a time of hate, destruction, death, tears. Let today be a time of silence. You have heard them (and yourselves) speak on this war . . . and in vain. No one man is right . . . or wrong.

You . . . and I must realize and accept the fact that today is a time for war. America and "Charlie" must use their powers to the fullest. Yes, our friends and brothers will die; but eventually this war will end so that tomorrow can come.

And tomorrow will be another time . . . it will be a time for peace. It will come only when the war (today) is finished. Oh . . . for you who despise today, remember that without war there would be no peace. After all, what is peace but a measure of war?

People of Maryville . . . America . . . let it be known to you that we men at Maryville College came not to learn the draft law! Many of us realize that this is the time of war. Yes—we have lost many friends and our brothers are threatened. Let it be known that we are here because we want to do something for tomorrow's time. This we will do unless it be destined that our work be done today.

Dear Sir:

I never dreamed that people wrote letters to people who wrote letters to the editor. I have, however, received several communications of various nature from Presbyterian Life readers in re the burst of concern which I registered in the columns of that august publication about the Viet Nam and general political situations. You asked me about one particular epistle which I received, and you expressed an interest in publishing said letter. After considerable thought, I have concluded that it would not be a breach of ethics to allow you to publish this letter from a gentleman in Colorado. He has asked that I pass along certain assurances to the student body; I can find no fairer way than to pass along to you his words which show a genuine concern for the student generation. After the usual amenities, the writer proceeds to the issue at hand:

"I used to feel about war as many conscientious objectors do tho I was willing to serve my country and did in the Korean occupation forces. I used to think that war was bad and that fighting it could not be justified. But I have supreme assurance now that fighting against aggressors is according to God's will for I have received much guidance from the Lord directly on this matter.

God speaks of hell fire and damnation and this is surely the lot of the North Vietnamese government and its people.

With the assurance I have from God I can assure you we are in a just cause and any soldier fighting in this war would be in a high state of grace and if he should die while fighting this dirty war he would receive a high reward in heaven provided he did not engage in fornication as some soldiers do.

I wish I could give you the assurance I have from God but you would just have to accept on Faith that this is justice we are engaged in Viet Nam. I hope this will releave your students as this is the right cause.

Sincerely yours,"

I have passed on the gentleman's assurances to you of the student body as the writer wished. I am sure, that the readers of this letter will see not only its idiosyncrasies but also its genuine concern and conviction. It may be that the author's restriction on "heavenly reward" may seriously curtail the Army's program of "R and R."

Sincerely,
David R. Cartlidge

Dear Mr. Editor:

I happened to be in Atlanta February 22 at the same time four of our MC students were attending a Southern Regional meeting of NSA. (Doug Gamble, Doug Price, Dan Quarles, and Gary Meyer). As it also happened, they knew of my presence there and graciously invited me to attend an evening session which was billed to be a panel discussion on "What's Wrong with Higher Education?" However, it turned out to be a gigantic and delightful bull-session among two hundred or so students on problems such as drinking rules, grades, in loco Deus, student freedom, student consciousness, unimaginative faculty, out-of-touch administrators, and apathetic students.

Although there is much that can be said as to the content of the student's comments, my purpose for writing this letter is to say that troubled though the waters of Maryville College may seem at times, the impression that I gain from meetings such as this one is that, believe it or not, Maryville College is 10 steps ahead of most everyone else—particularly in the South. It is my opinion that one of our greatest assets at the moment is that we have the kind of responsible and capable leadership in the student council and student body to put us even another 100 steps ahead. It seems to me that Maryville has a unique opportunity to really let the students develop the kind of atmosphere in learning and living that would be the envy of the South—if not the nation.

I found myself in agreement with much of what was said down in Atlanta, but all of it has been said here long ago and in a more responsible way. Perhaps it is time for the faculty and administration to be truly cognizant of the fact that the students are what makes the college go round. They hold the keys to learning; all the faculty can do is teach—and that's not equivalent to learning. I still believe that we have a fantastic opportunity to develop our own "bag" of higher education. But just whose "bag" is it? Not the faculty's. Not Anderson Hall's. It's yours, baby —you—the faceless student in the row. What are you going to do with it? And when are those of us in the power structure going to give you your chance to blow up your own bag? For my money I say—Go ahead—blow it up—the worst that can happen is that it will pop (the bag, that is).

Come on, faculty and administration, let's give these people their bags back. They're not ours, and it's high time we quit trying to blow them up for them.

Sincerely,
David P. Young

FAVORITE SON CANDIDATE

"With President Johnson and Richard Nixon both slipping in the polls, the emergence of a fresh, new candidate was not unexpected.

"The revelation came in a Nation-wide poll asking voters the routine question: 'If Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon are the nominees of their parties, which candidate would get your vote?'

"In reply, 7.2 per cent said Johnson, 6.8 per cent said Nixon and 61.4 per cent said Jesus Christ. The remainder was split among lesser-known candidates.

"The surprising showing of a candidate whose influence had so far not been felt in American politics created a sensation.

"Support was strong in the Bible Belt. Doves were enthusiastic over what they believed would be The Candidate's position on Vietnam. And indeed, no political figure voiced anything but unqualified approval in public.

"Both major parties vied with each other in saying how much they had long admired The Candidate and espoused The Candidate's principles. Spokesmen for each expressed confidence The Candidate would accept a draft to head their ticket.

"Initially, then, the nation looked forward to a landslide. But a few cracks began to appear in this consensus.

On Shoes A Diversionary Essay

Many and various are the types of shoes; and the type is established according to the use; and with its use, each kind of shoe acquires its peculiar personality.

The least obs'rusive of all is the sneaker, which some people call the tennis shoe and thereby we perceive its original use to have been for playing tennis. Other people call it a tenni-pump. But from its most commeon name, the sneaker, we understand its stealthiness of character as it sneaks along in order for its wearer to remain unnoticed and possibly to surprise a friend or foe.

Whereas the sneaker is a hard-working shoe in its effort to be silent, the loafer is a lazy sort. Its services are most usually employed by students who prefer its unrestraining nature over the disciplining effect of tie shoes. The loafer has no individualized appearance, for its shape is basically flat with its tongue hanging out, and its color is commonly black or varying shades of brown. It leads a dull, monotonous life, but has only its slovenly, shuffling, blustering character to blame.

A further step toward freedom is seen in the slipper, which in itself has many varieties: the toeless, the heeless, the sideless, the whole slipper. The particular use of this footwear is to aid and comfort tired feet or to protect dainty, delicate, feet. Its derived uses, however, are numerous, some of which are: to force the wearer to descent to the floor, or to act as a palpable substance for a teething baby or dog.

The sandal is even more liberating for two reason. One, it has less coverage; and two, it is an outdoor shoe. In ancient societies the sandal was everyday footgear for all classes of people. Today, the rough, home-made-looking sandal is associated with rich beachcombers, hippies, and students in the spring and summer (they wear loafers in the fall and winter). But today all types of sandals are worn for comfort.

A final classification of shoes is the boot: snow boot, hiking boot, combat boot, whatever. In contrast to the previous types, the boot is confining, for its use is primarily for the protection of the foot in strenuous conditions. It has a forceful, brutal, vengeful character for it sometimes hurts the feet it protects and often boots innocent people or personal enemies. This characteristic is best described in the following words to a song:

These boots were made for walking; and that's just what they do.
One of these days these boots are gonna walk all over you.

And that's what all shoes may do. But each will do so in its own manner and attitude, for shoes are particular, as are people.

DISCOUNTS FOR ATHLETES

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (CPS) — Charges that University of Michigan athletes have been given discounts, and even some gifts, by Ann Arbor businessmen are being investigated by the Big Ten here.

John D. Dewey, assistant commissioner of the Big Ten, is questioning athletes, coaches and the businessmen involved to find out if Big Ten or National Collegiate Athletic Association rules have been violated.

Dewey's investigation began after the Michigan Daily, in a copyrighted story, reported that Ann Arbor clothing stores, along with a restaurant and a movie theater, had given athletes discounts.

In a story two days later the Daily reported that Michigan State University athletes were getting benefits like those given to Michigan athletes. Dewey has said he will go to M.S.U. to investigate the situation there after finishing his probe in Ann Arbor.

In its M.S.U. report the Daily said that, in addition to discounts, athletes there were allowed to charge long-distance phone calls to the number of one of the football coaches and were given "grill passes" for use at campus snack bars. It also reported that Duffy Daugherty, head football coach at M.S.U., had paid for a trip to the school by the parents of a football prospect. Under Big Ten rules it is illegal for member schools to pay for such trips.

After hearing about the Daily's report, Daughterty first said he might sue for libel. Since then, however, he has not indicated whether or not he intends to go ahead with the suit.

Daugherty and other coaches at the two schools could be subject to discipline by the Big Ten if the investigation shows the discounts and other benefits were used to help recruiting. Howard Cohen, who wrote one of the Daily stories, said several athletes told him that they were informed of the discounts during recruitment.

"The Candidate's known views on money lending caused shudders on Wall Street and the Dow-Jones averaged plummeted 30 points. In general, the Eastern Establishment was cool, murmuring discreet remarks about 'working class background" and "radical social views.'

"Hate literature, such as 'The Cross and the Flag,' published exposes of The Candidate's ethnic background, causing more than one expert to worry in print, 'Is the Country Ready for a Jewish President?'

"Negro militants denounced the doctrine of 'turn the other cheek' as 'just another Honkey trap.' And Conservatives, while praising The Candidate's record of feeding the multitudes, noted that this tended to sap the individual initiative and the multitudes ought to feed themselves.

"Liberals talked uneasily about 'separation of Church and State' and the Churches, as usual, couldn't agree on anything.

"As quickly as the boom had soared, just as quickly did it fizzle out. Overnight the issue was dead. Everyone agreed that The Candidate, while praiseworthy and all that, simply wasn't electable.

"Many expert reasons were given, but a hard-headed politician, who had carefully studied The Candidate's record and voter appeal, went to the heart of the matter.

" 'Basically, it was the image,' he said. 'Beard, robes, a lot of talk about love—how would it come across on tee-vee? People aren't ready for stuff like that.

" 'These days,' he said, shaking his head, 'a candidate like that would get crucified'."

ORANGEBURG "RIOT"

ORANGEBURG, S. C. (CPS) — Evidence indicates that black students were unarmed when police opened fire on them here February 8.

Police claimed they were responding to sniper fire when they opened up on a group of students assembled at the entrance to South Carolina State College. But no police were shot, no weapons confiscated from the students, and no one has reported seeing any students with guns at any time that evening.

The police continue to insist, however, that the shooting was justified because the police and National Guardsmen believed themselves to be threatened.

Evidence also continues to indicate that 16 of the 28 students killed or wounded were shot in the back, including two of those who were killed. Investigation of the injuries by a Los Angeles Times Reporter also showed that many of the wounded students were lying flat or crawling on the ground when shot. Two were shot through the soles of their feet.

OPERATIONS CROSSROADS

The aim of Operations Crossroads Africa is to unite young people in a bond of international, interracial, and inter-religious friendships. Dr. James H. Robinson, founder and director of OCA has stated:

"Crossroads is neither a tourist joy-ride nor a safari. It is a project for far-sighted young men and women of stout hearts, receptive but tough minds, willing hands, and humble but loving spirits who are not afraid of taking risks and are willing to live and work with people at the village level under severely limited environmental conditions. No others should apply."

Crossroaders work in groups of ten to twelve with African villagers on necessary projects. The main aim is to "build bridges of friendship" and understanding between different cultures.

Since many more apply than can be accepted, each applicant must go through a lengthy and thorough screening process. This summer Dinni-lynn Drake will serve in Ethiopia. Dinni-lynn is a junior religion major. After graduation she plans to attend seminary and enter the field of Christian ministry.

As a Crossroader Dinni-lynn is required to raise $1,125 plus miscellaneous expenses. This amount will be raised through her student help job, her home church, and Maryville's Hope for International Understanding.

Through the experiences and involvements of students in programs such as Crossroads, international understanding can become a reality.

basic question of the course being taken, then it is time to go home.

There are elements within this society of ours who are hoping all over the place that the product of the baby boom will have something to say to this messed up world we live in. Someone has to start telling truths, someone has to begin preventing unnecessary wars, someone has to make society truly great. All this takes people with a certain amount of intestinal fortitude and a pronounced ability to use intellectual capacity. Our generation has been dragged kicking and screaming into this rather strategic position. Often they are armed with 19th century educational preparation to deal with problems requiring 21st century thought.

Are we proceeding on the right course? Do we spend too much time with formality; do we link formality with education to the point of synonymity? What is being graded at Maryville, commas or content? Do examinations measure a student's real capability or do they represent a feed back of remarks made by a professor who has prejudged too strictly the phases of a given subject which will be held to be important. Look around you, perhaps something in this article is relevant to your particular situation. Special studies? A certain psychology class? Being lulled to sleep by the overstatement of the obvious? Let me know or contact the academics committee. See you in chapel.

STUDENT PRIMARY APRIL 24

If an inhabitant of an educational institution can successfully exist in oblivion to his surroundings, local, national, and international, that institution is failing.

The historical university is the critic of society. It must be an agent of enlightened change. It cannot afford to accept the status quo unless it is acceptable.

It cannot call itself effective if it does not develop conscious awareness of the basic mistakes of society.

And if a student in a college in 1968 can be complacent about the results of the recent past, that college is not preparing itself to be an agent of improvement.

The American Negroes just might burn this country down. And why shouldn't they? What has white, middle-class USA ever really done for "them" anyway? Anything which asked for sacrifice? Just wait 'till the Indians realize what we did to them.

Will the WASP pay the price to repair and prevent the further destruction (decay?) of the American dream? And I don't mean retaining the National Guard. Probably not.

And the draft? And the war? Let's hear from senior men without deferments. (Have you ever heard Hershey?)

So what's this got to do with student government? I'd suggest that the most basic thing involved in all this is individual human rights and responsibilities.

There are a great many people on this campus, in addition to the notorious "power elite," who feel a frustration with the limitations of religious-social mores inflicted by an obviously decaying social order upon young people who are not yet too indoctrinated by the social establishment to be insensitive to the possibilities for people.

Collective respect for individual people is basic to religious and Constitutional theory. Some of the student generation is sick and tired of being molded (in some areas) into being a replacement cog for the present social machine, while they are at the same time being stimulated by new curricula into thinking within a framework designed to promote improvement, not replenishing, of the sleeping American middle class.

Maybe we are fools to think that we can change the world, but somebody damn well better try. Now!

A plea to the community. Let's use these new committees as a vehicle for improvement. Prac-

New York — The nation's students have determined the final ballot and referendum issues of their first nationwide collegiate presidential primary, called CHOICE 68.

Meeting in Washington, D. C. from February 10—13, the program's student directors selected a slate of fourteen candidates for the presidency. They are: Fred Halstead, Mark Hatfield, Lyndon Johnson, Robert Kennedy, Martin Luther King, John Lindsay, Eugene McCarthy, Richard Nixon, Charles Percy, George Romney, Ronald Reagan, Nelson Rockefeller, Harold Stassen, and George Wallace.

The students also decided that three referendum questions be included on the ballot. Two deal with the country's current involvement in Viet Nam, and one with the priorities of government spending in confronting the "urban crisis." Mr. Richard Scammon, Director of the Elections Research Center, and Dr. Howard Penniman of the Political Science Department at Georgetown University assisted the Board in their efforts to ensure that the various questions were properly phrased towards achieving maximum clarity.

In addition, the Board resolved several administrative questions, such as voter qualification. It was decided that any student currently enrolled in an American college or university will be eligible to vote in the CHOICE 68 election. This include graduate, part-time, and foreign students, as well as those studying abroad in American branch universities.

The Board announced their decisions at a national news conference held on February 13 which was covered extensively by the major television networks and press wire services.

This primary election will be held on April 24. Students are particularly urged to organize campaigns, whereby the students will be able to procure the literature of the various candidates.

State-Wide Congress To Be Held

Students everywhere have common interests, and communication among them is to their mutual benefit. To date, there has been no unification among students of Tennessee colleges and universities. A possible remedy is a state-wide organization of college students concerned about the issues that affect their personal lives and the communities they live in. To investigate this possibility, a Congress for a Tennessee Student Union will be held at the Presbyterian-Methodist Campus Center, 1112 19th Ave., S., Nashville, Tennessee, on March 16th and 17th.

This Congress will consist of workshops and discussion groups which examine particular topics and report on them to the total membership so that a plan for organization may be formulated. Some of the issues the Congress might consider are: THE STUDENT AND THE UNIVERSITY (curriculum reform, individual freedom in non-academic life, organizing free universities, improving classroom instruction, the place of the military and other outside agencies on the campus); THE POLITICAL ROLE OF THE STUDENT (increasing student influence in existing political party organizations, and state, local, and federal governments, participation in the 1968 election campaign, voter registration); STUDENT ROLES IN SOCIAL ACTION (community organization, improving race relations, police reform); STUDENTS' RELATIONSHIP TO WAR AND THE DRAFT (organizing open forums and disseminating information on the Vietnam war, examing legal issues relative to the war, the draft, and conscientious objection).

The issues and direction of the Congress will be determined by the participants. If you are interested in attending the Congress contact Box 2653 for registration information.

Student Strike Planned

Chicago (CPS) — More than 900 student activities from the United States and Latin America have called for a world-wide student strike "against the war in Vietnam and racism."

The students announced plans for the strike during a conference here sponsored by the Student Mobilization Committee, a New York-based organization which helped plan large-scale demonstrations in New York and California last April 15 and the massive demonstration at the Pentagon last Oct. 21.

The strike will be held Friday, April 26, in the midst of 10 days of concentrated anti-war activity scheduled from April 20 to April 30. The 10-day period coincides with the "Ten Days to Shake the Empire" program announced at a national meeting of Students for a Democratic Society last December.

The black caucus at the conference called its strike against "imperialism, racism, and the draft."

The majority of students attending the conference strongly supported the strike, but there still was some opposition. The opposition centered largely around charges that the Student Mobilization Committee is a "manipulative, elitist organization without a broad-based constituency." Some students also charged that the call for a world-wide strike is a bad tactic because it does not stem from nor does it contribute to building the grass roots anti-war movement.

Chris Hobson, a member of the SDS chapter at the University of Chicago, said the strike "would isolate rather than build the anti-war movement in that staying out of classes for a day 'against the war' is far removed from the everyday lives and decisions of the average student."

Hobson encouraged the students at the conference to "concentrate on local issues showing how they are tied into the war and into the society we live in, and in this way build the consciousness of the movement. We don't need elite-sponsored gimmicks that can so easily fail."

However, Renaldo Moute, a Latin American student, said students in the United States must strike "to demonstrate to the peoples of Latin America, Asia, and Africa that there are those in America who still have a conscience and who oppose the imperialist and racist policies perpetrated by the United States government all over the world."

A motion to call off the strike and to dissolve the Student Mobilization Committee was roundly defeated.

Conference leaders indicated that local organizers should concentrate on local issues during the 10 days of activities in April, but that April 26 should be primarily a day to strike against the war.

The Student Mobilization Committee plans to distribute a general sheet of issues around which local organizers can center their discussions. Some of the issues suggested were demanding an end to U.S. imperialism; self-determination for all the people of the world; an end to campus complicity with the war effort, and an end to the system of conscription.

Attorney Arthur Kinoy, who spoke at the conference, warned the students against "allowing the government to put us on the defensive." He added, "Our tactics of meeting repression head-on are hurting them (members of the Johnson Administration), and they are scared, badly scared."

FRESHMAN GRANTS OFFERED

The establishment of a program of Leadership Tuition Grants that will be offered to outstanding freshmen upon enrollment at Maryville College next fall, was announced by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, College President.

Under the new program, tuition grants varying in amounts from $100 to half-tuition of $500 will be offered to high school graduates who have made an outstanding contribution to their high school or who have demonstrated exceptional leadership qualities in such fields as student government, debate, publications, athletics, and other high school activities.

"Consideration for the award of a Leadership Grant will be contingent upon the achievement of an above-average grade point average during the student's high school career," William F. Taylor, Jr., College Admissions Director, said. Mr. Taylor stated that in addition, a minimum combined Verbal plus Math test score of 1000 on the Scholastic Aptitude Tests of the College Entrance Examination Board, or a Composite score of 22 on the tests of the American College Testing Program will be required. Applicants will also be required to submit a statement from their high school principal attesting to the contribution he or she made to their high school and the quality of leadership exhibited by the applicant.

Leadership grants will be available in succeeding years to the initial recipients who achieve a 2.0 grade point average for their freshman year at the college, and a 2.2 grade average at the end of their sophomore and junior years; and, continue to show evidence of leadership development through special programs they are participating in at Maryville College.

EDITORIAL

The Presidential primaries are fast approaching. How are we to decide who will make an effective leader? Stop and think; what do you expect in a person who professes himself to be the man for the job? Or are you going to make your choice on the basis of everyone else's decision?

To me, a leader is a man with

1. the ability to perceive the feelings of his followers;
2. foresight; a vision for the future;
3. optimism, rather than pessimism;
4. high ideals, but yet with a realistic outlook;
5. the ability to realize he may be wrong;
6. geniality; the ability to work with his peers and others;
7. the fortitude to withstand harsh criticism;
8. a mind open to criticism and new possibilities;
9. a personality which generates respect and admiration;
10. ideals representative of all the people;
11. a manner of conducting himself which induces his followers to work toward a common goal;
12. honesty.

This picture, of course is incomplete and idealistic, but it is important for a voter to know what he is looking for in a leader before he actually has to vote. In a few months we will be electing campus leaders for next year. Consider the positions to be filled, the duties of each, and the person(s) you think most capable to fill them. Then, if you think this person is qualified and sincerely has the interest of the campus in mind, urge him to consider being a candidate. You may give an able person the confidence he needs to be a leader.

Throughout the recent series of February meetings, students raised questions concerning their roles in the church. All of the speakers stressed the necessity of involvement and the need for suffering love or creative compassion. As Dr. Smathers said, "Only those who know compassion can know the suffering God in a world which has forgotten Him." The speakers encouraged us to get into real life—politics and churches. They suggested that, even if we don't agree with what people are doing, we should try to understand their motives.

In spite of our persistent pessimism as to what is being done and what can be done, these speakers were optimstic. They agreed that the older generation has made a mess of things and that it's up to us to straighten out the existing situations—whether it means getting into politics or getting involved in church work. They are confident that we have the resources, that the church is moving, that we can make the necessary changes. We have been urged to stay with the church, get interested in a political party. "Don't withdraw." "Stay in and hammer." "Shake 'em but don't alienate 'em." "Hold your courage."

With attitudes like these, how can we remain isolated and pessimistic? When we say the church doesn't listen, are we right? Have we really given ourselves a chance to be accepted? Maybe it is too late, but we can't give up now. We've got to try to be heard and give ourselves a chance to be accepted before we withdraw.

Isn't it time to stop asking the same questons over and over? We've gotten hopeful attitudes from nine different people. Now let's do something and see if their optimism is justified.

I don't think that most people attempt to defend their emotions as the writer of this. Encina was a Spanish poet during the Spanish Renaissance. He must have been a priest or monk for how could anyone else have defended themselves so well in those days? His desire seems to be mind without emotion . . . an interesting combination.

My Freedom in Tranquility

My freedom in tranquility,
My heart without care

To their walls and fortress
Amours have laid siege.
Reason and sense and prudence,
Which I had at my command,
Made a deal with them;
They have cheated me badly!

And faith, who was the warden,
Has handed them the keys.
They (amours) fought with their eyes,
And the others gladly surrendered.

DEATH HAS PILED UP

He knows death to the bone—
Man has created death.

Death having piled up like old rags,
Life is no longer duds for jest.
It is too much, life has worn too thin
For the droll mind's embroidery.
Man no more expecting the best,
Merely begs on corners for enough,
Enough love to keep him on his feet
Until he can walk his crooked way
Bare-footed straight up to death
And throw himself upon the heap,
Not wanting to be merely swept up;
Enough hope to make death final
And life a bearable piece of cloth,
Ragged but capable of repair.
When man lives, he must now dress up,
Man wears life like a spotted vest,
Something patched-up to be put on
For imposing occasions.
Pocketless in him muted leisure,
Not knowing where to put his hands,
Man has accumulated death.
(In memory of a child who has not died, but who won't live, to whom I could not send a Card, Get well soon.)

GAZINGI'S STIRRING.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

On behalf of the entire student body, I would like to make public certain policies of the administration toward incoming freshmen. The third term is rapidly drawing near, and, as is common for relatively new programs, the Resident Assistants to the freshmen are being asked to evaluate the system. Evaluation is a valid and intregal part of any program, and I hope such evaluations will be made conscientiously. But does the student body know that the R.A.s are also being asked to evaluate their freshmen???

Let me show you a sample of the questions found on two forms being considered for this personal evaluation.

"Does he attend Class? Artist Series? Concerts? Plays? Sports activities? Chapel?

"Is he able to adjust to his roommate? The Dorm Supervisor? Other men in his unit? His R.A. (and remember, an objective evaluation)?

"Does he keep his room neat? Is he well-groomed? Does he date?

"How is his emotional stability? Family relations? Reaction to stress? Use of unscheduled time? Use of social skills? (This set of questions to be answered either "Excellent, Good, Average, Fair, or Poor.")

"Has he any discipline problems concerned with Noise? Dishonesty? Drinking? Cars? Other? (To be answered "None, Other, Twice, or Often")

I do not see how anyone can convince me that it is anyone's business whether a student attends school-sponsored functions. Does the administration want to judge the success of the various programs by finding out who attends? I think they would be better off checking how many attend. Is it the administration's business to know personal and emotional information concerning students? R.A.s are not qualified to answer these questions The administration would be better off instituting full-time counselling service to handle problems beyond the reach of R.A.s. Does the administration think it has an "inside" source for discovering who is breaking the rules? I seriously doubt that many offenders will be unearthed by these questions. A more realistic approach would be to re-examine the rules and make certain they are consistant with today's standards. This is an institution of learning, not a controlled study of group behavior.

In case the danger of such evaluation is not immediately clear, let me explain a little. Keep in mind that A.A.s do not pretend to be sociologists (although such would be needed to answer some of the above questions), and they were not specifically told that they would be required to evaluate people when they assumed their responsibilities. Keep in mind also that the freshmen are not, presumably, aware that such an evaluation is being made.

Now, where is this little bundle of "facts" going to be used? Obviously, it should only be placed in the hands of qualified persons with training in sociology and social psychology—such personal information would not be safe elsewhere. Is this the case, when it will be kept in the permanent files of the deans; not to be disclosed to anyone, but to be "interpreted" at such times as will be seen useful by them?

Let, me illustrate. Suppose, through some act of immaturity or indiscretion on the part of a freshman, or conscious or unconscious prejudice on the part of his R.A., permanent record is made that he drinks, misuses his free time, and shuns campus activity. Perhaps he is also unable to adjust to his roommate and his Dorm Supervisor, according to the evaluation.

Three years later, having matured, found companions more suitable to his personality, and settled into a routine, purposeful, college life, he would like a job. His prospective employer asks a few questions at the dean's office (logically enough), and is told enough to make him realize this cannot be the person he needs—his employees must be sober, conscientious, and well-adjusted.

Or perhaps a junior is brought before the judicial board for some minor offense. Certainly, information from these evaluations would be brought forth at this time. Would this information aid in the arrival of an impartial and just judgement by the board? I doubt it.

I could list many more ways in which material from an evaluation of this sort could be misused, but I don't think it is necessary. Except for a student's transcript, (which any student may see, upon requests and which is used only at the student's request), this evaluation is the only concise, concrete body of information about a student. It is not kept up to date, as a transcript is; it is not obtained by objective means, as a transcript is, and it does not pertain to the student's academic achievement, as the transcript does. It is against the private rights of the students which it evaluates. This is information which is not the administration's business; gathered by R.A.s who are largely unwilling and entirely unqualified; to be used by deans at times unspecified and for reasons unjustifiable; without the knowledge and consent of the individuals concerned.

Tom Marston

Last week a few of us saw Robert Penn Warren in the Alumni Gym at UT. We also had the privilege of watching students shuffle in their seats, laugh, talk, smoke, and walk in and out. This plus poor acoustics provided for a frustrating evening. Wasted? Well, yes and no. Perhaps now we'll buy a copy of Warren's poems so we'll know what he said. But more than that, perhaps we'll appreciate the respect which Maryville students customarily show their speakers—even if we are sometimes forced to give a standing ovation!

VIETNAM DILEMMA: An Aritcle of Opinion

The aspect of dilemma over the U.S. role in South Vietnam was raised in a recent editorial. I wish, therefore, to express my views of some of the points raised. I am responding primarily in the hope that my views will encourage others to look more deeply into not only the Vietnam conflict, but more importantly the policies and operating assumptions of decision-making which have determined our presence there.

First, I would like to respond to the statement that the U.S. is beinging stability to South Vietnam and the implication that this is not only a justification for our presence, but also a primary cause rather than a secondary result of our South East Asian policy.

Realistically it cannot be denied that military power in a country does create a form of stability. However, it is quite superficial and transient because it must rely on force of arms for its continuance. It is evident to me (and must be understood in the context of the repeated statements by the U.S. that she is in S. Vietnam to bring stability and freedom for them) that a militarily induced and perpetuated stability lacks any real significance when a lasting and self-supporting national stability is the end desired. Unity; a common sense of commitment to generally accepted ideals and standards; justice; and equitable administration of power, regulated by a respected national political force are the more significant and absolutely necessary characteristics of a non-militarily controlled stable nation. Unfortunately none of these factors exist in S. Vietnam today. It is practically impossible to build a stable nation in the chaos of civil war which, by its nature, allows stability only through the force of arms.

The idea that the building of East-West roads is a manifestation of the "stability" given to S. Vietnam by the U.S. presence strikes me as somewhat shallow and reflecting a desire to justify. If we consider this road-building as a manifestation of stability must we not also assume that it was largely the product of S. Vietnamese will and planning based on their needs and not on ours? I think investigation will prove that this work was begun by the French and greatly advanced by the U.S. as its military involvement increased. It must seem clear that East-West roads and communication facilities are essential for military maneuvers and other strategic purposes. Therefore, in the context of our presence and needs there, other uses are quite secondary. Thus it is no mistake that the largest employer of labor in South Vietnam is an American (civilian) construction company. We can be assured that its primary task is not the building of housing for bombed-out S. Vietnamese.

However, I must agree that S. Vietnam may reap benefits from our efforts there, but we are kidding ourselves, or playing up to our usual idealism, if we believe we are building roads, deepening ports and constructing loading sites primarily for the good of the current S. Vietnamese industry and economy. For ultimately the question must be: who will control and reap the largest profits from these projects in the event peace comes to an independent and not totally communist S. Vietnam.

I also find it difficult to see real value in the statement that "South Vietnam has slowly built herself (note the word herself) up from a land with no capitol city, no industry, no unity and no nationalism to a nation with a government, and some national consciousness." What does it say? Surely it is not to be believed that S. Vietnam did all these things by herself? However, this statement brings to light another question: why didn't S. Vietnam have any of these characteristics of a nation? It must be understood that S. Vietnam never was, and still is not, a sovereign nation, and therefore, would not have any of these aspects as singularly S. Vietnamese. Yes, there now exists a little S. Vietnamese nationalism, but there exists a great deal more Vietnamese nationalism. Yes, there is a government in S. Vietnam and a capitol, but these were created and supported by the French and later by the United States. Is it not significant that the rise and fall of successive regimes in S. Vietnam since 1947 has been solely dependent on French and then American strength and will? That the governments have been comprised of generally unpopular and unknown men says something, perhaps a great deal, about their ability to gain power without foreign support.

The Geneva Agreements of 1954 make it quite clear that the demarcation line between North and South Vietnam at the 17th parallel was "provisional and should not in any way be interpreted as constituting a political or territorial boundary." That the separation has become "fact" for our policy must speak for our intentions: our desire and determination to have a government favorable and to a great degree influenced by the U.S. But even so, to return to my opening concern, why is the U.S. having such difficulty in stabilizing and controlling S. Vietnam — a country which supposedly intensely dislikes communism? Primarily the difficulty lies in our inability to recognize the unique nature of Vietnamese Communism and the history of Vietnamese nationalism (some would equate the two.).

Vietnam is almost entirely unique in the success of the Communists in South East Asia. The Communist party in Vietnam has maintained a nationalistic image for all Vietnamese. It alone has been the only cohesive political force in either of the Vietnams. Surely this fact must raise the question why?

Vietnam is the only country in the world which has won its freedom from colonial rule through Communist leadership. Vietnam is not basically a question of communism versus capitalism or democracy (regardless of what the State Department says); it is, for the average Vietnamese, one of Communism versus feudalism. Furthermore, the whole question revolves around the important issue of nationalism. It should be of little surprise that the S. Vietnamese are beginning to hate us as deeply as pre-1954 Vietnamese hated the French. It is rapidly coming to the point where we are killing and destroying more in S. Vietnam than the Viet Cong.

It is in the rejection of these realities of the Vietnam situation that the U.S. has caused, in part, its now failure. A major reason for the success of the Viet Cong has been the total absence of a popular cohesive alternative nationalist movement in the South—not aid from the North. The present leaders of S. Vietnam do not represent this alternative nationalist force; they are military men who are interested primarily in maintaining their own power in deference to the will of the Vietnamese people. Their constant rejection of the Buddhist influence, which is considerable, to bring stability and to initiate negotiations in an attempt to end the conflict is the most damaging evidence of their intentions. Again in this matter the U.S. has seemingly misunderstood the true significance and influence of the Buddhist community in Vietnam. Otherwise, it seems to me, we would have prevented the recent imprisonment of Buddhist leaders and the growing suppression of Buddhist activity by the Thieu government.

Nonetheless, Senator Fulbright in his book The Arrogance of Power, clearly states the important aspect of the Vietnamese conflict—an aspect we have been unwilling to accept or to admit as having any validity: "both the success of the Communists in S. Vietnam and their failure in Inda, Burma, Malaya, Indonesia, and the Philippines strongly suggest the wars for national liberation depend for their success more on the weakness of the regime under attack," which in the final analysis rests with the people, "than on the strength of support from outside."

Thus, in determining whether what the U.S. is doing in the result of its own needs, or the result of solely S. Vietnamese needs, a dichotomy will clearly and continually display itself. Because it exists, we must see the true priority system under which the U.S. is operating. The fact that what we do may overlap with what the Vietnamese wish to have done has no significance, for it has no influence on the determination of our actions. Therefore, we all must make an effort to understand more clearly the politics of the situation. Such an understanding should show that much of what we do in Vietnam is often a secondary result of our presence rather than a primary cause for our presence.

As the dichotomy between our stated reasons and purposes and our actions increases, we all must be aware of the implications such statements and actions raise for our future policy if we continue to operate on the same assuptions and continue to pursue the same line of reasoning in determing our policy.

I suggest: The Arrogance of Power by J. W. Fulbright

Dear Editor:

This letter is written in response to an editorial of February 9, 1968 entitled "Dilemma." It is an attempt to examine some proposed reasons as to why the U.S. is in Vietnam—some reasons that are not those presented by our State Department. It is also an outgrowth of Mr. Reynolds' letter in that it supplements his examination of the Vietnam conflict in light of what I think are our motives for waging this war.

Most Americans think we are fighting to preserve freedom and the South Vietnamese from Communist agression. Carl Oglesby in Containment and Change proposes that cold war anti-communism is an ideological coverup for our free world imperialism and that the American people have been tricked into believing that this war is a battle against the forces of world Communism. Oglesby's thesis is that the U.S. desperately needs foreign markets for her surplus and that "it has become critical to us that our foreign markets should not be disturbed." Our foreign policy is aimed at insuring the availability of fertile frontiers for American business. In essence, Oglesby says that we are making the world safe for corporate big-business, and not for democracy. As a result, our soldiers follow our corporations and merchants and vice-versa.

There are others who seem to agree with Oglesby; among them is Brig. General Hugh B. Hester who wrote on May 8, 1967, "The Vietnam War is not a war of self-defense or even of general self-interest. It is a war in the profit interests of only a very few."

In 1950 when the U.S. gave its first allocation of $150 million to the French for the Indo-China War, it was given on the basis of the domino theory (if Vietnam falls to the Communists then all of Southeast Asia will fall like a row of dominoes). By 1954 we were giving 1.33 billion for the war. We have essentially taken the place of the French in Vietnam.

In July, 1955 Ngo Dinh Diem refused to hold the elections promised at the Geneva Conference. The U.S. answered Diem's plea for help when it became evident that he needed assistance because of internal divisions and hostilities. We gave money and administrative and military advisors to short up Diem's government. Even after Diem's regime fell the South Vietnamese government and the U.S. refused the National Liberation Front's offer for a coalition government, elections, and neutralization of Vietnam. From 1962 to 1967 U.S. ground forces in Vietnam increased from 10,000 to 460,000. By 1965 we

Constitution in Preparation

In striving to create a more vital form of campus government, a committee of Student Council has been engaged in the process of inquiry and evaluation since the beginning of last year. This committee, chaired by Shep Spear, has analyzed the existing student constitution in an attempt to assimilate new ideas and recommend needed changes. It has worked under the concept of the constitution as a general superstructure upon which new rules may be erected and also removed.

The committee's findings have been assembled in a twenty-six page draft which is now being revised and contains the following conclusions:

(1) That there be five representatives from each class, instead of the present system of four freshman and sophomore delegates, and five junior and senior representatives;
(2) That the new constitution contain no statement concerning the governing of Student-Faculty Senate since this body is independent of Student Council;
(3) That student body officers be able to come from both the junior and senior classes;
(4) That the offices of secretary and treasurer be separate though still appointed; and
(5) That the constitution itself be reduced to a smaller and more permanent document with the by-laws being enlarged to encompass needed changes.

Other suggestions are still under consideration. The committee hopes that the new constitution will be lasting and worthwhile, since a great amount of flexibility can be utilized with the by-laws.

The progress of the committee, however, has been stunted by the ambiguous nature of the college power structure. It cannot be exactly determined what functions the Student Council, Student-Faculty Senate, and Executive Council share and in what areas they differ. A statement may be drafted urging that a new committee formed of students, faculty, administration, and directors be organized to investigate jurisdiction of the governing bodies. Hopefully, this effort might culminate in an evaluation of the Maryville College Charter and by-laws which have long been in need of re-examination. For instance, the Charter provides that there be a president of the faculty. No such person exists at this time.

The Board of Directors has taken a decided step forward with the recent statement of purpose. This statement has left room to open some doors and perhaps close others; it should, however, stimulate thought in any event.

With a spirit of cooperative venture on the parts of students, faculty, and administration, it is entirely feasible that the new constitution could be in operation by the first part of next year.

tical improvement based upon the theory of individual worth. We as a college can and must act what we believe. We can finish the construction of a truly unique institution. One to which the best students, in a basic sense of student, are drawn, and from which the best citizens, in the very basic sense of the term, are graduated.

Read the statement of purpose. And help force the actual state of things into ressembling its very excellent theory.

Go talk to committee members, deans, and presidents. Write letters. Draft petitions and statements of theory. Let the instrument of change know that things in general are not yet perfect. Now is the time to do something other than complain to yourself.

And if you don't trust the "glory hunting" "Power elite," do it yourself. (and please point out the glory so it can at least be enjoyed) Don't throw away your individuality unless you don't think you are important, even if only to yourself.

See you in chapel.

had assumed the major load of the offensive fighting.

It seems evident that the U.S. made a big mistake in entering Vietnam. Two questions remain: Will we admit our mistake and take appropriate action to withdraw our military might from this small Asian country? and Will we again try to stabilize, establish, and insure our foreign investments and foreign markets in other areas of the world? Will Latin America be our next Vietnam as we try to overcome social revolutionary movements who oppose the status quo regimes whom we support because they are favorable to the U.S.?

We ask, "Who is at fault?" The fault lies with us—you and me—because we have not had the guts to speak out against this war and because we have been so damned nonchalant about the election of officials and the course that our country is taking. Perhaps it is too late to do anything now. It doesn't bother us when troops are sent to Vietnam or when the National Guard is sent into Newark, Cambridge, Watts, or Detroit. Will it bother us when the National Guard is standing on the streets in our own neighborhoods? How would we feel if our country were teeming with thousands of foreign or even domestic troops? We may have fashioned our own noose when we convicted Nazi officers at the Nurembourg trials because they did not refuse to carry out the demands of their Fascist leaders. We held them personally accountable for the deaths of millions of Jews. We may be held personally accountable for the deaths of thousands of Vietnamese and our own soldiers.

I find quite frightening the acceptance of the theory that war will always be with us and that war is inevitable. We live in a time when war is not inevitable. If this is a time for war then it will probably be the last time for war. World War IV will be fought with sticks and stones. We are balanced on tons of nuclear bombs, weapons, and stockpiles of destructive power, capable of blowing us to bits. (Just watch "The War Game" if you don't believe me). We must give up war, if for no other reason than self-preservation. We must bring peace to the world or annihilate the human race. The burden of responsibility lies with us. Oglesby writes that we are alone with ourselves. "It belongs to Americans to claim again and try to reshape their country. Only the American people can do that. Only the people should."

June Rostan

P.S. I recommend for your reading Containment and Change by Oglesby and Shaull and for your viewing, "The War Game."

Debate Team in Tournament

The Maryville College Debate Team with points and points garnered in individual events, placed third in a three-way tie for total points scored with 26 competing colleges and universities in the Mint Julep Invitational Tournament at Memphis (Tenn.) State University.

Ray Phillippi, Pittsburgh, Pa. junior, topped individual honors for Maryville winning second place in extemperaneous speaking. There were 41 contestants in this event.

Jon Lutz, Atlanta, Ga. sophomore, won third place in oral interpretation, competing with 32 contestants.

Maryville College had three out of six finalists competing for total individual honors in oral interpretation. They were Steve Horning, Indianapolis, Ind. sophomore, Ray Phillippi, and Jon Lutz.

The Maryville College Debate Team is scheduled to compete next in the Sixth Province Pi Kappa Delta Tournament at Norfolk, Va., March 7, 8, and 9. This tournament will comprise 20 schools from Tennesee, North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida.

PEACE CORPS

NEW YORK — Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn said today that Volunteers serve no one "establishment," but 57 separate overseas host country establishments where the agency operates.

"Rather than consider the Peace Corps as an instrument of foreign policy," Vaughn said in a speech at Columbia University, "I think it is more correct to say that it is an instrument of domestic policy in 57 nations."

The 13,000 Volunteers overseas, he said, represent no policy except that which they were invited to serve — no establishment except the 57 which invited them.

He said that Volunteers still tend to dismiss in their minds the idea of the Peace Corps as an institution, or as a government agency.

"They appear to bypass the structure and identify with the spirit — a logical American outlet through which they 'become the very best that is within them to become'," Vaughn said. "I believe that this aspiration is the model for successive non-bureaucracies of the future."

He noted that the same spirited people who hardly acknowledge the Peace Corps as government — who could not care less for Washington or The Establishment.

Vaughn cited an example of a response to a host country request, saying the agency will step-up its family planning activities in population-mushrooming India this year.

The Peace Corps chief said Volunteer nurses will assist in training Indian nurses in both pre-insertion and follow-up care as part of the inter-uterine device program currently underway in India's Punjab state.

This represents a break from previous Peace Corps involvement in birth control programs which have been confined to the promotional and educational aspects of various state projects.

As before, Volunteers will not be directly involved in sterilization or abortion procedures.

At the same time, Vaughn said the 1,000 Volunteers now serving in India have been given that country's family planning literature. The government has asked Volunteers to promote the family planning symbol now being publicized throughout the nation, he said.

Stanford, Calif. (CPS) — A group of 20 medical students at Stanford University Medical School have refused to sign their final exams in a community health course because they felt the course hadn't dealt with "relevant problems of community health."

The students, who have been given incompletes in the course, objected to its emphasis on the study of epidemics rather than on the problems of drug addiction, smoking, and alcoholism.

The 20 took the action after all but seven of the 67 students in the course had written to the chairman of the Department of Preventive Medicine complaining about its content.

NYE S. E. C. CHAMP

The Maryville Scots wrestled this past weekend in the Southeastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association Tournament. The Scots wrestled such schools as Troy State University. Georgia Tech, University of Georgia and Emory University. There were eleven schools competing, trying to defeat Auburn University which had won the SEC title 21 times. Maryville had three men that actually placed. Ray Nye at 123, took first, Ralph Johnson at 137 took 2nd, and Lynn Dody at 191 got third.

One of the most exciting matches of the tournament was the 123 pound class championship. Nye wrestled Del Alley from Auburn who had defeated Ray in an earlier match 9 to 4. Ray was able to score 2 points the first period by taking Alley down and went on to win it by a score of 2 to 0. Ray Nye as a Freshmen had won the S.E.C.! Our team went wild, the crowd watching the match cheered loudly, and even Coach J.D. who usually remains calm, ran out on the mat and slung him over his shoulder and carried him of the mat.

Other M.C. grapplers such as Harry Burnett and Rob Nicholas were seeded poorly and thus were knocked out of competition after the second match. Harry wrestled one of the high seeded men in his first match and defeated him, but in the match he hurt his shoulder again and then had to withdraw from competition. Nich beat a Milligan wrestler 3 to 1 in his first match but lost to the eventual champ in his second match in a closely contested match.

The only dark spot during the tournament was the University of Tennessee which was discovered to be wrestling graduate students and so unable to compete.

The Tournament itself had the best wrestling in its 22 year history with Auburn retaing the title. Next year the tournament will be held at Auburn.

CHOICE '68: ELECTION CONCERN NOW

The events of the next three weeks will determine whether or not Maryville College will choose to attempt to become what so many people have been trying to get her to become for some time now.

The investigating committees will report their recommendations sometime this month. If they do not do their job well, Maryville will have to wait to join the "very attractive" list.

The committees have got to be shown that most of the community has opinions. Now! The decisions, of course, will be made in light of the most good for the college as an institution.

The things wrong are damaging to the college's long-range plans. We have got to have students who can do the work of the new academia, and we cannot possibly attract them unless we make some changes. We have got to have cars. It is not in this age possible or desirable to confine students to a geographical area the size of a long walk.

Neither is there merit in protection for its own sake. When such is a long range plus to the educational process, it may be defended, but such is seldom the case with people of college age.

The key must be educational, not traditional. Indoctrination in religious and moral areas is indeed dangerous as a basis for establishing behavioral standards. We must show that we feel capable of regulating our own time and energy. And if it turns out that we are not, then we might ought to be somewhere else.

The discussion in the committees has been quite open. Every current practice is under careful scrutiny. And we have got to offer improvements or live with the status quo.

If there are things you do not think are good for MC, whether or not you are involved, it will be appreciated if you will speak up.

Student Council is going to have people ready to help direct your comments. There are also going to be some surveys.

If we do not use THIS situation (whether or not we like its genesis) in a sane and orderly manner to demonstrate a concern for MC's structure, we will be without another chance in the near future. It would be rather a lost cause anyway.

So find out what committee, with what people on it, wants

One of the more amusing side effects, depending on your sense of humor, of the impressive showings in the New Hampshire primary has been the rather adulatory reaction of the national press to the Senator's corps of energetic and intense "ballot children." Originally written off as somewhat pathetic idealists, student armys earned their abundant laurels by helping engineer the first stunning upset of the 1968 preisdential campaign. As a result, the well-scrubbed, respectable, and quietly effective "Student Volunteer" suddenly became the darling of the press.

Youth Back in the Fold, gushed endless editorials, Democratic Process Works! Nihilism of the New Left Refuted! Generation Gap Bridged!

This endless journalistic game of lumping all students into one vast and grotesquely misleading generalization thus continues. The archetypal collegian, it now appears, is no longer the student leftist with his picket sign and smouldering draft card. The "average" college student right now, today, is the "concerned" college student — the student whose faith in democracy is slowly but surely being reaffirmed through electoral triumph and lots of hard, determined work.

The idealistic gleam of such a student portrait will go far, no doubt, towards re-establishing middle class America's faith in its gold plated youth. But the "Student Volunteers," like the radical agitators, are but fringe elements of the college community and hardly representative of the American student body as a whole, whose reputation for indifference and apathy is not without substance.

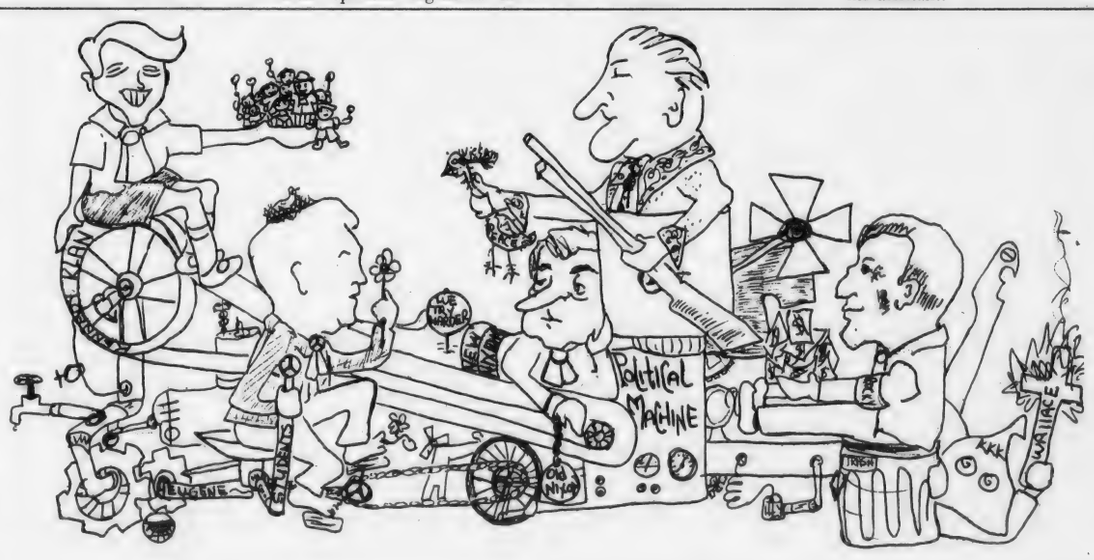
As President Adran Doran of Morehouse State College in Kentucky stated, "These activists say that the rest of the students are apathetic and don't care. They're not. They're satisfied with the way things are. Why should they protest? There's nothing to protest about."

CHOICE 68, the National Collegiate Presidential Primary, is functioning with a somewhat more spirited preconception in mind — that, in fact, student moderates do care and do want their opinions registered in a responsible, effective manner.

The election itself will determine whether CHOICE 68's image of the "average" student is accurate. For in order to attain national visibility, CHOICE 68 must attract at least two million voters on April 24. Such a goal will be attained only if enough moderates choose to exert themselves to the degree of casting their votes.

CHOICE 68 will fail if they do not. The liberal and conservative activists may board the headlines, but the long silent student moderates have the numbers — and it is only by the raw power of size that a skeptical public and an overly antagonistic Congress will pay attention to the reality of student power.

It's one thing, of course, tc boycott an election through principle and it's quite another to miss one through ignorance or apathy. If the moderates do fail to participate, especially in this, the most challenging of election years, then they will indeed have earned the taunt of Henry IV "Go hang yourself, brave Crillon; we fought at Arques and you were not there."



Swenson Prepares Zuurdeeg's Book

Dr. Esther C. Swenson, Associate Professor of Philosophy, Religion and Sociology at Maryville College, has prepared the unfinished manuscript for publication of Dr. William F. Zuurdeeg's posthumous book, Man Before Chaos, (Philosophy is Born in a Cry).

This book was published this month by Abingdon Press of Nashville, Tenn., as a College Selection. Copies may be ordered at the College Bookstore on the Maryville campus or purchased at the Christian Book Nook in Midland Center.

Dr. Zuurdeeg was Associate Professor of Philosophy and Religion at McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill., at the time of his death.

Dr. Swenson had worked closely with Dr. Zuurdeeg, first as his student, later as his colleague and his assistant.

CHOICE at Kearney

The familiar cry of "Let's Get Out of Vietnam" doesn't win cheers at Kearney State College in Kearney, Nebraska. (Enrollment: 4500).

A poll of 183 students showed that over 71% favored conventional military escalation, including increased bombing of North Vietnam. Only one percent, however, felt the use of nuclear weapons in the conflict to be necessary.

The poll, taken by the CHOICE 68 student committee at Kearney State, also indicated heavy support for former Vice-President Richard Nixon. Robert F. Kennedy finished a strong second.

President Johnson announced Sunday night on nationwide television and radio that he would not seek the Democratic party nomination for President of the United States. The reason he gave for this decision was to avoid politicial strife within and between parties at such a crucial time as now. The President also declared steps that he is taking with regard to the Vietnam war: de-esculation of the bombing in ninety percent of the North Vietnam area, excluding the area directly above the Demilitarized Zone; an additional thirteen thousand troops for August of this year; increased funds for armaments; and strong efforts for negotiations under the rules of the Geneva Convention.

Echo Elections Soon

Elections for the 1968-69 Highland Echo editor-in-chief will take place during the last week of April. The election is held among the present members of the Echo staff. While the complete staff will be arranged this spring, the only elected position is that of editor. The other positions are filled by appointment of the new editor.

Anyone who is interested in working on any phase of the newspaper, however, should talk with a member of the present staff so the new editor will have some core for selecting an editing staff. It is suggested that those interested in any area of the paper talk with the corresponding person on this year's staff. The present staff is anxious to be of help to anyone interested. Those who are considering the position of editor should contact John Braymer. Those seeking this position will be given the opportunity of working closely with all phases of one issue of the Echo before the election. Nominations for the position of editor must be presented in writing to the present editor by April 17.

EDITORIAL

Death of a Bigotry?

The race for the presidential nomination of the Democratic Party is now down to two people. The bomb-shell dropped by President Johnson has hit squarely and after the shock has worn off (can it ever?), it appears that now the campaign will have more importance. The tone set by the President and the two candidates for the nomination is that of peace so now the voters have to decide what they really want and who can really do it. It appears that the Republican nomination is secure for Nixon, and the excitement and vitality is in the Democratic campaign.

Truly this is an interesting political year, and one of the most interesting aspects of the campaign is in the religion of the two outspoken candidates for the Democratic nomination. I think that it is not only gratifying, but hopeful, that few make an issue that Eugene McCarthy is a Roman Catholic and that we forget or don't have to know that Robert Kennedy is one. It was only eight years ago that President John F. Kennedy was running for office, and that it was an important campaign issue in regard to his religion. It no longer is a campaign issue.

Could it be that one form of American bigotry has been eradicated because of the fine work of the great public servants of many religions? I don't suppose that it would have been very long ago that it would have been impossible to see people in a small protestant college student body and faculty in eastern Tennessee wearing campaign buttons for a Catholic running for President. Slowly (but ever so slowly) it may be possible that America is beginning to practice voting habits without regard to race, color, creed, or national origin. Well, at least creed, in part. Mustn't move to fast, you know.

Badinage for the Wounds

It was just four years ago that Miss Malaprop charmed me into coming to Maryville—and I have an indelible memory of the interview. It began with a question about the nature of the college . . .

"Like a lot of liberal arse colleges," she said, "MC has religious affiliations—but it's not really supported by the Presbyterian Church. You see, the stated purpose of the college is to witness to the Supreme Arthur of the Universe. Gee, our favorite hymn ends with 'How great thou, Art'."

"I see," I said. "Then does that affiliation pretty much establish the type of atmosphere at the college?"

"Well, of course, there are reflections. We have conglomerary chapel several times a week, and the curriculum includes both Old and New Sentiment courses—but I certainly can't say that all the students are Bibulous. In fact—"

"UH, ahem, I, uh, think I get the picture about that pretty well. Say, I've also been wondering about the projected new curriculum—can you tell me anything about it, especially the freshman philosophy course, the one that's designed to, well, to make the student lay bare his basic values?"

"Oh!—You mean Man's Shirt for Meaning? Yes, it's one of the enervations in the new curriculum. I really don't know too much about it but I could probably give you som—"

"That's all right—you'd probably rather tell me something of the extra-curricular activities on campus, like—"

"Like the farcity sports?"

"Well, other types of social activity were more what I had in mind."

"Sure," she said, "I understand. Well, for one thing, we usually have a number of more or less informal dances—Alpha Stigma or somebody will bring a recorder over to the gym and host a kind of a, well, you know, a stereo-type dance."

"Um hmmmm. I was curious, too, about the student government. Have they—"

"Yes yes! It's come about in a kind of ship-slod manner, but the students are gaining a larger noise in the power stricture of the college. But, frankly speaking, in the past few years the student leaders have had a number of problems to cope with. Leadership in all levels, though, is changing the whole spurt of the college."

"Oh—one more thing. If you have a big appetite, can you get enough to eat there?"

"I naturally can't speak for the fellows, but after supper in the parlors some of the girls are simply ravished. But then the Student Sinner is always available for—"

"Nevermind." I said. "I can imagine."

Maryville College students have spoken out! Is it the spring? Kinda funny, kinda true, very real, that's what it is. Are you listening out there?

Life at M.C.—Just Thinking Doesn't Count . . .
one brick edifice;
two library-out pulsating pipes;
three garish gluttonous administrative experts!
four fledgeling freshmen fumbling frantically to forestall alienation and the "fragmentation of life;"*
five cups of cream cuisine in a deplorable state of disrepair;
six chuckling chaplains dispensing irrational and irrelevant benisions;
seven million bilious broblingnagian vibrations emerging from the depths of concentrated turmoil within one pupil focal point;
eight sickly salivating seniors attended by a beriberi Rickety angel of mercy scurvying hither and thither; nine illogical, irrepressible, institutionalized maxims, contrived to extinguish "the pursuit of truth in concept and in life;"*
ten thousand languid lovers littering the lawn lasciviously, and indulging in "full and free exploration."*

Editoral

This campus community is a microcosm. The disillusionment, despair, and lack of trust that has been aimed out our national government has also been evident at Maryville; and apparently at most colleges in our country and even in the rest of the nations. But disillusionment has not only been shown toward college administrations, but also toward student body leaders.

I am thinking particularly of last spring's campus elections. Not many students were interested and concerned enough to establish their candidacy or to encourage other students to run. Maryville College is moving forward by the actions of all of its leaders. But it needs the support of the entire campus as may be shown by a person's running for an office or by his asking a capable person to do so.

My suggestion is this: that those students considering a leadership position on campus—such as Student Body President or UCCF President—make their decision soon and openly declare their candidacy by a statement of position so that the campus knows whom to consider and on what basis. Afterall, elections for student leaders are early in May, just one month from now.

Special Program for Junior Men

THE NATIONAL LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY has a Business Orientation Program for qualified Junior men. This 12-week summer program provides a practical test of a student's ability to succeed in the insurance field. It has helped many Junior men to discover their abilities and to choose a challenging, rewarding, and meaningful career after they graduate a year later. Their chief interest is to employ ambitious young men, not as career salesmen, but who can and will develop rapidly into responsible positions in line management. A representative of National Life will be on campus to discuss this program on Tuesday, April 9, from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. He will be in the first floor Anderson Hall Conference Room. If you would like to make a definite appointment ahead of time, you may do so through the Office of the Dean of Students. There is also some additional information about this program in that office. For the summer program there is a guaranteed salary of $75 per week. With commissions, the average last year was $127 per week; a few made as high as $178 a week.

Alpha Gamma Sigma Convocation

Maryville College's Alpha Gamma Sigma, Honor Scholarship Society, held its annual Public Honors Day Recognition Ceremony at Convocation, Wednesday morning, April 3, in Wilson Chapel.

Ten college seniors with grade averages of 3.33 or better were accepted into the society. They are: Merry L. Burlingham, English major, from Deerfield Beach, Fla.; Trudy K. Cochran, history major, Maryville, Tenn.; Marie E. Johnson, mathematics major, Jacksonville, Fla.; Douglas B. McGruther, economics major, Wayne, N. J.; Scribner A. Messenger, English major, Bartlesville, Okla.; Beverly N. Minear, English major, Coral Gables, Fla.; Meta Y. Robinson, English major, Olive Branch, Miss.; Nancy P. Ryan, elementary education major, Louisville, Ky.; E. Gayle Walker, elementary education major, Owensboro, Ky.; and Sherry F. Wood, elementary education major, Cleveland, Tenn.

Dr. Edwin R. Hunter, retired Chairman of the English Department of the College, gave the featured address on the subject, "A View of the Genius of William Faulkner."

Taking part in the ceremonies were Dr. Boyd L. Daniels, Academic Dean of the College; Dr. Carolyn L. Blair, Professor of English; Mrs. Linwood F. (Jane) Snider, President of the Society; Miss E. Frances Massey, Dean of Women and Secretary of the Society; and Dr. E. Fay Campbell, College Chaplain.

Each year since 1934 the alumni members of the Society have elected a number of the highest ranking seniors and then these have joined in electing other seniors who meet the qualifications.

The provisions and requirements adopted are parallel to those of the older national honor society, Phi Beta Kappa.

The purpose of Alpha Gamma Sigma is to stimulate interest in intellectual and cultural pursuits among all who study at Maryville College, and to encourage and recognize sustained academic achievement.

There are three kinds of members in the Society: (1) First, active members who must be regularly enrolled students of senior classification, or in exceptional cases, of junior classification, and who meet certain clearly established standards. (2) Second, associate members who may be members of the faculty and staff who are members of Phi Beta Kappa, and other members of the faculty under certain conditions. (3) Third, honorary members, elected from among graduates of Maryville College who after at least ten years from graduation have won special distinction for breadth of culture and scholarly achievement in literary, scientific, educational or social fields.

Dance Company in Review

The Maryville College-Community Artists Series ended on Friday, March 29, with a performance by the Norman Walker Dance Company. This fine group gave to the audience a rare experience—it was literal poetry in motion.

Dancing to musical selections by such diversified composers as Bach, Vivaldi, John Lennon, and Carl Orff, the company created definite moods and illusions which were dramatic yet natural. There was an immediate and exceptional communication with the audience which might be thought unusual in such a medium of expression as the dance.

The program itself consisted of three parts: "In Praise of . . .", based on a quotation from Rainer Maria Rilke and using baroque music for the most part; Suite (A Work in Progress), in which were "In My Life" by Lennon and McCartney, as well as "Suzanne" and several selections by The Doors; and finally Carl Orff's scenic cantata Trionfo di Afrodite. In all of these, movements from the classical ballet combined with sensual, sometimes erotic, motions from contemporary dancing to create unusually fine visual images.

If this group is any indication, the dance is indeed coming into its own once more and emerging from its chrysalis of stereotype into a new freedom, becoming once again a true art form.

WELL DONE

Well, the basketball season is over now and the baseball season is well on the way. The Scots' basketball team finished its season with a 10-15 record, but don't let the record disappoint you.

The Scots had a rough start to overcome. As they went into their fourteenth game of the season, they had only two wins to show for their efforts. But the fourteenth game was the big turning point. Their win against Bryan College set the team rolling to an impressive 8-4 second half record. The whole team seemed to be sparked into a fiery desire to swallow up every team they possibly could. Led by high scoring Bill Padgett, who netted 640 points for a 25.6 average, the Scots proved their ability to break through strong defensive teams while keeping their opponents' scoring well below theirs, winning by margins from 3 to 22.

As for individual achievements, the Cumulative Summary gives you the facts. Each player on the team did a great job, working well with his teammates and coach in order to give the team the proper defense and offense needed to have a winning ball club. This was shown especially in the last half of the season. The team shows a lot of promise for next year. Men such as freshmen Mike Barrows, Johnny Leibrock and Lynn Mize showed themselves capable of playing College ball well and should be quite good next year if they play.

To the basketball team goes a "well done."

M.C. vs. F.C.

The Maryville Scots opened their 1968 baseball season with two games against Franklin College on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. In the first game the Scots won by a score of 9-6, but the second they dropped to Franklin 10-8.

Highlights of the first game came in the fourth and ninth innings. In the fourth the Scots scored seven runs on four hits, coming from behind to take over the lead 7-2. Two more runs scored in the sixth, ending the Scots' scoring in the game. In the ninth inning, with the score 9-6, Lynn Dildine made two great running catches in center field for two outs and Wayne Basler stuck out the last batter.

Summary 0/0, 1/0, 0/0, 4/7, 0/0, 0/2, 1/0, 1/0.

Winning Pitcher—Van Leuven. Innings pitched—Van Leuven 7, Basler 2. At bat off-Van Leuven 36, off-Basler 7. Hits off-Van Leuven 9, off-Basler 1. Runs off-Van Leuven 5, off-Basler 0. Base on balls off-Van Leuven 4, off-Basler 0. Struck out by-Van Leuven 8. by-Basler 1. Errors 3.

Highlights of the second game with Franklin were a two run homer in the third inning by Lynn Dildine, and a Franklin home run in the fifth inning. It looked as though the Scots might win the game in the seventh inning when they tied the score 8-8 with three runs, but with the bases loaded in the eighth, Franklin drove in two runs with a double into center field. The Scots were unable to come back, and the final score was 10-8.

Summary 2/1, 1/0, 1/2, 0/0, 2/2, 1/0, 4/3, 0/0, 0/0.

Winning Pitcher—Rose (F). Losing Pitcher—Basler. Innings pitched—Nicholas 1 1/3, Rose 2 2/3, Talbot 3, Basler 2. Wild pitch-Talbot 1. At Bat off-Nicholas 12, off-Rose 18, Talbot 11, Basler 10. Hits off-Nicholas 4, off-Rose 4, Talbot 3, Basler 2. Balk-Nicholas 1. Runs off-Nicholas 5, off-Rose 3, Talbot 0, Basler 2. Base on balls off-Nicholas 4, off-Rose 4, Talbot 0, Basler 3. Struck out by-Nicholas 1, by-Rose 3, Talbot 0, Basler 2. Errors 5.

M.C. vs. G.t.

With a 1-1 record the Scots met Georgetown on Saturday to play two seven-inning games. Again the Scots won the first and lost the second.

In the first game, Georgetown started off by scoring two runs in the first inning. A home run for the Scots by Bob Macy in the second inning brought the score to 2-1, while great fielding held Georgetown down. With two outs in the fourth, Don Kidd knocked in two runs, putting the Scots ahead 3-2. Georgetown tied it up in the seventh, sending the game into an extra inning. In the eighth, Georgetown pulled ahead 4-3, but the Scots came back to win, with Gary Reagan bunting a run in on a well-executed squeeze play. The final score was 5-4. The most interesting plays of the game were three run-downs in the eighth inning, perfectly executed by the Scots to end a Georgetown threat.

Winning Pitcher—Van Leuven. Innings pitched-Van Leuven 8. At Bat off-Van Leuven 34. Hits off-Van Leuven 7. Runs off-Van Leuven 4. Base on Balls off-Van Leuven 3. Struck out by-Van Leuven 8. Errors 4. Subs.-G. Reagan for Gibbons in 7th.

In the second game, Georgetown again took the lead by two runs in the first inning. They scored in the third inning to end all scoring in the game. The Scots failed to score and the final score was 3-0. Highlights of the game came in the 3rd, 4th, and 7th innings. In the third the Georgetown coach was thrown off the field. In the fourth, Steve Boggs made a spectacular running catch in extreme left field which sent him diving into the gravel. In the seventh Boggs caught a fly ball and relayed it in to first base to catch the runner as he tried to get back safely. Boggs, the Scots' leadoff batter, is a freshman and shows a lot of promise as a ball player.

Vol. 53 | Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee, April 12, 1968 | No. 16

"So I say to you, my friends, that even though we must face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of it's creed — we hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal."

What happens now? What will it take to make us react? I mean us — white, middle-class, prostituted America. Tanks and jeeps, personnel carriers and scared national guardsmen. These were seen this week-end not in Berlin, Saigon, Hue, or Athens; but in Washington, Nashville, Memphis, Chicago ,and Oakland. And that's all I'm going to say about that.

Before World War II this country wasn't too hot on having a draft law. During the Civil War New York was almost torn apart by reaction to a draft system. What happens when a nation doesn't wake up in time?

"I fought in the Great War to preserve this nation and I refuse to stand by and watch you push this country into the arms of the Commies. By God, my kid has a 4-D classification and he says that we should stop them at any cost. Where would we be now if we hadn't struggled against the Spanish in the 1890's. What if we had let those 57 Communists take over the Dominican Republic? Those 20,000 Marines sure took care of them. Duvalier may not be the best ally, but you don't hear any complaints from those greedy Niggers he rules, do you? Don't worry about those civilians in Viet Nam; they're not so important that they can't be overlooked in the light of the goal which we're aiming for. If all you kids have to do is sing and study and fornicate and dream up new orders then none of you deserve to be free."

The Selective Service System is being used as a punitive measure. Do you think such actions will mellow with age? With a few exceptions conscientious objectors must implement their statements with proof of religious grounds against the taking of human life. This is fine unless you merely have serious qualms about smearing a 14 year old boy in black pajamas who is probably more interested in expelling an invader than he is in spreading the teachings of Mao. Tell that to your local board. Out of the fear of Communism and Black Power America is fast becoming susceptible to Fascism. People are being crucified for new ideas. Carmicheal and Brown-both under 30-have this country shaking in it's boots. If things were as peachy as some would have us believe, they could yell for a million years and no one would even know they existed. If some of the billions spent on a foreign war were spent on the Negro and the Indian and the Appalachian Whites, who would the Communists subvert? Harlem and Watts and Hough are not ghettoes; they are prison camps in a very real sense.

America is the greatest nation in the world. In the stream of history it's ideas are unique. Thats' not enough. If we are to preach justice we must have in our midst those who are just. Brotherhood must include the Black Man or the dream will become a nightmare. In Newark a looter was shot 35 times by a panic stricken policeman who carried a machine-gun. While you read this several soldiers will be killed in a war that will not end in honor but in convenience My only emotive response is to puke.

SPRING BRINGS CAMPUS CONCERN

Nelson Rockefeller's announcement that he would not actively seek the Republican presidential nomination has not resulted in a wholesale desertion by students to the camp of Richard Nixon. In fact, two separate polls taken last week at the University of Texas Law School and at Alfred University in Alfred, New York, have indicated that support for Rockefeller remains extremely strong.

The results to the question "Who do you feel should be the Republican Presidential nominee this November?" were as follows:

U. of Texas Law School
Rockefeller	293
Nixon	170
Linsay	105
Reagan	45
Percy	39
U. of Alfred
Rockefeller	167
Nixon	76
Lindsay	43
Percy	24
Hatfield	6

The polls also demonstrated that Lyndon Johnson does not possess anywhere near the support on college campuses that Eugene McCarthy and Robert Kennedy enjoy. The combined McCarty-Kennedy vote, in fact, absolutely obliterated the President's tally in both cases. The question put to the students was "Who do you feel should be the Democratic Presidential nominee this November?" The results:

U. of Texas Law School
McCarthy	256
Johnson	183
Kennedy	140
Wallace	59
U. of Alfred
McCarthy	172
Johnson	48

The CHOICE 68 co-ordinating committee at Alfred also asked "Who should be elected President this November?" and the figures, predictably, indicated that McCarthy, Kennedy, and Rockefeller each hold sizeable leads over Johnson among students.

McCarthy	101
Kennedy	76
Rockefeller	71
Nixon	53
Johnson	21
Reagan	11
Lindsay	10
Hatfield	0

An indication of what's to come April 24? A definite possibility.

Although much of the discussion was on the question of whether committed radicals should be in academic life at all, most of the 350 registrants from 150 campuses who gathered on the University of Chicago campus were faculty or graduate students, with a small smattering of undergraduates.

To "try to form a conception of their role in universities, and for mutual support and criticism," as an organizer of the conference put it, they formed a permanent organization, with national headquarters at 1307 E. 60th St. in Chicago, and local groups on campuses around the country.

According to Richard Flacks, one of the founders of Students for a Democratic Society and now assistant professor of sociology at the University of Chicago, the conference arose from "faculty members' desire to discuss with each other about (their role in the university), and that they had been involved mostly in specific issue-oriented demonstrations, and did not discuss their long-range effectiveness."

Three views of the place of radicals in academia were heard at the conference. They were:

—The true place for a radical is as an activist in the larger society, not as a teacher in a university.

—That, on the contrary, there's a crucial role for the radical intellectual as a scholar rather than activist.

—That both these positions may be correct, but the most important question is how to shape the university's role in the larger society for the ends of social change. In this view, radicals should deal with the university as an institution which is an "arena for making social change," Flacks said.

In the local campus "cells" of the new organization, Flacks said, members will "develop programs for university reform, and initiate criticism of their own activities as teachers and scholars." The organization will also provide defense support for radicals who are denied appointments or tenure because of their politics, and for student activists who come under attack from administrations.

The local groups can be expected to involve themselves in such issues as the links between many universities and the military establishment, according to Flacks.

The new organization plans regional conferences in early autumn and a national conference late this autumn, in addition to discussions at several national meetings of disciplinary associations this spring and summer.

WALTHAM, Mass. (CPS) — Results of a poll of male seniors at Brandeis University here, released this week, indicated that 70 percent of them will try to avoid the draft.

Of the 180 students polled (out of a total of 194 male seniors), 16 said they would go to jail, and 44 said they would leave the country rather than accept induction. Another 65 said they would "seek some kind of deferment" to avoid the draft.

Of the 30 percent who are not planning to avoid the draft, half said they would definitely serve, and the other half were undecided.

The poll at Brandeis was one of several that have been conducted on college campuses since the new draft regulations were announced February 15.

At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), a poll of 404 seniors and first-year grad students indicated that 29 percent of those contacted had either decided to leave the country, or were seriously considering it, BOSTON (CPS) — For two days the words "Maurice and Dorothy Gordon School of Nursing" could be seen on the side of a building at Boston University.

Then they came down after Mr. Gordon, a Boston landlord, withdrew his $500,000 gift to the school in the wake of an article in the campus newspaper and student protests against him.

After the $500,000 gift was announced by the university the BU News began looking into Gordon's background. A week later they ran an article containing comments by student tenants who live in some of the buildings Gordon owns. At the ceremony at which the buidling was to be officially named for Gordon there were a number of student pickets, one of whom carried a sign with several dead rats hanging from it.

But Gordon never showed up for the ceremony and the university announced that he had withdrawn the gift. Boston Negro leaders were pleased. John Young, chairman of the Boston Congress of Racial Equality said, "It is no secret that in Roxbury, where he owns considerable private property, Gordon's buildings violate practically every building code on record."

BU President Arland F. Christ-Janer was apologetic, however. "I publicly acknowledge with embarrassment and apology that the action of Mr. Gordon is under-

A Plea for Immoderation

The reasonable man adapts himself to the world: the unreasonable one persists in trying to adapt the world to himself. Therefore all progress depends on the unreasonable man.

G. B. Shaw

The life of a rebel in any organized society has never been easy. Society is developed around the conservative, calm, accepting person who will endure injustice rather than see his stability shaken. Anyone willing to challenge the status quo is viewed by the great moderate masses with at least suspicion and more often hate. In this nation we have elevated the ideal of the clean-cut respectable young man to the position of worship while at the same time relegating the long-haired "kook" to a place of instant mistrust. (I am reminded of a professor of mine who, after seeing the well-scrubbed, pink and healthy faces of "Sing Out 66" participants, said that one thing about these youths was that you always could depend upon them—and that was a great danger in a democracy.)

A rebel is, however, more than someone who has long hair and dresses strangely. He is a man who in the face of injustice decides to take a stand regardless of the personal consequences. He draws a line beyond which he will not accept further encroachment of his rights or the rights of any other man. Such a stand is not popular, nor is it politic with most people. A man who would rebel must expect ostracization and perhaps violence. He who rebels without expecting this is a fool; he who rebels in the face of it is perhaps also a fool, but he is at the same time a real man and a hero. We are a nation which is hard on its heros; we tend to kill them, either socially or physically. Last week another name was added to our already too long list of martyrs: Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Since Dr. King's tragic assassination we have been inundated with pleas for moderation from leaders both black and white. These pleas are valid because of the very real danger that this fat and sassy country of ours could be torn apart by riots at any moment. And the real tragedy is that justification can easily be seen for the terrible frustration that breeds riot: social injustice continues unchecked in the ghetto while billions are being spent to kill non-whites in Asia, and to be the first to put (three clean-cut white) men on the moon, and to be the first (kid on our block) to own a supersonic transport. Yes, it is good that the Abernathys and the Youngs and the Linseys seek to moderate the militants in these troubled times. But at the same time a call must be raised to get complacent, middle-class America off its fat, moderate ass and into the area of genuine human involvement.

This will require those of us who are nice, safe, arm chair philosophers to stop talking and start acting. We need more rebels—people willing to risk some of what they have in something as hopelessly romantic as a cause. We have got to do something about the cry of "Burn, baby, burn" whether it is shouted in the streets of Detroit or a village of Vietnam. It will hurt like hell to become involved, because he who rebels will never be accepted and each of us really wants to be loved. It may actually involve more than public censure—for Dr. King it meant death; but as Camus said: "If the individual, in fact, accepts death and happens to die as a consequence of his act of rebellion, he demonstrates by doing so that he is willing to sacrifice himself for the sake of a common good which he considers more important than his own destiny."

So what can one do? What do we have to work with? Perhaps nothing—but then as that beautiful rebel, Luke, from the movie Cool Hand Luke said, "Sometimes nothing can be a real cool hand." We don't have much to work with, the moderates carry all the weight (the weight of inertia) and know how to use it to prevent action. But sometimes, just sometimes, someone comes along to scramble the odds. In the immoral jungle of big-time politics such a man just might be Senator Eugene McCarthy, of whose campaign a cynical political "realist" asked, "What do you want, a winner or a hero?" Well, personally, right now I am more interested in a hero, someone willing to risk a future for a belief.

This is what we as students must learn: how and when to draw personal lines and how to get the guts to speak out when these lines are transgressed, whether by flaming idiots like George Wallace or by decent, moderate America. Rebellion will be painful and lonely, but we can no longer afford not to be individuals. To rebel means to eventually sell out or be killed, but there is a difference between merely existing and really living, and that difference is defined by our actions. Chances for expression will be offered. There may still be a march on Washington this spring, and there will certainly be a long, hot summer to follow with opportunities for us to drop our non-involvement and perhaps save our country. You will be broken someday, and when you fall the fool will rejoice; but that may be through fear because he knows that "We shall overcome . . . someday."

So let freedom ring from the prodigious hilltops of New Hampshire.
Let freedom ring from the mighty mountains of New York.
Let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania.
Let freedom ring from the snow-caped Rockies of Colorado.
Let freedom ring from the curvaceous slopes of California.
But not only that.
Let freedom ring from Stone Mountain of Georgia.
Let freedom ring from Lookout Mountain of Tennessee.
Let freedom ring from every hill and molehill of Mississippi from every mountainside, let freedom ring.
And when we allow freedom to ring, when we let it ring from every village and hamlet, from every state and city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children—black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Catholics and Protestants—will be able to join hands and to sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual. "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, we are free at last."

EDITORIAL

America may be near to being mortally wounded as a result of the assassination of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King on April 4, 1968. Only a fool could say that the violence that was evident this past weekend will not erupt again this summer, or will continue in guerilla warfare style up to, and during, the hot summer. The Moses of the moderate element was killed leaving the leadership in the hands of the extreme element on both sides of the racial lines, the racial militaristic lines. The hopes for non-violent change have diminished to a terrifyingly low level. If it results in a civil war it is obvious which side will win, but the price will be tremendous: the richest and most powerful and sickest country in the world.

We all love our country. After the strong emotional stress has worn off we must organize ourselves and try to save her. What we have done to black people and what the black people do, we the whites have brought upon ourselves. But we can do something. We do not abandon sick loved ones and we can not abandon our beloved country. Ask yourself if our bigotry is worth the destruction and death that another civil war would bring. Can we afford to see tanks in our home towns, be they Washington, Detroit, or Maryville? As Christians are we promoting man's humanity to man? Are peoples' lives worth our stiff-necked pride? Is a television set more valuable than an American life?

As long as whites hate blacks, as long as the white community insists that it must place negro's in the concentration camps of the ghettos, as long as white people refuse the right of human dignity, they are not free. They will not taste freedom but death. We are the bounded. Unless we realize our human conscience we will never rejoice in the spiritual . . . "Free at last, free at last, Great God Almighty! We are free at last!"

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

The other night while watching TV I saw a jazz pianist known as Oscar Peterson play. This set me to thinking about Maryville and Jazz. Jazz has been around for quite a long time. Maybe it hasn't been around as long as classical music, but it's been around longer than pop-rock. I'm not knocking these other forms of music. I enjoy listening to classical music as well as pop music, but I also like jazz and think it is an important musical form and is as much a part of today as the classical and pop forms.

If Maryville is going to modernize itself (as expressed in Time magazine) it should do something with jazz. If part of Maryville's purpose is "An education that truly liberates involving full and free exploration" then jazz should be at MC since it is a full and free exploration of music. I don't consider the fact that the FAC music library only has obtained one, yes one, jazz record out of all the many records it has, to be liberal, but rather tending to be one-sided. I think the jazz people deserve more than one Dave Brubeck record, and I would like to see many more jazz records available in the future. (The Thaw Hall Library finally subscribed to Downbeat.)

Furthermore, I would like to suggest that Maryville have a jazz artist to perform sometime in the future. Such big names as Stan Getz, Herbie Mann, Oscar Peterson, Dizzy Gillespie, or Wes Montgomery could each give a fabulous and meaningful concert and for no more money than any pop-group. I feel strongly that something of this nature should be investigated, and I hope that it might be followed through so that someday in the near future Maryville will announce the performance of a jazz musician.

Dear Campus Editor:

I am writing at this time to inform you of a truly great piece of news.

JOSH WHITE, JR., your favorite entertainer, who was signed by United Artists Records a few weeks ago will have his first album out on that label The title is "THE JOSH WHITE, JR. ALBUM" and everyone who has heard the first cuts is enormously excited. In fact, United Artists is already so enthusiastic that they are exerting all efforts to insure its success.

Josh sings such tunes as "The Impossible Dream," "Goin' Out of My Head," "Suzanne" and seven other delightful songs, in his own inimitable fashion. In fact, it is the kind of singing that truly gives you the reason why he is tagged "The Total Entertainer." Fine arrangements and a talented musical crew backs Josh on this release.

I hope you will see fit to make mention of this new album release in your college publication so that those who number among his many fans may have an opportunity to request this at the book and record shops.

Thank you so much for your interest and cooperation.

Cordially;

McCARTHY CAMPAIGN

A meeting was held on campus April 3, 8:30 p.m. for people interested in supporting the candidacy of Senator Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota for President of the United States. The meeting was attended by some 85 people representing the faculty, students, and community.

The meeting, moderated by Dr. Paul Ogren of the Maryville College faculty, was concerned primarily with these areas: feasible activities both in and out of Tennessee to secure Senator McCarthy's nomination and election, possible methods for raising the necessary funds, and the specific orientation of the group in the political realm.

Billed as a meeting for persons interested in McCarthy, it quickly became a question as to how limited the work of the group would be. Although much loyalty for McCarthy was in evidence, it was also obvious that much interest stemmed merely from desire to stop the nomination of the administrations' choice if it were other than Kennedy or McCarthy. This problem is still to be resolved at the next meeting.

In an effort to understand the current political scene and to become aware of the potential of small political groups, Dr. Peter Gunter of the U-T faculty reported on the Knoxville Concerned Democrats. Mrs. Boyd, a Democratic Committee woman, explained in part the realities of the Tennessee political system. She made it clear that it was important to get organized, to send delegates to various state and local conventions and to make it evident there is widespread support for McCarthy.

As its final action the group elected a steering committee to formulate plans and structure for future meetings and activities. The members of the committee are Mrs. Cherie Ogren and Mrs. D. Harrison representing the community, Dr. Mark Davis and Dr. David Young representing the Maryville College faculty, and Al Keim and Jim Reynolds representing the students.

The group will meet again shortly and all interested persons are encouraged to attend. An announcement of time and place is forthcoming.

rather than face the draft. Another 17 percent have either decided, or are seriously considering, going to jail as an alternative to the draft.

Previously, the Graduate Student Council at MIT passed a resolution in support of those who refuse on moral grounds to serve in the armed forces while the Vietnam war is going on.

A poll of about one quarter of the undergraduates and 150 of the male graduate students at Yale University in Connecticut showed that 20 percent of those polled would emigrate rather than serve. Another 18 percent plan to refuse service, but remain in this country and face the legal consequences.

All of the remainder — 62 percent — said they would serve if drafted, although many of them said they will try to avoid the draft by getting deferments or by attempting to fail the physical exams.

FORENSIC FINALE

The Maryville College Debate Team ended a season of vigorous activity with a tremendous two-man effort which brought home the Men's Sweepstakes Trophy from the Pi Kappa Delta Regional Tournament at Old Dominion College, Norfolk, Va. Ray Phillippi, junior from Pittsburgh, Pa. and Jonathan Lutz, sophomore from Atlanta, Ga., compiled 42 points in debate and individual speaking events, with Jon winning first place in Oral Interpretation and Ray and Jon tying for second in both Extemporaneous Speaking and After Dinner Speaking.

An additional honor was earned by Jon Lutz with his election as Secretary-Treasurer of the Southeast Province of Pi Kappa Delta (National Forensic Honorary Society). He is the first student to hold this office, recently opened to students by Constitutional changes in the organization, and will serve for a two-year term.

The debate team has participated in seven major tournaments this year, in addition to hosting the annual Maryville Novice Tournament in the early fall. The team has added seven trophies to their growing list of honors this year, including a first place in Dramatic Reading by Diane Caylor, senior from Alcoa, at the Mountain Forensic Tournament at Appalachian State University at Boone, N. C.; last November, Jon Lutz's second place in After Dinner Speaking at West Georgia College Invitational at Carrollton, Ga., and third place in Oral Interpretation at the Memphis State University Mint Julep Tournament; Ray Phillippi's first place in Extemporaneous Speaking, West Georgia, and second place at the Mint Julep; and a first place four-man team trophy in Varsity Debate at West Georgia. The team also collected 15 speaker certificates in various events this year.

Stevan Horning, sophomore from Indianapolis, Ind.; Knox Singleton, sophomore from Murphy, N. C.; Sandra Graham, sophomore from Princeton, N. J.; and Charles Myers, junior from Hammonton, N. J., have also been key members of the Maryville Squad this year, contributing numerous points toward team victories. Stevan Horning holds the best won-lost record on the squad with 20 wins against 13 defeats. Extra speakers traveling with the squad this year were Diane Caylor and Georgia Briggs, sophomore from Horsham, Pa.

WHAT IS A C.O.?

WASHINGTON (CPS) — With the chances that Congress will do anything about the current draft regulations growing more minuscule every day, many students will soon be looking down the barrel of the Selective Service System.

Michael Tigar, a young Washington lawyer who has handled many draft cases, and is now editor-in-chief of a new law journal called the Selective Service Law Reporter, recently offered some suggestions about how students should respond to the threat of the draft.

His recommendations, based on a careful study of the current draft laws and the administrative regulations that accompany them, are necessarily somewhat broad in scope, since he could not take into account the idiosyncracies of individual draft boards. He does feel, though, his suggestions should be of some help to prospective draftees in colleges around the country.

Tigar's basic suggestion for students is that they plan carefully in dealing with the Selective Service System. Many students take the position that the best way to avoid the draft is to ignore it, in hopes that it will go away. Tigar says that is a fundamental mistake.

"Don't stay away from your draft board," Tigar says; "Go to the board and look in your file. If you can't go yourself, you can designate someone else in writing—preferably a member of your family—to check your file for you. And besides that, consult someone who is competent in Selective Service law."

Tigar points out that they are relatively few lawyers who are knowledgeable about the draft laws. He says, though, that "in virtually every large community there will be one or two lawyers who are qualified."

Tigar recommends consulting a lawyer early rather than late. He also feels that "a student who can afford to pay (the lawyer's fee) should do so. There are a lot of indigent registrants, and many lawyers are eager to work on behalf on these people, but they can't do it without some financial resources."

In the matter of classifications, Tigar recommends that students not get a II-S (student) deferment if they can avoid it, since anyone who has held a II-S since July 1, 1967, will not be eligible for a III-A (family) deferment after losing his II-S. If a registrant has been automatically granted a II-S, though, rather than applying for it, the restriction on getting a III-A doesn't apply.

In any case, Tigar suggests that any student who believes he may qualify for a deferment other than II-S should make the effort to obtain it. Some of the steps he suggests are:

1. If there is a chance of a registrant being disqualified for medical reasons, he should look into the matter on his own. Classification physicals are a "mass production" process, in which subtle physical disqualifications often escape the attention of the examiners.

The Army's book on medical standards for draftees is available to the public through the Government Printing Office in Washington. Registrants are advised to see a doctor to determine if they are disqualified under the standards set by the Army.

2. Registrants should look into the possibility of getting a III-A deferment if they have dependents. Tigar emphasizes that dependency deferments are possible even when the dependency is of a physical or emotional nature, rather than simply financial.

3. Registrants who are thinking about applying for conscientious objector status should begin working on it right away. The best source of information on C.O. questions, according to Tigar, is the handbook published by the Central Committee for Conscientious Objection, whose offices are at 206 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

According to Tigar, there are several popular misconceptions about getting C.O. status.

One is that to be designated a C.O., a registrant must be a member of a "peace church," such as the Quakers or the Jehovah's Witnesses. Under present laws, this is entirely false. Another is that a C.O. must be a complete pacifist. On the contrary, a C.O. must only be opposed to "war in any form." He can be willing to fight to defend himself, his home, his family, etc., and still qualify as a C.O.

A third misconception is that a C.O., after being designated I-A-O or I-O, will be called to alternative or non-combatant service right away. In fact, he cannot legally be called until his name comes to the head of the order of call.

Finally, many registrants don't realize that a C.O. applicant need not believe in an anthropomorphic God. As a result of the Supreme's Court decision in the case of Daniel Seeger, a C.O. can base his objection to war on a deeply-rooted value system that has the same function in his life as the belief in God does in the life of a religious man.

In his actual dealings with his board, Tigar says, a registrant should not take the position that the less he has to do with it, the better. Tigar recommends that every registrant find out what is in his file, and make sure that all his dealings with his board are recorded in it ,if possible.

He also suggests that a registrant take advantage of the section of his draft law that entitles him to a personal appearance each time the board reconsiders his case. "This can be a very valuable means of trying to deal with their views," says Tigar.

When a registrant runs into hostility from his board, he can ask the government appeals agent to intercede. Each board has an appeals agent, who is usually a local lawyer. The agent represents both the board and its registrants, and he is usually in a better position than the board members to interpret the law.

If a registrant is called for induction, and has appealed his case as far as he can within the Selective Service System, he must go through the induction process up until the point that he is called to step forward and take the oath, if he wants to take his case to court. He should then refuse to step forward.

Tigar emphasizes, though, that is essential for a registrant to consult a lawyer long before he is that far along in the process.

He who desires to see the living God face to face should not seek Him in the empty firmament of his mind, but in human love.

Harold J. (Spike) Claassen, Assistant Sports Editor of the Associated Press in New York City, will be the featured speaker at the Maryville College All-Sports Banquet scheduled for the College Dining Room in Pearsons Hall on the campus Thursday evening, April 18 at 7 p.m.

Mr. Claassen plans to speak about the past, present, and future of Olympic games, and some highlights and anecdotes about them as he has covered the Olympic games for many years. He also plans to talk about the role of the small college in athletics.

Nixon Is

In an exclusive statement of policy delivered to the Executive Offices of CHOICE 68, former Vice President Richard Nixon presented a strategic blueprint that differed little from the Administration's policy prior to President Johnson's withdrawal from the 1968 campaign.

In Mr. Nixon's view the war is one of aggression from the North —a separate state — and he discounts those critics who see the struggle in terms of internal civil war. Nixon's scenario thus invites the characterization of the North as "aggressors" and the South as "invaded territory."

The United States is therefore obligated to "maintain a sufficient level of military activity to convince the enemy first, that he cannot win the war, and second, that for him to continue pursuing a military victory is not worth the cost." Nixon felt that only when the communists realize that their fight is hopeless should our military effort slacken.

On no account, Mr. Nixon continued, should our strategy of bombing the North be abandoned or temporarily halted because of rumored peace feelers or hysteria on the home front. On the contrary, the conditions for cessation of bombing should be rigid and subject only to the halt of hostilities by the North. "If support for the aggression in the South diminishes, then the bombing can diminish. If the North ceases to fuel the war in the South, then the bombing can cease." Nixon refused to accept anything short of a conventional military "victory" in Vietnam, as a negotiated settlement involving concessions to the North appears to be unacceptable to him.

He did not, however, feel that those who are clamoring for the utilization of nuclear weapons should be catered to. "I do not foresee," he stated emphatically "any need for the use of either tactical or strategic atomic weapons, and I think their employment would be a dangerous mistake."

Nixon's statement to CHOICE 68 on domestic affairs was even more detailed. He saw the current "urban crisis," for instance, as "the crisis of poverty and the crisis of crime," and suggests that to fight one while ignoring the other would be social lunacy.

Nixon has in the past been widely accused of being more specific and energetic in his anti-crime campaigns and messages than in his recommendations for eliminating poverty in American daily life. But in his CHOICE 68 statement, he came out strongly for placing highest priority on job training and employment opportunities. "Earnings from a job," he wrote, "would provide the urban poor with the dignity that no income subsidy will ever provide. It would also provide both social mobility and the opportunity for the poor to either improve their own housing, or move to new housing. The strongest chains holding the urban poor to the ghetto today are neither legal nor racial but economic."

Mr. Nixon concluded his remarks by praising the CHOICE 68 project, saying that "To those of us on the receiving end, it will be a signal as to whether our message has gotten across; it will give us an insight into what is troubling young America and where young America wants to be headed."

COMMENTS ON CHOICE '68

Mark Hatfield:

"I can think of no other time in our nation's history when students have been so well informed on the great issues which confront this nation. I have had the rare privilege and pleasure of speaking at some 30 Universities and Colleges, and I can personally attest to their deep insight and personal involvement in the issues of today. Through the vehicle of Choice '68 I would hope that every college student in America would utilize his vote as a means of expression in influencing this nation with regard to the candidates and the issues facing the American people in this election year."

Richard Nixon:

"Choice '68 is a thoroughly worthwhile exercise. It enables the largely disfranchised student to make a political impact with his views on the great issues and his preference among the candidates. It enables the American student community as a whole to make an impact upon the electorate that will choose the next President."

Charles Percy:

"Since college students make up a sizeable part of our population and will in truth be "tomorrow's leaders," I hope both political parties will take serious note of the results of this Choice 68. I personally will be watching it very closely."

Nelson Rockefeller:

"I heartily approve of CHOICE 68. College students today are extremely well-informed and their energy, idealism and intelligence are great sources of inspiration for us all. CHOICE 68 gives these young men and women a chance to express their political views in a meaningful way. It is vital to the future of democracy in American that the young be able to participate fully in the established political system."

Harold Stassen:

"CHOICE 68 is an excellent project and should be a further factor in developing student power to influence the course of the nation in this critical year."

The Meek shall inherit the earth — right in the mouth.

ART MUDGE AND BEYOND

Emerson once wrote that "society is a wave. The wave moves onward, but the water of which it is composed does not."

In light of the tumult of the recent past, this could have some significance. The water in the society which we dream and strive — each in his own way (and that is important) — to try to produce will still be people. Except they will be us, not them.

Besides the riots, there are elections coming up. If you don't like to riot, elections might have to be your thing — even if you can't be as proud of a vote.

Riots are frustration. So are elections. Though some people don't believe in elections, they are often quite useful.

Though Thoreau, who didn't have anything to lose, didn't like votes, they are still a way (not the way) to bring yourself about.

There are many things to be better. Here and elsewhere. Choice '68 is a way to help. So is November, with all its lies. (or will this time really be different).

Campus elections are sneaking up. Experience is by no means wisdom, but it does teach. A particularly noticeable tendency of the human creature is that tendency which lets us dislike people because we do not react to assorted trauma in the same physical-emotional way in which our companions react to the same trauma.

If anyone is all that sure that his way is the only way, let him speak up.

Otherwise, think about the task you feel needs tackling. Think who would be best able to solve the problem. It makes very little difference who is cute or friendly — unless being cute, athletic or friendly will solve the problem.

Elected people deal with other people. Convictions are important. So are tactics. But the final product must remain central. Politics is a game which has to be played, even if it is unpleasant. And it is. But political structures, here and out there, hold the doors open — and shut.

We cannot afford to demand that the people we vote for (and the people we like — and they do not have to be the same) do what we do. But we can ask them to believe in the same basic human rights we believe in. And to believe in them out loud.

"The wave moves onward, but the water of which it is composed does not."

See you in chapel?

As stated in an earlier issue of the Echo, one issue of the paper will be made available for candidates for the position of Editor, 1968-69. The present issue has been written by Tom Marston, acting editor, and members of his staff.

M.C. Development Plans

A development campaign to raise money for needs totaling $3 million at Maryville College will be launched later this month.

The Board of Directors approved the campaign after surveying existing campus needs and consulting with professional planners.

The money raised from alumni, friends, foundations, corporations, and other sources will be allocated to a new health and physical education building, a new library, a better student center, increased faculty salaries, and additional scholarships.

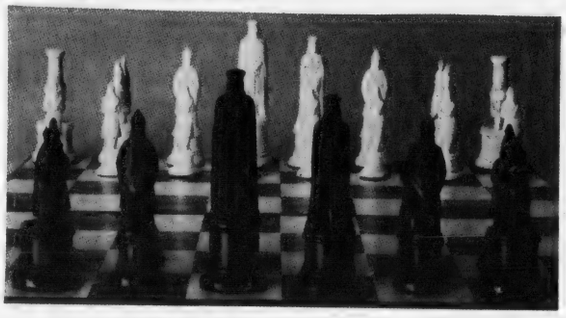
First priority will be allocated to the health and physical education building costing $1,450,000. A grant of Federal funds in the amount of $500,000 will reduce the cost of this building to $950,000 to be raised from other sources. This building will replace the functions of Bartlett Hall, the swimming pool, Alumni Gymnasium, and the Intramural Gymnasium which have long outlived their intended use.

The proposed building will include classrooms, faculty offices, exercise areas, a swimming pool, and an auditorium-gymnasium capable of seating 3,600 persons. It will contain 83,000 square feet on one floor.

Another capital need is a new library. A total of $1 million must be raised to build the structure. The Directors have given "immediate goal" status to a new library after evaluating the present facility in Thaw Hall. Prime consideration was given to the lack of study space for students and storage area for new materials.

The proposed building, to be built on four levels, would include approximately 400 carrels for independent study, open stack areas, and auditorium seating 200 persons, several seminar rooms, two reading areas, and a microfilm room. The building would contain 78,000 square feet. A faculty committee of Miss Virginia Turrentine, head librarian, and chairman of the committee, Dr. James A. Bloy, David R. Cartlidge, Dr. Elizabeth H. Jackson, Miss Sharon Matti, Dr. Paul J. Ogren, Dr. Russell D. Parker, Dr. Margaret T. Sherer, Dr. Arda S. Walker, and Dr. Boyd Daniels outlined a specific needs to the architectural firm, Barber and McMurry.

The cost of renovating Thaw Hall for use as a Student Center is $300,000. Facilities would include space for reading, music, parties, dances, snacks, organization and society meetings, and recreation.



Although Maryville College has raised faculty salaries substantially in recent years, other economic factors have also risen substantially. A total of $450,000 is needed for further increases in faculty salaries during the next three years. This will enable Maryville College to remain competitive with comparable institutions of higher education which have faculty compensation averages several thousand dollars above the level at Maryville. According to Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of Maryville College, adequate faculty compensation is most vital in assuring the continued growth and attractiveness of the college.

Another $300,000 will be allocated to improve the scholarship program. This will increase the number and quality of scholarships available to attract the exceptionally qualified student.

The development campaign will be titled "150 Fund," referring to the College's almost 150 years of service. Campaign offices are located in Anderson Hall.

Bill Fleming, director of development, said, "The forthcoming campaign will enable Maryville College to begin its second 150 years with a modern physical plant and continued educational quality."

Pot Bust at Bard

ANNANDALE-ON-HUDSON (CPS) — Sheriff's deputies arrested 32 Bard College students, 14 of them on narcotics charges, in the third pre-dawn police raid on a college campus this year.

The deputies arrived in the Bard campus at 1 a.m. April 6, setting up roadblocks at the three entrances to the campus. Meanwhile other deputies searched dorms, arresting 14 on drug charges and confiscating quantities of marijuana, pep pills, and heroin.

Some of the 18 arrested on non-drug charges were charged with interfering with the police and harrassment of police officers. Some caught in the roadblock were charged with drunk driving and other traffic violations. The students harrassed the officers extensively, spitting on them and yelling at them. However, some students said they were arrested for simply going up to the deputies and asking for their badge numbers.

Bard President Reamer Kline posted $28,000 worth of bail personally for the students. Bails ranged from $100 to $6,250, but averaged $1-2,000. Kline said any action against the students would be determined according to the individual cases.

Duchess County Sheriff Lawrence Quinlin said the arrests were made following a two-month investigation and that more arrests were coming. Quinlin admitted he had information from inside the campus about drug use.

President Kline called rumors that the informant posed as a college employee "unfounded," but most students believe him to be Tom Roberts, a Negro security guard who disappeared during the raid and who told one student he was the informant. It is also suspected that some

Organ Recital Tonight

Joseph Henry, organist from Alcoa, Tennessee, will give his Senior Recital tonight, April 19, 1968, at 8:15 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center music hall. Opening the program, he will play Trio Sonata No. 5, in C Major by J. S. Bach. Also on the program will be Bach's Passacaglia in C Minor and Franck's Grande piece symphonique. Mr. Henry will close his program with Variations sur un Noel by Marcel Dupre.

Joseph Henry

Playing the organ since he was in the sixth grade, Mr. Henry is now recognized as an outstanding musician of the community. He is presently the organist at New Providence Presbyterian Church in Maryville. Taking private lessons at Maryville College when he was in high school, he became interested in the music department and decided to go to Maryville College to continue studying organ. He received the Fine Arts Scholarship from the college his freshman year. In his sophomore year, Mr. Henry was invited to join Tau Kappa Chi and Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, two honorary music societies. He has been a member of the Men's Glee Club, is presently a member of the Maryville College Choir, and was a soloist in the 1967 performance of Handel's Messiah.

Students, faculty, and members of the community are invited to attend Mr. Henry's recital tonight. There will be no admission charge.

Changing Values?

With characteristic lack of fanfare, the Office of Development last week released an announcement of proposed building plans for a new physical education complex and a new library. The text of the news release (appearing on the front page of this issue) is extremely interesting. Not surprisingly, however, the unwritten part of it tells a more significant story. The library has been placed on "immediate goal" status; but the P.E. complex is the first concern. This seems to be the Development Office's way of saying that physical education is more important than a new library; more important than the study alcoves for 400 students, the reading area, and the seminar rooms which it will include.

For $300,000, Thaw Hall, once liberated from its present use, could be converted into a student center, including "space for reading, music, parties, dances, snacks, organization and society meetings, and recreation." Apparently, the physical education building is also more important than these.

Finally, the release stated that Maryville needs $450,000 in the next three years for faculty salaries, if it is to "remain competitive." Again, this seems to have been of secondary importance to the new P.E. plant.

Perhaps the reason for building the P.E. plant first is that the school intends to remove the reasons which prompted it to eliminate the P.E. major in the first place. I heartily agree that physical education has an important place in a liberal arts college; and that it can only be really effective if it enjoys good facilities. Maryville's facilities are now considerably less than good—their improvement should definitely be rated as an "immediate goal." But it seems to me that the emphasis has been placed in the wrong corner by considering the new complex before the library, the student center, and the raising of teachers' salaries.

Or perhaps the reason is that factors of political and financial nature make it seem easier to those in charge. It might be that stipulations of federal grants and private donations in reality greatly change the difference between the building costs of the two buildings in question—building costs which on the surface seem to favor the construction of the library first. If this is the case, we as students ought to know the facts of the decision.

Otherwise, we are forced to question the wisdom of building the new P.E. plant before the library, the student center, and the raise in salaries. How can this be considered, when the Sutton Science Center will be "completed" this June, boasting no furniture in the research room, and no books on the research shelves, because of lack of funds?

EDITORIAL

While a great deal of the nation-wide upheaval following the murder of Martin Luther King, Jr. has settled below the boiling point, there is one question that two weeks of serious reflection have not been able to settle for me. Why has Maryville College, an institution which aspires to be not only a leader among academic communities, but also a witness of the Christian commitment, stood by so mutely, while other institutions throughout the country have proven their leadership and commitment both by berating verbally the act of April 4, and by displaying this attitude in more poignant ways? The real irony of this situation is seen in watching our "fragmented, secular institutions" take the reins of leadership out of the hands of communities such as ours. The College Press Service reported the following six short days after King's death:

> At the University of Iowa, President Howard R. Bowen announced that he would seek funds from alumni and other sources to provide scholarships for members of minority groups. He also said the university was considering setting up an Institute of Afro-American Affairs, and he directed the dean of the faculty to review Iowa's programs relating to poverty research and Afro-American studies with a view to expanding them.
> In his remarks at a memorial convocation attended by thousands of students, Bowen urged students to press Congress for legislation that would aid black people.

Scholarships have also been established at Vanderbilt University and the University of Georgia in memory of Dr. King. These are but two of the predominately white schools which have made such moves, not to mention similar actions in Negro schools throughout the country.

It is a distasteful feeling when one suspects that the professed leadership and witness break down under the pressure of factors which do not always coincide with the actual stated purpose of an institution. Where is it then that Maryville will lead? And to what will Maryville be a witness? Will we only find these answers in looking at what the status quo provides? Or is my definition of witness — "showing evidence of" — to be replaced by another — "standing by and watching"?

Letter . . .

Dear Editor:

I had the pleasure of visiting your campus while on my Spring Break from Morehead State University where I am presently enrolled. One of the reasons I came to Maryville is that I am leaving Morehead and looking for a better place to continue my education in a free atmosphere.

Since December of this year at Morehead, four teachers have been fired without reason (one of whom was a Maryville graduate); Russian has been dropped as a language (the Russian teacher is one of the four being fired); out-of-state tuition was raised; and compulsory R.O.T.C. has been added for all male freshmen. Also the student council is undergoing a drastic change.

From this turmoil an underground newspaper was started. The official school newspaper, The Trail Blazer, is just a tool in the hands of the president. Since the Student Poll (the underground newspaper) has started, pressure has been brought on it, including name-calling and threat of law suits.

I am glad to see that Maryville has a school newspaper such as the Highland Echo. I have seen here the beginning of the freedom which is possible to achieve in a school, be it college or university. Value your freedom, but more than that, use it. There are places less fortunate than Maryville.

The hope Maryville had two years ago is gone. Being aware of the accomplishments of the last two years, one wonders where the hope has gone and why it has gone. What forces have turned the deep and energetic hope of faculty and students into a new despair, an unacknowledged hatred, a deeper feeling of anti-Maryville?

Maryville has made gains in her physical plant with more to come; she has forged ahead in the area of curricula and has moved with some alacrity in destroying the small requirements associated with a paternalistic institution. But what is missing? Is it "an education that truly liberates" involving "full and fere exploration"? Is a restriction of freedom somehow correlated to this new despair; is it frustration over not achieving the great expectations of two years ago, or is it reality not living up to the dream which has sent as to this nadir of feeling?

Maryville finds herself in the unenviable position of not taking her students or faculty seriously. She finds herself reacting to current social problems with an old social code. She finds herself jealously guarding her standards of grading without looking at her standards of teaching. She is grading hard but does that insure quality? She promulgates a statement of purpose, but is unable to recognize manifestations of its implementation. She is in a position of professing Christian love and concern, but she is unable to help the troubled students within her, to establish a significant student-faculty-administration relationship, to build a resevoir of trust between student and administration, and to secure for herself the confidence necessary to tackle the pressing problems of the time with apparent honesty, conviction, and cooperative effort.

Her actions seem to be undermined by a feeling of selfishness, noncreativity, insecurity and traditionalism. Surely all these negations do not come from a lack of communication between her component parts. Perhaps then, some originate from the reality of the lack of freedom which her components have, which they feel, or which they feel they can practice. The point seems to be, and glaringly so, that the academic body does not have a responsible sense of freedom, action, inquiry, criticism, interest, motivation, or concern.

Maryville has lost her zest for life. She has lost her desire for discussion and criticism and has chosen instead to find her security in a determined consensus and conformity. Maryville is where diversity has been removed as an alternative, where personal initiative and creativity are restricted and where honest intellectual dialogue goes on between too few students and faculty.

For some reason the reality of Maryville does not match her idealism. She has not been able to translate her intentions, beliefs, or commitments into an explicit meaningful program of action which allows all her parts to recognize and know unmistakably that she stands where she says she has, is and will continue to stand.

Maryville has many wonderful thoughtful people who have been placed in charge of student concerns and affairs. But she has been unable to free these people—to allow them to be effective and significant. Maryville desperately needs, in the area of student relations, people who can create and maintain a connection with all facets of student thought, desire, and concern. These people must know the student's fears, jealousies, aspirations, indictments, hatreds, loves, and they must know these things out of respect and trust. Students and Maryville need someone who can have unofficial and official rapport with the student body. Both need a person who will take the students more seriously than the members of the administration of which he is a part. The students need a representative on the Executive Council as much as the faculty does.

Thus Maryville finds herself in a difficult position: she has the people, but they are people who in different degrees are not able to do the job Maryville needs to have done, and her time is running out.

Maryville cannot exist in a system of suspicion. We, as students, cannot work with men in authority who will not or cannot assume the authority or initiative needed to tackle the problems, but who rely only on what is written or handed down.

Student-administration relationships in the fields of student life and activity will disappear unless there are people in these areas who will take creative initiative, assume authority, ask for and search for the power to institute change, stand on their conviction to be honest and forthright, and cease to hide behind the cloak of administrative bureacracy as an excuse not to deal with the issues. Perhaps then Maryville will realize that something drastic is needed and is needed quickly. She needs either new life in these positions or she needs new freedom for those in these positions.

All of us who make up Maryville must then ask ourselves what have we done, what have we considered? We have yet to demand or assume that degree of academic atmosphere which allows us and demands us to tackle the problems of our time; which requires each of us as individuals to become aware, to question, to seek and to formulate opinions and solutions to the problems we see. But how many of us see no problems at all: this Maryville, is your legacy. How few of us have not yet learned to see an issue from many sides, to see the value of human life, to attempt to relate our existence with that of all men: this Maryville, is your guilt.

How many of us feel that the teachings and pronouncements of Maryville are but so many moralisms and words: this Maryville, is your mystery.

—Jim Reynolds

Little Stuff

Mothers' Day is fast approaching. Freshmen and Transfers might like to know that sacred holiday has its own tradition here at MC. Now, being lighthearted and gay, we all like to observe traditions, especially if a little gusto can be added to our celebration. The Administration, mistakenly thinking that we students want to do away with all traditions here, have been nice enough to make plans for a "meaningful weekend activity" for this Mothers' Day. However, it is felt that we cannot abandon so noble a tradition as the water riots for something which may be temporarily satisfying but which would leave us in the long run no better off spiritually.

Gee, it must be fun to be a prof at Maryville and not be able to smoke in your office. Who says ye students have it so bad?

Anyone who happened to wander through the rock gardens behind our President's house would be proud indeed to see the wide variety of weeds which have been cultivated there. Anyone intent on making a collection of Autumn leaves need not despair if he was busy elsewhere last Autumn. A fine sampling can be found in the pleasant pools scattered around the garden. One unfortunate word however; a few flowers, apparently planted several years ago by some misguided gardener, have managed to sprout up among all the lovely weeds.

Several boys were apprehended on or about seven o'clock on the evening of Sunday, April 7, playing softball. Our diligent night watchmen did a very fine job in stopping these boys who were so obviously interfering with the Vespers services.

Signs were seen advising everyone to stand up for their beliefs by cutting classes on Good Friday. Apparently quite a few people consider Convocation to be a class.

So you think you've got it rough? Care to be required to take roll in Chapel every morning? Ever hear some of the comments made to monitors who were negligent in their duties?

—Mark McMaster

Follies Reviewed

It began as most events at MC begin . . . late. However, after this initial setback our Freshman Class proceeded to pound out a light evening of entertainment for those who attended the Frosh Follies. To the reviewer's knowledge this is the first such event to get off the ground and it is to be hoped that it will be the basis for another of those Maryville traditions, this one more welcome than some. Gary Nier and Ethel Ann Scruggs MC'd a program full of corn, mistakes, and talent. The audience laughed at the corn, forgave the mistakes, and applauded the talent.

The entire program was so compounded of fun, old jokes, new ideas, and hard work that the audience had little choice but to sit back and enjoy the show. Once so relaxed it was easy to let yourself enjoy the voices of Jan Metzger and Lynn Gillespie and the banjo work of Nat Kuykendall. The audience broke up at a number that can only be known as true Naval Maneuvers and thereafter found it rather easy to forgive even the excuses offered by Gary for less successful numbers. We were aware that the Exodus number was difficult and even Gary's apologies couldn't quite detract from the fact that Dan Rhone had been playing a very good upright piano in the number. Certainly everyone in the program deserved credit for their very presence but this reviewer couldn't help feeling that apologies hurt the performances they were intended to help.

The second half opened with an excellent performance by Connie O'Connell, the mood was set, and the second half proved more enjoyable than the first. The program was built up through Liz Boyce's flute number, some precision dancing by Carey Cox and group, and climaxed in an act by the Warren Gaughan Trio. Jazz has been lamentably overlooked at Maryville and the Trio's work Saturday Night was a splendid introduction, especially in the drum work of Bruce Smith. From then on the program slacked off until the Finale-Stage Crew scene which was unfortunately trite and overdone.

Talent shows have a habit of bogging down but this one managed to keep going and all things considered it was a good night's entertainment and well worth the time and trouble the Freshmen put into it.

I'd like to know what this whole show is all about before it's out

MC Grant

Senator Howard Baker has notified Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, Maryville College President, that the College has been awarded a grant for $138,200 for assistance as a "developing institution" under Title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965. This makes the third year in a row that Maryville College has received funds under this program. Last year's grant was for $78,200.

Dr. Copeland said, "This significant increase will enable us to continue strengthening our new curriculum and related programs, as well as the enhancing of our faculty by sending promising faculty members off for further

CHOICE 68

Fred Halstead, the Socialist Workers Party candidate for President, announced recently his plans to go to Vietnam and Japan this summer to campaign among servicemen.

"I don't plan to do anything provocative," Mr. Halstead said, "I just plan to listen and learn."

Halstead, forty years old, was his party's candidate in the '64 election, where he was on the ballot in eleven states. He received 40,000 votes, and expects to be a candidate in at least thirty states this November.

The CHOICE 68 election is regarded by Halstead as a "unique opportunity" for students across the country to register their feelings against the Vietnam War and the current Administration.

"Young people," he noted, "who become draftable at 18 but still don't have the right to vote, actually have the most at stake when it comes to the question of war. It is young people who are sent to do the dying and killing in Vietnam. CHOICE 68 will enable a massive part of American youth, those on campuses, to repudiate Lyndon Johnson and his war."

Halstead is probably the least known individual running in the CHOICE 68 election, but by virtue of the alphabetic arrangement of the candidates' names, he enjoys the top position on the primary's ballot. Considering the presence of twelve other candidates, this represents no small advantage.

He is currently campaigning almost exclusively on college campuses throughout the country, and is basing his attack mostly on two issues, "Bring the GIs Home from Vietnam" and, "Black Control of the Black Community."

Of Goats and Men

Goatman, alias Charles McCartney, is found by following thick black smoke column to its source of burning tires, kerosene, and rubbish. He was born in Iowa, so long ago that he "can't remember;" although he does remember that he has been on the road for 37 years. His avocation is preaching the gospel, and this he will do, to any interested bystander. He says he is a Baptist; one of the pamphlets he carries with him to sell says that he has a mission in Georgia. His cart is littered (in the fullest sense of the word) with his collected paraphernalia, among which are several free religious tracts. His many Bibles are well-used—when asked what he reads, he said, "The Bible, from cover to cover."

But he seems more ready to talk about himself than preach his gospel. He says he has been "beaten, shot at, and burned." But he insists that he has never been bothered by police for his meanderings along the public roads. In fact, he later asserted that he was never bothered by anyone. He is a hated man, he feels, due to the fact that he is trying to spread the Truth which was taught by Christ.

His living habits are peculiar at best. Part of his wagon complex is used for storing his life's belongings and his items for sale —the previously-mentioned religious tracts, picture postcards of himself, mock wanted postors of himself, and pamphlets about himself; the other part of the wagon is his sleeping quarters.

His goats are all his friends—he has travelled all over the country with them, and has been through hard times with them. Old Bill, one of his favorite goats, now deceased, deserved a memorial, which Goatman himself provided in the form of a poem-eulogy, on sale for twenty-five cents. He does not know all his goats by name, however, and is more likely to use "you gol-danged goat, I'll rip ya apart" to get his companions' attention than a name anyway. He says that he likes to live with the goats, because they don't hurt anybody, and they are good friends to him (a married man, McCartney has discovered that wives do not care for his chosen way of life).

His political position is clear from the "Wallace for President" signs that join with the "Jesus Wept" signs to adorn his wagons. He says that he has had no education, so we must conclude that his reading ability is self-taught.

The interview with Goatman can be concluded with this interesting note: He eats in restaurants, and claims to have considerable (Others who have known him say as much as $50,000) savings in a Georgia bank.

students might have been informants.

The students go to trial April 20. Some students believe Quinlin will be unable to win the cases against most of them. Quinlin has arrested LSD advocate Timothy Leary, whose Millbrook farm is also in Duchess County, six times but has been unable to make the charges stick.

This is the third such pre-dawn raid during this academic year. Last November a raid at the State University of New York at Stony Brook resulted in 34 arrests. An April raid on American University in Washington, D. C. resulted in at least seven and possible as many as 16 arrests.

Effects of Segregation

By WALTER GRANT

ATLANTA (CPS) — Despite continued protests from many Negro college administrators, the Southern Regional Education Board is quietly beginning to implement the recommendations of its controversial report on Negro higher education.

"We are in the very active stages of getting some of our proposals off the ground," says Dr. James M. Godard, project director for SREB's Commission on Higher Educational Opportunity in the South, the body which last fall made public its study of Negro colleges. "We already have financial support for some projects, and we are seeking support for others."

But these programs, due to the critical nature of the SREB report on the future of Negro colleges, lack the full support of some Negro college administrators. Many of these administrators are suspicious of SREB, which is a public agency of 15 Southern and border states, and have been highly critical of its recent report about their colleges.

The report, which has received the endorsement of most Southern governors, said Southern Negro institutions "do not match their predominately white counterparts in admission standards, breadth and depth of curriculum, quality of instruction, or preparation of students for employment." It also said some graduates of Negro colleges have found their degree a "hollow symbol because their preparation has been inadequate."

Although the report says Negro colleges should be improved rather than scrapped, some Negro administrators think the report is part of a conspiracy designated to hurt, rather than help, Negro colleges, and that the real purpose of SREB and the southern legislatures is phase out black institutions.

Dr. Godard says too much attention has been focused on the report's criticisms of Negro colleges, rather than on its positive recommendations. "Some of the presidents (of Negro colleges) have modified their criticisms after studying the report and realizing our goal is to provide equal educational opportunities for Negroes," Dr. Godard said.

Interviews with several Negro college presidents, however, indicated there still is wide-spread criticism and resentment of the report and SREB's efforts to proceed with the report's recommendations. A typical response came from Dr. Lucious H. Pitts, president of Miles College in Birmingham, Ala. He said, "I have not cooled off at all. Studies about Negro colleges have exaggerated the weaknesses and indirectly condemned the administrations. No matter what anyone says, these reports have not helped us. They have been very damaging."

Dr. Pitts also referred to two other reports which have been critical of Negro colleges. The first one, by Earl J. McGrath of Columbia University Teachers College, came several years ago, and was followed by a report in the "Harvard Educational Review" by David Riesman, the Harvard sociologist, and Christopher Jencks, of the Institute for Policy Studies.

Other Negro administrators also referred to the previous reports. John D. Withers, dean of the faculty at Clark College in Atlanta, said it is "no accident" that there have been three recent reports criticizing Negro colleges. He indicated whites may be trying to destroy the Negro college system by " 'political twig bending.' They may be building a body of literature which will support anything they want to do to us in the future."

Although most Negro administrators have criticized the SREB report on the basis of its criticism of Negro colleges, some are worried about what may come next. "They're trying to say that they're going to plan the educational program for all Negro colleges. We may get sucked into anything," said Dr. Vivian Henderson, president of Clark College.

Student Apathy

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (CPS) — The president of Butler University, a small, private school here, is taking no chances that controversial speakers will appear on the campus.

When the student assembly, which helps run Butler's lecture series, made the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) statement on academic freedom part of its by-laws this month, President Alexander E. Jones said neither funds nor facilities would be available for the series unless its organizers signed an agreement not to bring controversial speakers in.

The AAUP statement says that no speaker should be banned because of his views. Late last year, Jones refused to adopt the statement as university policy, saying that it conflicted with Butler's constitution.

After Jones demanded a signed agreement, the Assembly met and voted to strike the AAUP statement from its by-laws, and pass it as a resolution instead.

This satisfied the president, who withdrew his demand for a signed agreement. Some members of the faculty were reportedly dismayed, however. Thomas Willey, a history professor, resigned as advisor to the assembly after its change of stance on the AAUP statement.

According to Rick Stout, editor of the student newspaper, the speaker ban has never been tested at Butler. The university's original charter, drawn up when Butler was under church sponsorship, says that no speakers will be allowed on campus if they preach immorality, hatred or speak in a manner contrary to Christian principles.

Halstead has claimed on several occasions during the past years that the differences between socialism and communism are slight. During a speech at the University of Houston, in fact, he stated that the Vietnam war is "creating more Communists in this country than I could in thirty years of agitation."

Society is commonly too cheap. We meet at very short intervals, not having had time to acquire any new value for each other. We meet at meals three times a day, and give each other a new taste of that old musty cheese that we are. We have had to agree on a certain set of rules, called etiquette and politeness, to make this frequent meeting tolerable, and that we need not come to open war.

Build A "Bond" Between White and Black

Maryville College, April 17, 1968. The visit of Mr. Julian Bond to the campus of Maryville College has finally fulfilled the promise of the Convocation Committee to bring in the best minds in the country to speak to our student body.

Speaking on the subject "Where Black Americans Find Themselves," Mr. Bond traced the relatively recent developments of the American Negro from the decision in 1954 (Brown vs. Board of Education, Topeka), through the period of the struggle for political freedom, and up to the present day. However, when he had brought us through all the trials of the past he, and implicitly many in the audience, found themselves in a position rather lacking in sufficiently directive words. In other words, where is one to go from here. When one is forced to recognize that after the right to eat, the right to an education, and the right to vote have been secured, and yet free America remains wallowing in its racism as deep as before; where is one to turn? Mr. Bond did not specifically tell us. It made it much easier for us that way. He would not, due to his own conscience, advocate violence. But for the same reason he could not condemn those who do. He implied a message to us all which might be summed up in the words of another important man speaking in a State of the Union message in January, 1968, only this time it seemed a bit more sincere—"Violence will not bring progress."

Mr. Bond rejected the typical interpretation of violence being something which the Negroes alone employ. He spoke of the violence of the status quo and in so doing sighted infant mortality rates in the United States and the proportional percentage of black soldiers vs. the relative percentage of white soldiers serving in Vietnam.

The war in Southeast Asia presented an ever-so-emphatic example of the domestic violence of the status quo (i.e. of us all), as Mr. Bond spoke in the Gunnar Myrdal tradition (see An International Economy) and carried the comparison of the American Negro and the underdeveloped peasant to its logical conclusion. On one hand our poverty program—on the other our pacification program. On one hand our local police—on the other "our" local militia. On one hand our riot control—on the other our bombs. We must ask ourselves — what do the next hands hold for non-whites, and then . . . for whites?

Don Hickman and Julian Bond

Mr. Bond wanted to stand up staunchly for non-violence, but could not, possibly lacking faith in his own beliefs. He told us, "There will be no peace until there is justice, and then there will be order . . . If our (black's) actions result in repressions on your (white's) part—then so be it."

BRITISH POET

Spender Speaks

Dr. Stephen Spender, the distinguished British poet, literary critic and co-editor of the famous review "Encounter," gave a public lecture at Maryville College Convocation this morning, at 9:50 a.m. in Wilson Chapel.

Dr. Spender just recently finished giving a series of lectures at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D. C. During 1965 and 1966 he was Consultant in Poetry in English at the Library of Congress. This past year he was a Research Fellow at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn. and lectured on the subject of British and American poetry at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

Since 1947, when he taught for a year at Sarah Lawrence College, Dr. Spender has frequently visited the United States. He was Ellison Professor at the University of California in 1959. In 1962 he gave three public lectures at the Library of Congress on the Modern Imagination. During the winter of 1963 he was visiting lecturer in a course in Modern Poetry at Northwestern University.

Dr. Stephen Spender

In 1962 he was made Commander of the British Empire, in the Honours' List on the Queen's birthday. He holds an honorary doctor of literature degree from the University of Montpelier. Dr. Spender was educated at University College School, London, and University College, Oxford. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa. While at Oxford, he became friends with W. H. Auden, who was also an undergraduate at that time. Later Auden, Cecil Day Lewis and Stephen Spender all published volumes of verse within a few years and their works and names became associated in the public mind.

During the 1930's, all three of them took up a strongly anti-Fascist attitude. Dr. Spender went to Spain on the side of the Spanish Republic during the Civil War. He also traveled in Germany, Austria and other countries where the events associated with that decade were history in the making.

During World War II, he was a fire fighter in the London National Fire Service. He also co-edited the Review "Horizon," with Cyril Connolly from 1939 through 1945. After the war, Dr. Spender traveled in Germany as a civilian military officer, and later became counsellor in the section of letters in UNESCO.

Dr. Spender has written an autobiography, World Within World, (1951). He has written Pastor Hall, (1939), Goethe's Mary tuart, (1959), and The Mary Stuart, (1959), and The Struggle of the Modern, (1962). He has also written New Signature, (1933); The Destructive Element, (1934); The Burning Cactus, (1935); Forward from Liberalism, (1936); The Trial of a Judge, (1937); The Backword Son, (1940); Ruins and Visions, (1942); Life and the Poet, (1942); Citizens in War and After, (1944); European Witness, (1946); Poems of Dedication, (1946); The Edge of Being, (1949).

Censorship Questioned

EDITORS LEAVE PAPER

GAINSVILLE, Fla. (CPS) — Five of the top editors on the student newspaper staff at the University of Florida have resigned in support of a board of publications decision to censor an editorial written by the chief editor.

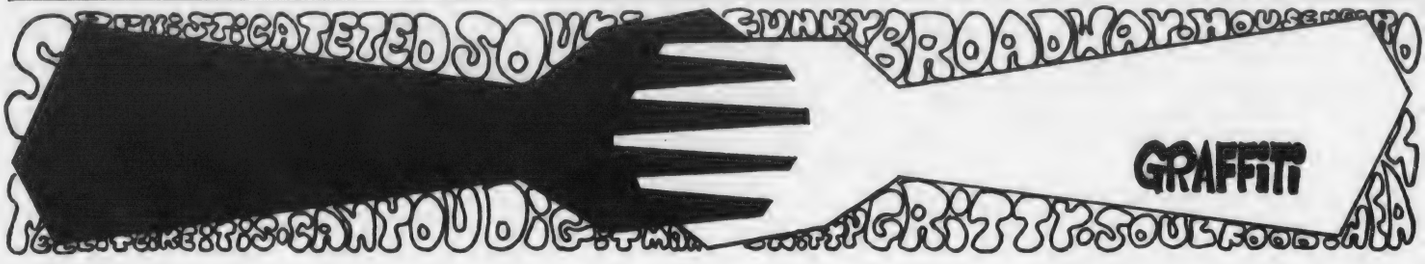
The editorial, written for the Florida Alligator by editor Steve Hull, strongly criticized the Florida administration for its tactics in seeking to deny tenure to controversial professor Dr. Marshall B. Jones. Commenting on a public hearing before a faculty committee studying the Jones case, the editorial charged the administration with "smear tactics" and "cruel and shocking treatment" of Dr. Jones.

The administration is attempting to deny tenure to Jones because of a speech he made advocating rebellion as the only means available to most people seeking social change, and on the basis of his participation in numerous civil rights demonstrations.

The editorial criticizing the administration was censored by the Alligator's faculty adviser, and Hull called an emergency meeting of the board of publications. The board, however, backed the adviser's decision, and instructed Hull to revise the editorial.

After Hull rewrote the editorial, five of his top editors told him they would quit if he published it. "I told them I thought I was right and that I intended to run the editorial," Hull said. "They walked out, and I had to put out the paper by myself." Hull said he had agreed to sign his name to the editorial — a policy not generally followed — but this did not seem to make any difference to the five editors.

After the editors quit, the revised editorial also was censored by the board of publications. Hull left white space on the editorial page, with the exception of the words, "Censored . . . For the Second Straight Day." Hull issued a plea for students interested in preserving a free press to apply for the Alligator staff. He said 80 students applied the next day.



At a third meeting, the board of publications decided to let Hull publish the revised editorial because board regulations say an editorial can be censored before publication only if it is illegal, obscene, or libelous. The board agreed the editorial did not meet any of the three conditions.

The five editors who resigned appeared before the board and charged Hull with being egotistical and said he endorsed a candidate in the student government elections after saying he would remain impartial. The five also said Hull made a "ridiculous proposal that students should be placed on the faculty senate."

The editors who resigned were the managing editor, executive editor, news editor, sports editor, and the assistant news editor. Hull said none of the five had attended the meeting about which he was commenting in the editorial.

Meeting Held

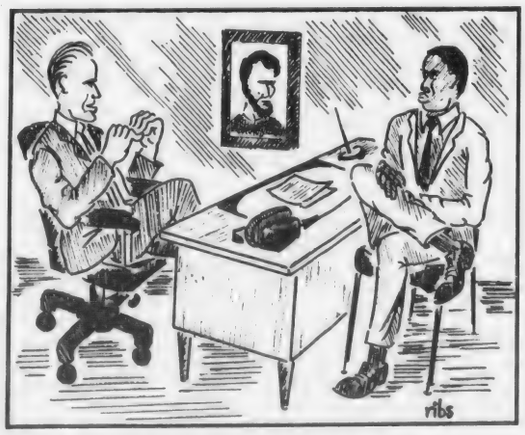
MARYVILLE, TENNESSEE APRIL 19, 1968. A group of sixteen people from Maryville College and the Negro community met Friday, April 19, 1968 in an attempt to re-establish communication between the college and the Negro community. Close communication between these two groups had been maintained up until four years ago through an inter-racial prayer group, and it was felt that friendship and cooperation should be re-activated. Various ways of broadening cooperation and fellowship between the two communities were discussed. The group decided to meet again on Friday, April 26th to continue the discussion and to invite other interested people to join them.

WHITE . . .

"But are there not many fascists in your country?"
"There are many who do not know they are fascists but will find it out when the time comes."

Ernest Hemingway
For Whom The Bell Tolls

The United States has never been forced to deal with a major threat of facism. Our democracy has remained moderate through many periods of external conflict, maintaining a balance between liberal and conservative forces and with standing pressures toward totalitarianism. The current internal disruption of our nation, however, threatens to destroy the political equilibrium and allow the pendulum to swing far to the right. Formerly the tendency toward fascism came from such lunatic fringe elements as the Ku Klux Klan or the John Birch Society. These bumbling groups of frightened children cloaked their neuroses in super-patriotism, but ruined any chance for effectiveness through the virulence of their hatred.



A far more serious problem is posed by the growing reaction of the "moderate" groups within the country to the riots in our cities. The call for more stringent measures by the police to curb lawlessness borders upon a call for a subtly-instituted police state. Justice is being sacrificed in favor of order. The law is not equal to justice, but is merely one means of obtaining it; yet more and more "decent" people are equating the two. Mayor Daly of Chicago has ordered his chief of police to have his men shoot to kill suspected arsonists on sight. The fact that this violates the accused's right to a trial seems to have eluded Mr. Daly's keen political mind. He faces the spector of a blazing Chicago set afire by hundreds of black Mrs. O'Learys and he reacts with a heavy-handed attempt to keep order at all costs.

This grasping for the simplistic solution and ignoring of the causal conditions is unfortunately a common reaction to our urban crisis. Governor Ellington's over-committment of the National Guard after Dr. King's assassination indicates this problem is not confined to the big Northern cities. Every person has within him a drive for security and he becomes frightened when this drive is thwarted, so the fear growing out of anticipation of another long, hot summer is fertile ground for insipid fascist thought. In a time of crisis most men will seek order at the expense of civil rights—but these rights, once abandoned, are extremely difficult to recover. The military establishment is founded upon the twin principles of obedience and docility, both comforting goals in chaos, and it is this military mentality which currently threatens to make fascism a popular answer to the present difficulty.

It is common to attribute urban riots to some type of conspiracy. In fact there is a conspiracy behind the riots—but it is a conspiracy, not of communists, but a conspiracy of silence of the whites when confronted with injustice to the blacks. This conspiracy now threatens to be broken in a tragic way. The moderates are at last crying out, but it is order, not justice, for which they cry. The problems which give rise to the frustration which leads to rioting will not be solved by bullets. A bullet cannot be recalled—it cannot be reasoned with—it cannot heal, only wound, and it is the heart of America at which it is directed. We must be ever vigilant against the temptation to allow the police or military to solve problems of a social or political nature. The "cop mentality" is a very real phenomenon.

A fascist take-over here?, Ridiculous. But that's what they said in Germany, and Greece—the birthplace of democracy.

Why do men fight —
'Til their faces are bloody with pain and anguish?
'Til their homes are destroyed?
'Til their children are maimed?
After every vain hope has been lost, crushed, or buried,
From where do they draw that last breath of courage?
To flee —
From that death stench hot on their trails —
The dogs, the fire, machine guns, barbed wire!
Ahhhhhh, the peace.
The peace of little wooden

In the shadow of an ugly

What peace is this — found in Perhaps there is but one peace—

Peace of mind
Peace of spirit
Perhaps they would be free?

. . . MEETS BLACK

Burning, looting, shooting—Who said that violence was not as American as cherry pie? From Saigon to Newark to Washington, D. C., ferocity tears at the basic premises of our most cherished documents (at least I have heard that Americans value the Constitution, The Bill of Rights, etc.). I often wonder when we as a nation are going to abide by the social norms that we created? I am asking the same question that many other concerned persons are asking: "Where do we go from here?"

When I look back upon the occurrences of the past few weeks, the only thing that I can conclude is that I am thankful that J.F.K.'s assassin was not a black man. America is so close to a major racial confrontation that to deny this fact could be likened to denying that George Wallace is racist. Just as the situation is developing in Middle Eastern countries, American cities are engaging in an arms race. Everyone already knows what the outcome of such a confrontation in America would be—but why should a nation that can afford to spend over one million dollars a day in a foreign country for militaristic purposes have to even consider a class war, racial war (call it what you like) at home when it possesses the wealth and other resources necessary for eliminating the underlying roots to this problem? The National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders stated the situation this way: "this nation will deserve neither safety nor progress unless it can demonstrate the wisdom and the will to undertake decisive action against the root causes of racial disorder." The "root causes" is white racism and apathy. It is a harsh judgement, but true.

Though job opportunities are probably the master key for solving the inadequacies that exist in the black community, we cannot overlook the role that education has to play. It is indispensable that opportunities for interaction between the races be expanded. Integration as an educational strategy then, is both essential and imperative to the future of the American society. Because of the ghetto's organization many children will not, within their school careers, attend integrated schools unless the defacto segregated institution (such as Maryville) reaches out to these people. Education could be used to combat both black racism and white prejudicness. Interaction of the races through education seems to be a possibility within our immediate grasp. It seems rather trivial, then, for black students at Knoxville College to sit angrily on their Presbyterian supported campus and talk about what needs to be done; while white students at Maryville sit apathetically on their Presbyterian supported campus and say similar things. A dialogue seems necessary and essential in this area. And, everyone knows that black students have given up on the idea of trying to prove anything to that segment of white America that is apathetic. That is, everyone except five black students here at Maryville who catch Hell nine months out of the year attempting to show somebody?? that integration and interaction of the races have possibilities. This situation limits "We Five's" power and influence; be that power and influence white or black.

The course taken by America (and particularly Maryville's America) will be determined by the priority placed on the situation. Maryville possesses a genuine interest in solving the inadequacies in our society, but let's hope that Maryville doesn't play what is called the vicious circle in Congress. Congress considers the problem to be a local one and should be handled by local mayors and police. Does Maryville consider interaction and integration a local problem to be solved by the particular locale in question?

Meanwhile the vicious summer approaches again.

Faculty Forum

In my opinion the race issue presents the most serious challenge to democracy facing us today. For it is not a problem of us versus them, or it, as in the case of "creeping Communism," or leaping technology, but a case of us versus ourselves: a struggle to regain the faith and vision which founded this country and which are badly needed to keep it going as a democratic institution. Freedom in any meaningful sense is not possible without acceptance of the idea that "all men are created equal" with respect to rights. But if the strength of such a statement is judged by the actions of people who supposedly accept this principle and would die for it, then it is obvious that for the most part, the principle has no practical significance. If this principle were accepted, for example, then integration wouldn't even need to be discussed; we would no more question the right of a negro to receive public education on par with that we have obtained, or the right to buy any home he could afford, than we would the right of an English immigrant to the same opportunities. To turn the argument around, continued segregation and discrimination represents the continuing and increasing failure of democracy.

The time to meet the challenge is now. Will Maryville College play any part in trying to solve the problem of racial injustice, or shall we concentrate only on continuing to build a good curriculum for middle-class white students? It is true enough that there may be little we can do about the problems facing the majority of negroes which need immediate solutions, such as more and better jobs, development of black racial pride, better housing, continued voter registration, and better education at all levels. The college does have some opportunities to show leadership in the education area, either through extensive summer programs, such as the Upward Bound program, through long range tutoring programs, or through campus programs operating during the normal school year. However, it seems reasonable to assume that such programs, important though they might be, would not involve the college directly in breaking down barriers to an integrated society.

I feel that the essential long range goal which must be pursued is an integrated (perhaps a less forced word would be open) society, essential if we are interested in preserving a democratic philosophy. Colleges live for long range goals, so what contribution could Maryville make to this one? There are several obvious possibilities which I will deal with.

1) A significant increase in negro student enrollment. Maryville College in practice is definitely not integrated, as anyone can see who gets his nose out of the catalog. However sincere the effort to recruit negro students has been, it has not been enough. Although it is too late to do anything for next year I'm told, we should be making a strong effort to recruit at least 50 negro students for the fall of 1969, with increasing numbers thereafter. More "qualified" applicants might be found if more scholarship money were made available and if more predominantly negro schools were visited by recruiters (how many are visited now as compared with predominantly white schools?). Another resource that certainly should be utilized is that of students, several of whom have been interested in recruiting during holidays. Why not free one or two interested students for a summer for example, giving them reasonable pay and travel expenses, to recruit? There could hardly be a better investment either in terms of dealing with this specific problem or with the problem of recruitment in general.

2) Exchanges with Knoxville College

It is sobering to consider that "Christian" as well as "democratic" enlightenment is reflected in the separate but equal existance of Maryville and Knoxville Colleges. To begin to deal with this artificial situation, some student exchange programs were put in operation a few years ago but have since stopped. These programs should be renewed and increased in scope, if possible. The possibility of exchanging some classes and professors deserves careful exploration. The joint sponsorship of and attendance at various seminars and convocations should also be very beneficial to both colleges, academically and socially.

3) Work-study programs in urban, and other, poverty areas.

It is impossible to deal with problems before anything is known about them. Many people, including Julian Bond, have said that colleges such as ours can "do something" by making their students aware of the social problems facing people in urban poverty areas in particular. Awareness more than anything else will lead to action; if one really knows that infant mortality is far higher than normal in the urban ghetto, he will want to do something. Or am I optomistic? Our interim period should provide opportunity for going to study. work and live in or near urban poverty areas for those who are interested in doing so, and all possibilitities in this area should be developed.

4) Work within the Maryville Community. We owe to the larger community in this area as full an explanation as we can give of our reasons for pursuing the course we choose to. After some of the local reaction to that almost inaudible Firebrand Julian Bond, I have no doubt that the programs I have mentioned would generate further local feeling against us. It is also possible that support from some other quarters might be strengthened, however. I face such possibilities not with the question of whether this forces us to abandon progressive goals but with the question of what can be done to lessen negative reaction. I think we can best do this by communicating as fully and as honestly as we can with the surrounding community. Television programs have given us some opportunity in this direction, but we need, in addition, to develop situations which provide regular chances for dialogue with people in the community, perhaps along the lines of a public or a televised forum. It will certainly be far better to let concerned people know directly what is going on than to let them get the word second-, third-, or KKK-hand. Although I cannot give expert advice on how to achieve such communication, it is obviously important that it be maximized, both to maintain local support for the college and to exercise any influence which we may eventually have on the lives of those outside of the college.

DRAFT PROPOSALS

WASHINGTON (CPS) — All three of the Democratic candidates for President favor some form of random selection as a substitute for the present draft system, but all three have slightly different proposals.

Republican candidate Richard Nixon favors abolition of the draft and institution of a volunteer army after the war in Vietnam.

These positions were set forth in response to a National Student Association query of the four leading candidates on four major issues of special interest to students—the draft, lowering the voting age, higher education, and the role of youth in society. NSA also asked New York Governor Nelson Rockefeller for statements on the issues but they were told that he is not a candidate and that position statements were not available.

On the draft, Vice President Hubert Humphrey favors adoption of the Fair and Impartial Random (FAIR) system proposed by President Johnson last year but rejected by Congress. It would include a lottery and drafting of the youngest first.

New York Senator Robert Kennedy wants a study of various proposals for a random system, drafting the youngest first, and experimentation with a system of alternative service. He also called for rescinding of provision of the 1967 Selective Service Act which contradicted an earlier Supreme Court decision on conscientious objection. The new law requires that a conscientious objector show that he is opposed to wars because of his religious training. Kennedy said a change would "protect people whose conscientious objection is not based on traditional religious grounds."

Minnesota Senator Eugene McCarthy favors elimination of deferments, permitting concientious objection to particular wars, permitting conscientious objection "on rational as well as religious grounds," and allowing a person appealing a classification to have personal appearances at all levels, instead of just the local board as at present. McCarthy also opposed the present system of autonomous local boards and Selective Service Director Lewis Hershey's memorandum of October, 1967, which recommended that anti-war and anti-draft protesters be reclassified and inducted as soon as possible.

All four candidates favored lowering the voting to 18 and said youth was important in dealing with American problems.

Freshman Notice

When the present policy of voluntary class attendance for upperclassmen was adopted last spring, it was with the hope that it might eventually be extended to include all students. The Faculty Committee on Attendance and the Executive Council have now evaluated the success of this policy and have decided to make it applicable to freshmen as well as upperclassmen and to be effective immediately. Each student is now responsible to the faculty member concerned for his class attendance and his participation. Specific requirements for each course will be determined by the instructor and made known to the class.

Spock

BOSTON (CPS) — A Federal judge has ruled that arguments relating to the illegality of the Vietnam war cannot be used in defense of the five men indicted for counseling draft resistance.

Judge Francis J. W. Ford made his ruling after he heard arguments from Justice Department attorneys and attorneys for the five, Pediatrician Dr. Benjamin Spock, Yale University Chaplain Rev. William Sloane Coffin, author Mitchell Goodman, former White House advisor Marcus Rasking, and Harvard graduate student Michael Ferber.

No date has as yet been set for the trial of the five, who are charged with violating provisions of the Selective Service Act which make it illegal to counsel others to resist the draft.

Lawyers for the five are expected to base their defense around two principle points—First Amendment guarantees of freedom of speech and the argument that the draft is illegal under the 14th Amendment, which prohibits involuntary servitude.

The preliminary hearing Wednesday resulted in new manifestations of support for the five, although there were no demonstrations at the hearing itself. A group which has been circulating a petition in their support announced that it had 22,700 signatures on the petition. Signers include the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

A three-page ad in the April 15 New York Times, signed by 9,300 elementary, secondary, and college teachers, also supported the five.

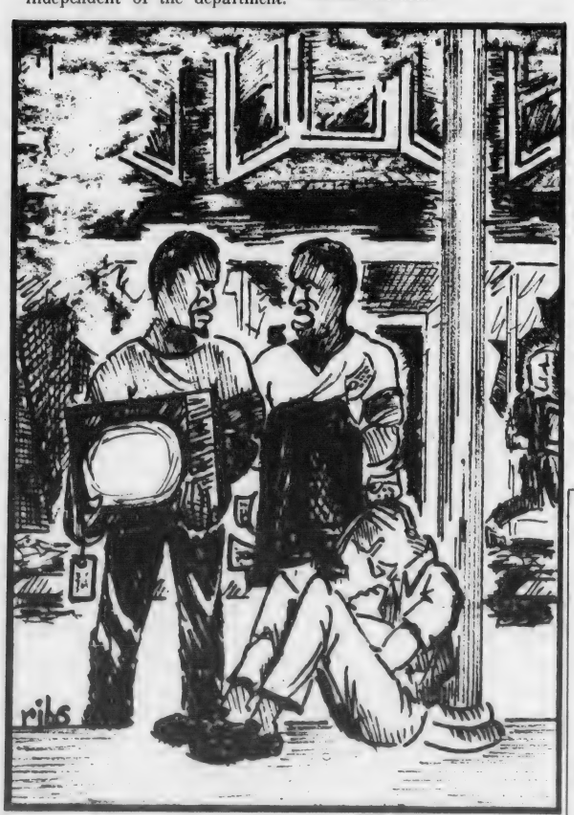
As this particular issue of the Echo is dedicated to a certain situation on our own campus, this column on fine arts will be logically dedicated to the state of the fine arts at MC.

In the Fine Arts Department itself, MC has one of the potentially great faculties and student groups on campus. When this collection gets the urge, they can do amazing things. Like produce a well done and quite moving drama on a very small budget (A View from the Bridge). Possibly all the segments of the department, music, drama, visual arts, could get together and produce something larger—a musical, or perhaps an opera. (It might be noted here that several students, under the direction of Karen Roewade, are preparing an operatic excerpt for public presentation later this spring.) The potential is there now, but there is an element within the department just selfish enough and quite strong enough to put the veto to any such undertaking. And now, because of that same element, the MC Fine Arts Department is going to lose some of the best young talent it has. But, I suppose it doesn't really matter, because the choir, bless its heart, will always exist, and that, according to some people, is all the fine arts MC needs.



As for the rest of the campus, I tend to think the fine arts are being neglected. Hidden away in the dark corners of Dorms I-III, Lloyd, etc., people, students (maybe even you know some) are writing, singing, painting and playing without any sort of public recognition. I will not contend that all of these aesthetic recluses are great talents, not quite that, but the talent does exist and if given the proper chance it could make itself known.

Where will these people get their recognition? For those who write, first I would suggest that this newspaper make more room for worthwhile original creative writing. Secondly since the Echo doesn't really have room to print everything that might be submitted, I suggest that either the Echo staff or the English Department sponsor a campus wide writing contest and put the best entries in a special booklet-type publication. As for those in other arts, there are student recitals, art shows, and other things connected with the F.A. Department. There should be more of these, and if possible some of them independent of the department.

Lastly, there is the Lantern. The Lantern is one of the most valuable but most highly neglected assets on the MC Campus. That little hole in the library wall could be used for a multitude of artful happenings, if someone in UCCF would get on the ball. Or if the student body would decide that it might make good use of it, instead of condemning it as a hippie hangout. There have been some fine programs in the Lantern this year —folk music, dramatic readings, discussions—but they have been too few and all too far between. And lately, due to someone's own personal hangup, the Lantern has simply wasted away, not being open at all.

The improvement of the arts at MC requires that faculty and administration resolve some of their differences, that students are given the chance to make wider use of their creative abilities and that the students take advantage of these creative opportunities.

So, friends, let's move it. Life is nothing, less than nothing, without the arts.

Baseball in Brief

The Scots' baseball team has had a good start this year. With their record now seven wins, six loses and one tie, they have a good foundation on which they can build a winning season.

High scoring has been the highlight of the past few games. Most recently the Scots defeated Calvary College in a double header, winning the first game 17-0 and the second 13-3, both in five innings.

Pitching has been pretty good this year, and has been helped a lot by a strong outfield and a well coordinated infield. The team works well together, which is a sign of a strong ball team.

There are ten scheduled games left on the roster, with a possible two make-up games. Seven of these games are scheduled to be played on the Scots' home field. Support has been good, but there is plenty more room out there for more. The team wants your support.

Go get 'em Scots!

TENNIS

MC netters have started off the season thus far with a record of 4-5. The team has been helped greatly by Sam Ferguson, a Soph. transfer from UT. Sam thus far has a record of 7-2, the best won-lost record on the squad.

The positions on the team are Parks No. 1, Ferguson No. 2, Marshal No. 3, Sankner No. 4, Abel No. 5, and Blackwood No. 6. In doubles Parks and Marshal pair off, Ferguson and Abel and Sankner and Blackwood.

Of the four wins that the netters have two of the wins have been impressive 9-0 defeats. The Scots have had three home games this week, the final ones of the season.

Age is no better, hardly so well, qualified for an instructor as youth, for it has not profited so much as it has lost. One may almost doubt if the wisest man has learned anything of absolute value by living. Practically, the old have no very important advice to give the young, their own experience has been so partial, and their lives have been such miserable failures . . .

NEW "COMMUNITY" FOR MC

For my money, Maryville College has just taken a huge leap into the front ranks of American colleges. The recent action of the Executive Council, taken after much hard thinking about Maryville's future, has eliminated most of the things which have made it impossible for many to recommend MC enthusiastically to really good students.

The most significant of all, for the long run, was the approval of an all college council in which all members of the community have an elected voice in the real campus government. No longer can we complain that we do not feel a respect for some regulations because we did not establish them.

The responsibility of the student body obviously is expanded. We must be prepared to know what is really going on if we are to make any responsible decisions. That is not as simple as it sounds.

Next year will be vital. The cars and the no hours demand planning and (ugh) discipline. If we decide to flunk out, it will be easier, and more fun.

This could go on forever. Maryville has decided to really try to be the best. She will need a lot of help, but the attitude is here. Everybody will need everybody else's help.

This has been an interesting year for student government. We have succeeded in generating enough help to do things which some of you did not think were possible.

Doug (who has had his freedom of the press taken away by one of the more enlightened of our students) wanted to say he has seen all of you in chapel as much as he wants to. So have I.

We've enjoyed trying to help. Thank you for your patience and support.

—Doug Gamble

Scholarships Awarded

Four area high school students have received half-tuition grants to Maryville College for the next school year, 1968-69, for being the valedictorian or salutatorian of their senior class.

The valedictorians are: Ondis Bible, Lanier High School, Richard M. Hill, Greenback High School, and Michael B. Montgomery, Holston High School.

The salutatorian is Miss Gaynell Harless Friendsville High.

GLASSE COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

The Rev. Dr. James D. Glasse, Professor of Practical Theology and Director of Church and College Relations the Divinity School at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., will deliver the main address at Maryville College's 149 Commencement exercises Monday morning, June 3 at 10:30 a.m. in Wilson Chapel.

Dr. Glasse was born on January 8, 1924, in Prosser, Wash. He graduated from high school in Juneau, Alaska and attended Willamette University in Salem, Ore. After service in the U.S. Army Air Force, he graduated from Occidental College in Los Angeles, Calif. He earned the Bachelor of Divinity degree at Yale University and was awarded the Doctor of Divinity degree by Occidental College.

In 1950 he was ordained by the Presbytery of Connecticut Valley and held pastorates in North Carolina and Tennessee. He has served the United Presbyterian Church as Moderator of Holston and Nashville Presbyteries, Chairman of the Mid-South Synod Committee on Church-Related Colleges, and member of the Board of National Missions.

He has been active in ecumenical affairs, having been appointed to the Executive Committee of the Tennessee Council of Churches, the Department of Church Renewal of the National Council of Churches, and the Executive Committee of the National Cooperative Enlistment Project.

Dr. Glasse

Professor Glasse previously taught at Warren Wilson College, Swannanoa, N. C., and Tusculum College, Greeneville, Tenn. From 1953-56 he was Assistant Director of Field Work and Director of Professional Studies at Yale Divinity School. Since 1956 he has been on the faculty of Vanderbilt University.

He is President of the Association of Seminary Professors in the Practical Fields, a member of the Association of American University Professors, and an Associate of the Ministry Studies Board.

Dr. Glasse is a contributing editor of "Presbyterian Outlook," author of the book, "Profession: Minister," and contributes regularly to religious and professional publications.

MC Joins NSA

The student government of Maryville College has recently become affiliated with NSA, the National Student Association, which is a nation-wide confederation of student governments.

NSA operates on four premises: student rights, student welfare. student power, and student involvement. Included in student rights are free access, free speech, and guarantees of due process. Regarding student welfare, NSA attempts to lower costs for students in ". . . economic markets outside of the campus." Student power is defined as the importance of the role students have in the decision-making processes of their schools. Student involvement includes student responsibility to become aware of and involved in politicial activities. While NSA does not endorse candidates, it does provide a forum for debate on political questions and it attempts to educate students politically by campus programs.

A National Student Congress meets for two weeks each summer, to make policy, discuss programming, and elect officers for the coming year.

Grants for MC

A gift of $250,000 has been made to Maryville College by former Professor Edmund Wayne Davis in the name of his late wife Ella and himself, President Joseph J. Copeland announced today.

The gift, made to the 150 fund, will help underwrite the announced $3,000,000 needed for construction of a new library, health and physical education building, renovation of Thaw Hall for a student center, and upgraded faculty salaries and student scholarships.

Professor Davis retired in 1950 from the Maryville College faculty after teaching here for 34 years. He resides now in Asbury Acres, the Methodist Home for the Retired. At 92 years of age, Professor Davis is the oldest living faculty member of Maryville College. He is alert and active and attends campus meetings often.

While at Maryville College, Professor Davis taught Greek and Latin and was Secretary of the Faculty.

My Aim in Life is Happiness

The Alcoa Foundation has made two grants of $3,000 each to Maryville College, Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of the College, announced today.

The first grant is for unrestricted purposes and represents a $600 increase over last year's gift.

The second grant is restricted for scholarship purposes and will continue for another year a program of recognizing an outstanding freshman, sophomore, and junior at the College. Each scholarship is worth $750 and is to be awarded to one of the top five students in each class. The students must display scholarly achievement in the classroom, leadership in extra-curricular activties, and responsible campus citizenship.

Students currently receiving the award are Steve Horning, Indianapolis, Ind. sophomore; James Reynolds, Wallingford, Pa. junior; and Scribner Messenger, Bartlesville, Okla. senior.

The recipients for the 1968-69 award will be selected during the summer and notified by the Scholarship Committee.

On Thursday, May 23, during the chapel period, the Special Committee on Community Life and Structure made its first report to the entire community. President Copeland, who presided, reviewed the charge to the Committee and expressed appreciation to those who had laid the groundwork for the report. Three other members of the Committee dealt specifically with three major recommendations acted upon by the Executive Council on May 22. The recommendations called for changes in community government, in the chapel-convocation program, and in social regulations.

Characterizing the spirit of the report were such phrases as "responsibility accompanied by accountability," "mutual concern for the members of the community," and "wider involvement in its total, integrated life." Optimism regarding Maryville's potential was clearly evident in these projections for the kind of involvement that few colleges have attempted and none, as far as can be determined, has fully achieved.

Only a Beginning

Although the report was described as only a beginning, it represented the culmination of a period of intensive work by approximately fifty people. Students, faculty, administration, and the Board of Directors were all represented. The Special Committee, appointed at the request of the Board, had been asked to study every phase of community life and structure in view of the stated purpose of the College and to make recommendations for changes that would enhance the achievement of the purpose.

Four subcommittees were assigned to the areas of religion, standards, social-physical-recreational life, and special concerns. From reports submitted by the subcommittees and from its own study and deliberations, the Special Committee formulated the recommendations that were acted upon by the Executive Council in a called meeting on May 22.

All College Council

Gary Meyer, member of the Special Committee, reported approval by the Executive Council of the concept of an All College Council to be composed of students, faculty, and administrative officers. Its function will be to act upon matters relating to the life of the entire community and to seek to interpret and enhance the overall purpose of the College, under the purpose and objectives established by the Board of Directors. Under the plan approved by the Executive Council, the Special Committee has been empowered to explore the details regarding the composition and function of this Council. It will also recommend a plan for the structuring of subcouncils and committees.

The major problem, Mr. Meyer pointed out, will be to establish a practical balance in representation between the continuing membership and the transient membership of the community, and to attempt to ensure representation of those who will have the chief responsibility for implementing the decisions.

Faculty Participation Crucial

Dr. Young also emphasized that faculty attendance would be crucial to the success of this program, adding: "If we do not participate as fully as the students, we are witnessing to the fact that the program is not vital and not important to our life together as a college . . . It seems to me that there is real cause to be excited by this concept of

The balance of the grant, $750 will be used by the College for three $250 unrestricted grants.

Roy Fisher, Manager of Alcoa's Tennessee Operations, presented the checks to Dr. Copeland, Maryville College President. Mr. Fisher said, "Our company and the Alcoa Foundation has a very high regard for the important work being done at Maryville College, and we are very happy to have a part in helping to support it."

In addition to this $6,000, the College will share in a grant of $1,600 which Mr. Fisher also presented to Dr. Copeland as the representative of the Affiliated Independent Colleges of Tennessee. Under this program, eleven private schools receive assistance from business and industry in Tennessee.

"Issue: EXIT" has finally arrived for this school year, and once more the Editor finds himself sitting down to the typewriter with the psychedelic-like flashes of literally hundreds of ideas, ideals, wishes, frustrations, fears, and anxieties of this year, the future, the past, Maryville College, friends, enemies, and readers. In this state of affairs, I feel that I must accomplish, or attempt to accomplish, the things which still weigh on my mind after some very busy terms as an editor and student at MC. The feeling caused by realizing that another paper (or another chance) is non-existent is one of impotency. Therefore, some comments, important situations, I hope.

First, the face-lifted Maryville of Fall, 1967, has done another amazing thing. The unified, inter-related ideal of this year's new curriculum has been allowed to spread in one short year (and those very familiar with MC know how short a year can be in attempting change) to every facet of the college community. The drastic measures as announced last week (see page one) are certain to place Maryville in the realm which they have aspired to for who knows how long. The all-college council promises to co-ordinate the continuity which has been a long-yearned for thing in MC life. The subordinate ideas in addition to this council also place us closer to the freedom which everyone at Maryville has been talking about for so long.

It will be quite a spectacle to observe the ramifications which these changes are sure to ignite. As the Editor of a college publication which has hoped to stir interest in some of the most pressing problems of the times both at MC and in the world, I will be interested to watch the reaction as each person in the community (not just the student or just the professor or just the dean) undergoes the arduous task of re-defining his position in the MC community.

On one hand the scene would appear to be hopeful. Without any other level of inference, I thank gratefully the members of the community whose images of MC have been seriously altered and who have accepted what has been called the "most drastic change in 50 years" with understanding and optimism.

On the other hand, however, I turn a suspicious eye to the element which will not show the honesty, integrity, or responsibility that the community emphasis will demand. First the member needs to analyze carefully the situation in which he finds himself, and how he must respond if he remains a part of Maryville College. My experience with the newspaper has made me extremely aware of the necessity for this response. At the beginning of my editorship I had to decide that I could not and would not edit what would amount to a newsletter, catering to sheer reporting of last weekend's hike which would bring tears of reminiscence to the thirteen people who hiked.

For this decision I have been severely criticized. The Echo has not covered the news, we hear. What is there then about civil rights, Vietnam, the draft, and national politics which do not concern every single member of the college community? Is Maryville really just a security from the big, bad, real world out there? I think not. Maryville must and will face what is going on outside Circle Drive. The key is communication—the very word which I have used to define the Echo in preference to "news."

It is in this communication that the responsibility is involved. My suspicion is not any better supported than by the rumors that circulated several weeks ago, accusing the Echo of with-holding articles which did not express the views of the editor and the advisor. These accusations were ludicruous. The fact that the supposed letter writers would never confront me personally assures, I believe, the reliability of the rumors. This type of non-communication is the plague of an institution dedicated to the community-idea like Maryville College.

Let us then look at the situation again. Some very perceptive people have created a structure which emphasizes each person's place in the community. Each person must bear the responsibility of his place in that community. Each person in the status of academic must let his personal integrity assure his place in this college. For those who are worried about pride in Maryville: this is what will produce real pride for the members of an ACADEMIC INSTITUTION. What greater pride can one possess than that which he receives from something he has created himself? The responsibility is in each person's hands. The individual's role can no longer be compromised.

Believe it or not, some of the "negative element" on campus really do wish that they were going to be involved in "community issues and values," Maryville College, Fall, 1968.

NAUSEA

b. c.

No, the title of this column has had nothing to do with our food, Miss Ware. Wrong, it is not a word that is repulsive and therefore fitting for my confusing rebellion. I thank Jean-Paul Sartre for the term. Through the emotive poems that I have presented this year, I have tried to illustrate what that terrible feeling of nausea is. It is the absurd gap between what we live and our true realization of our frightening existence. Some of the poems have attempted to bridge the gap. They will return next year . . .

It is difficult to get the news from poems yet men die miserably every day for lack of what is found there.

Reflections on Poor Peoples' March

The Poor People's March in Knoxville May 9, 1968. Five concerned students, one professor, one seminary student from Maryville helped to host.

Hundreds of poor people, many songs, timely speeches.

". . . Lyndon, you think that you have it tough with the many protests, well when I was president I couldn't even drive down a Texas road . . ."

". . . woke up this morning with my mind set on freedom . . ." A Memphis gang leader who changed his gang from violent to non-violence said . . .

". . . this Poor People's March and non-violence is like penicillin. We are harmless . . . but we are powerful. If we don't cure our country at least we will scare the hell out of it . . ."

A nation as rich as ours needs a dramatic march on its capitol to realize that there are millions in this country, black, white, and red, that are hungry. This country can do something about it too. They are going to Washington to tell them so.

". . . some of those senators have been there for thirty years, and they told me, 'no don't come, you can't come' . . . well they have been there for thirty years, it's time I went there for a while . . ."

". . . sock soul, sock soul, sock soul . . ."

WE SHALL OVERCOME

As next year's editor of The Highland Echo I am making a pledge along with my staff to make the paper an even better paper. We will keep Graffiti, if you will. I will write less, if you, the community (faculty, students, and staff) will write more. I will do everything in my power to enforce dialogue. But you must do your part.

We at Maryville found this year that we do not have the community that we thought we had. We now have the vehicle to provide for that unique community and therefore the paper will be one of the most vital organs of the community. It will be balanced. As this year, we will print anything submitted (space permitting). But to maintain dialogue more has to be submitted from the community. Then we will truly have the best of student publications. My staff and I will write, but most important we will organize what the community has written. The news writes itself. We will move straight ahead.

LETTERS

TO THE COMMUNITY:

This is Maryville on the verge. Few will deny that 1968 has been a year of evolution for the Maryville community. Most of us, I think, have sensed an experience of happening, have achieved significant depth in unexpected directions. Review just once our calendars and see the new patterns emerging. Bare suggestions from last year have sent out sturdy roots.

We cannot forget, though, a drowsy atmosphere that has from time to time sapped the energy from new ideas, nor should we excuse our hobitual reluctance to support ambition and bold projects. We have not persisted. Now, this summer, is the time to make use of insight from 1968. We have a glimpse of exciting possibility, and we are fashioning expressions of our plans. Let our vision mount a swift vehicle.

For many of us, serious flaws in academic, management, and social structures have been acute frustrations. At Maryville, we are ultimately alone with confrontations that are elsewhere glossed over. What community we nurture can encourage decision, but cannot itself decide issues for us. Next year our challenge will be insistent: we will determine not only our general direction, but also our mode of transport. All of us have a stake in the experiment of this College, and we must dig in or cop out. Leadership is yet to be encouraged, but that will come; the base of leadership in societies, sports, scholarship, worship, the arts, and in expression is to be widened. Of highest value at this College is integrity, a sense of purpose beyond the study major. Understand your leaders and you understand that the prime of Maryville's output are philosophers of varied disciplines.

Next year promises much. A few more bugs in curriculum, social planning, and methods of confrontation will have been driven out. Opportunity for greater participation, for growth and travel, is genuine. Those returning with rare experience will contribute much. That this newspaper will have news to report is probable. Channels will open up. And growing with Maryville will be tougher. Some dedicated humans work vigorously because they think their College is unique. Ask them why. Then answer questions the college-bound put to you. We have real work to do now, and we should invite the ambitious to help; it is real people we appreciate on this campus.

To our brethren,

Biologically in terms of both physical and mental capabilities no race or ethnic group is superior to any other. We as white men hold this statement to be true, but we believe that the white race, while neither biologically superior nor inferior, is morally inferior. Acts in the distant and near past prove this to be true. We feel that we as white men have an obligation to raise our race to a higher level of morality.

Our attempt to raise white morality is based on the concept that violence can only be justified when all possible non-violent means have been utilized with fruitless results. This concept, it will be noted, is not adhered to by our racist "brethren," but they pay tribute to the same principle every July 4. We feel that by following this concept in our endeavour to raise the white man to a more moral level we are working not only for the benefit of non-whites, but for the benefits of the total white race.

White racism has in the past and will in the future not only morally degrade the white man, but very possibly destroy him physically. The white man does not hold a majority in the world. The non-white nations are not only growing in number, but in power. White racism in America does not only endanger us domestically, but hurts us abroad an increases anti-white American resentment. The white racist might fulfill his dream of battling non-whites unilaterally in the future. We wonder if he will then realize his folly and acknowledge his biological equality and numerical inferiority. At such a time we feel he will regret his present low morality.

We write this letter not as "nigger-lovers," but as lovers of humanity. We hope that white America and the white race will realize the immoral and ruinous position it has placed itself in. If we fail to face this point we may consider ourselves well on the way to a world war, not between the "Commies" and "freedom-loving" Americans, but between whites and non-whites.

REMEMBRANCE

We walked through puddles of black water, still as cold coffee . . . felt the thread-thin rain blister on our faces and in our hair . . .
walked the midnight to still sleep and talked of god and chance and future . . . those days of undergraduate concern, my love, have riddled deep into my drowsing will, have become the me I talk about when I am all alone.
Listen. I hear night rain shake its air and old November is cranking up to start.
This is our time. Remember? Always, an earnest young girl in a tawny raincoat is walking slowly toward me . . . her breath is visible in the night, her loving palpable.
The lovely girl with thin drops of moisture on her hairtips and eyes that sound happy in the drizzle, brings back thoughts of god and chance and time's cold cheating and I hear you always speaking my single name beneath the squeak of the rain's small wheels.

Students Found Conservative

In spite of a reputation for vigorous protest, toppling governments, and confrontation politics, students are a very conservative group, DAEDALUS, the Journal of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, points out in a special issue on "Students and Politics." The winter issue is devoted to an analysis of student groups all over the world. (Available in Library.)

Even in Latin America, activists "are in a minority, often very small," Seymour Martin Lipset, author and professor of government at Harvard University, writes in an introductory essay. "In most countries the vast majority of students are apolitical, and tend to endorse the moderate or even the conservative parties."

Other observations in the journal contradict stereotyped ideas about students.

—Though students may provoke political action, they seldom bring it to fruition; the support of other groups is mandatory if any real change is to take place. Those political parties which do not repudiate student efforts are most liable to benefit from them; many parties which once relied heavily on student support, including the British Labor Party and offioial Communist parties. now tend to ignore student views.

—Student activism varies significantly according to discipline. "Those disciplines that are thought of as 'intellectual' — the humanities and most of the social sciences — are more activist and leftist than those that are oriented toward the professional or scientific world," Lipset writes. This relationship also varies, however. from country to country: "Medicine has a leftist aura in various Latin countries in the Americas and Europe, but is traditionally quite conservative in most of northern Europe and the Anglophonic world.

"Where economics is taught as an extremely technical, mathematically based subject, those who concentrate in the field are less radical than where it remains concerned with qualitative and historical institutional analysis . . . In every discipline those who think of themselves as intellectuals rather than professionals are more politically activist."

—University systems with demanding class and academic schedules allow for less unrest than those depending primarily upon examinations. "The examination system used is a key factors," Lipset states. In the United States, too much extracurricular activity often jeopardizes academic work; in Latin America, where examinations "are not so important or may be postponed," students are free for political action.

—Parents' political attitudes show a "high correlation" with the politics of their children and are a determining factor. Children of poorer families tend to be less active politically because they are "strongly oriented toward upward mobility . . . concentrated on careerist professional objectives," and need to work as well as study. "Social status seems more important than

COMMUNITY

Community Issues and Values since it can support and strengthen not only what we do together as a community, but what we do separately and in smaller groups called classes."

Increased Freedom for Women

Mary Jane Schussler, another member of the Special Committee, reported the Executive Council action on recommendations for changes in social regulations. Hours for all resident women is to be extended to one a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights and to eleven p.m. on other nights. If the mechanics can be worked out satisfactorily, a card system will be established for upperclass women.

The card system will give sophomore women the freedom to determine their own hours on Friday and Saturday nights, and junior and senior women on any night, provided they are not on academic or disciplinary probation and, if under 21, they have parental consent. Miss Schussler called attention to the added importance under this system of the student's taking seriously her responsibility for signing in and out.

Automobile Privilege Extended

The Executive Council also approved, she reported, the use of automobiles by sophomores, juniors, and seniors, the classification to be determined by academic standing. The privilege, however, will not be extended to those on either academic or disciplinary probation or to those holding a scholarship or grant based upon need. Every student who brings an automobile to the campus must have parental consent if he is under 21, must show evidence of financial responsibility, and must follow the regulations for the registration and use of automobiles as outlined in the Student Handbook.

A New Role for Students

In the fall term the Special Committee will present a more detailed plan to the Executive Council for approval. Since such a major change in structure will involve changes in the Constitution and By-Laws, the plan will then go to the Board of Directors at the October meeting. If the Board approves, details will be perfected and the new system put into effect as soon as possible. The date which the Committee recommends is the beginning of the winter term 1969.

Addressing his fellow students directly, Mr. Meyer remarked: "This means that the role of the student on our campus is going to be changed . . . We cannot overemphasize the seriousness of such a move. Every student must become involved and accept this added responsibility by becoming a part of the Maryville Community. With responsibility comes accountability."

"Community Issues and Values"

Dr. David Young, faculty representative on the Special Committee, outlined the projection for a program designed to implement a major objective of the College: to erase the dichotomy between the intellectual and the religious and to emphasize the relationship between knowledge and values. In place of the present chapel-convocation, a program to be called "Community Issues and Values" will be instituted in the fall of 1968. In meetings on the average of once a week it will focus on issues and values in an effort to encourage the entire community to engage in full and free discussion.

Dr. Young described the possibilities as including different approaches to worship; confrontation with political, social, theological, and philosophical issues; and opportunities for value experiences with various art media. He stated that the proposal approved by the Executive Council called for course credit to be given for regular attendance (no more than three absences for the year) and for three course credits in "Community Issues and Values" to be added to the core requirements for graduation. He emphasized, however, that the credit ramifications were still to be finalized.

NUDE PLATFORM

PALO ALTO, Calif. (CPS)— "Nobody on campus considers the student presidency seriously," says Mrs. Victoria Reich, "so why not have a naked girl to make some use of it."

Mrs. Reich is the naked girl—38-22-36—and she's running for the student presidency of Stanford University.

"My biggest support is in the men's dormitories where I make personal appearances," says the blonde Palo Alto student whose campaign posters—which show her posing in the nude—are rapidly becoming collector's items.

She is also well supported by patrons of San Francisco topless clubs who know her by her professional name, Vicki Drake.

Business for Vietnam Peace

Possibly for the first time in American History, businessmen have formed a nationwide alliance to oppose a war in which this country is heavily involved. Associated with them as a Military Advisory Committee Committee are five retired military officers of general and admiral ranks.

The National Co-Chairmen of Business Executives Move for Vietnam Peace, as the group is known, are Henry Niles, Board Chairman of the Baltimore Life Insurance Co., and Harold Willens, President of Los Angeles based Factory Equipment & Supply Corporation. Mr. Willens has been travelling widely and giving full time to promoting the group's objectives.

His reasons are stated as follows: "I believe the 2,000 business executives among us represent the vanguard of a new breed of American businessman, and it seems important to have young people aware that we exist. This new Enlightened Capitalist is able to grasp the direct relationship between world events, national problems and his own personal interests.

"He can understand that man is not an insect on the flywheel of history — man makes history. And, that if he doesn't help make it, there may not be much more history in this age of ultimate weapons. He knows, in other words, that he'd better get involved or else he may soon get dissolved, literally as well as figuratively, in economic terms.

"The Enlightened Capitalist is a maverick (until others catch up with his realistic understanding of the new world around us) who has the guts to do what might seem unpopular or controversial. For example, speak out publicly against the mistaken, suicidal Vietnam policy of escalation as we've been doing since the formation of our group.

"I am often questioned about businessmen being for the war because of profits. As the stock market dramatically illustrates these days, it's finally become clear to the business community that WAR SPELLS DOOM but PEACE SPELLS BOOM.

STUDENTS

economic class background in affecting propensity for action."

—Student unrest is greatest when the society is changing rapidly or is felt to be "backwards." The student feels alienated from traditional values and finds either that his education is not relevant to the new situation or that the society cannot offer him a professional career when he is graduated.

"Confrontation politics is characteristic of politics in which students, and other groups as well, lack legitimate channels of communication to authority."

—This factor can also affect "rightist" behavior, as is evidenced by contemporary groups in several countries and, most dramatically, by German youth in the thirties. "Rightist students were nationalistic, anti-authority, and concerned with the seeming inferiority of their nation within the world community."

—In many countries, local university issues — housing, tuition food — are the only ones which can evoke mass protest. When this sentiment can be linked — often deliberately by student leaders from major party groups — with national issues, a vigorous protest movement can result, only to die when local demands are met or disappear.

Conservative, preoccupied with career and other immediate concerns, most students are far from being fiery radicals intent on bettering the lot of mankind. "Students and Politics" documents these conclusions with a series of studies of students in many different countries in the world.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE ENTERS 149th YEAR

HERSHEY SEZ HI!

Washington (CPS)--The two government officials probably most venerated by students, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover and Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey, recently issued their "back-to-school" welcoming broadsides to students and universities.

The messages are in the form of letters warning the public, the police and college administrations of the dangers posed to them by students and professors.

In the September issue of Law Enforcement Bulletin, a magazine sent by the FBI to police departments and other law enforcement agencies, Hoover wrote that "revolutionary terrorists"--in the form of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) and other New Left groups —will endanger "not only the academic community but out peaceful and orderly society" this fall.

Militant radical leaders, Hoover warns, "plan to launch a widespread attack on educational institutions," and are relying on campus activists to help them "smash first the educational structure, then our economic system, and finally our Government itself."

He called the New Left a "growing band of self-styled revolutionaries" who have a "pathological hatred for our way of life and a determination to destroy it," and said they will be using college campuses as a base for activities designed to promote Communist concepts in this country.

Hershey, in only slightly milder words, addressed himself to college and university administrators in the August edition of the Selective Service house organ, warning them of the "perils of permissiveness' toward students and faculty members who dissent and "create chaos" on campuses.

He blamed much of the campus unrest on faculty members who "prey on students" and encourage them to attack the actions of government officials or help them evade the draft, and said he thought those administrators who had "learned something last year" would suppress such professorial activity.

"I believe the silent citizens of the United States and the Congress are nearing the end of their patience with such activities," Hershey said. "I do not think Congress will for long provide funds to educational institutions to pay faculty members who incite students to disobey the Selective Service Law, or tolerate as satisfactory those who do."

MC LOOKS INTO A NEW YEAR?

STUDENT COUNCIL

Student Council met for its first session September 11, at 7:30 in 213 Sutton Science Center.

Bruce Semple conducted the meeting. He urged for the maintenance of close contact between Student Council Representatives and their respective class members. Bruce commented that all Student Council meetings are open and he and the Council encourage any interested persons to come and sit in on the meetings. Interested students may also sign up to work on any of the Student Council committees by contacting the chairman of the committee. The committees and their chairmen are: Social-Joe Dawson, Noreen Bovis; Academics-Craig Rigell; Constitution-Shep Spear; Pep Committee-Dave Maxwell, Sue Carr; Programs-Al Cropper; Elections-Dave Maxwell; Publicity-Steve Lydick; Organizations-Bob Washburn.

The Pep Committee report by Sue Carr revealed that all plans for rallys and game publicity are well under way. Noreen Bovis commented on Homecoming plans. This year an attempt will be made to unify the whole week end's events with an overall theme, the one suggested being "Going Places." Al Cropper of the Programs Committee announced that tickets for the Ramsey Lewis Concert to be held Homecoming week end will be priced at $2.50 and $3.00. A permanent ticket office has been set up in the Office Annex where it will be possible to buy tickets for all campus activities. At their first meeting, Student Council also elected Sally Green as secretary, named Barb Grinsted as treasurer, and elected eight Student-Faculty Senate delegates. The eight are Al Cropper, Joan Gates, Don Hickman, Lloyd Kramer, Jim Moore, Jim Reynolds, John Ribble, and Craig Rigell. It was suggested that after freshman elections, scheduled for next week, a freshman delegate will also be sent to Student-Faculty Senate although without a vote. At the close of the meeting, Bruce Semple reminded the Council that all proposed action needed to be organized fully for presentation to the Board of Directors at their October meeting. The Board will not meet again until May, 1969.

The next Student Countil meeting will be Wednesday, September 25 at 7:30 in 213 SS.

Frosh Father Named President

Dr. M. G. Scarlett, father of Maryville Freshman Jon Scarlett, has resigned as president of Farmington State College in Maine to accept the Presidency of Middle Tennessee State University at Murfreesboro. Dr. Scarlett will leave Farmington September 21 and assume his new responsibilities in Tennessee on October 1.

Dr. Scarlett has also resigned as an acting Chancellor of the new nine-campus University of Maine, a position he has held concurrently with the Farmington Presidency for the past four months.

Tennessee is Mrs. Scarlett's home state. In addition to Jon, the Scarletts have two other children — David, 15, and Nancy, 12.

New Faculty Members at Maryville College

Studying about antiques is the major outside interest of Dr. Carole C. Wahler, a sparkling new addition to the Psychology Department. She is especially interested in English pottery and porcelain, and she is in the process of remodeling her home in Knoxville using her early American antique collection.

Research and experimentation kept Dr. Wahler busy as she was earning her degrees at the University of Washington. She taught for one year on a teaching assistantship. The National Institute of Mental Health supported her research for three years as she finished up her Ph.D. in psychology

For the past four years Dr. Wahler has been teaching night school and summer school and running research at the University of Tennessee. After being at Maryville for one week, Dr. Wahler finds teaching here to be an interesting and different experience. Openness of the students has caused her to orient her teaching more toward class discussion.

Dr. Wahler is the wife of a University of Tennessee professor of psychology, whose main interest and background is in child psychology. Being in the same field, the Wahlers have developed a feeling of communication and understanding rather than of competition. The Wahlers have two children--seven and two, and the family enjoyed their summer of travel to the west coast and to the British Isles.

A registered nurse, Dr. Marjorie T. Kratz worked and studied for many years before getting her Ph.D. in history. She got her B.A. and M.A. in American history from the University of Massachusetts. After teaching high school, she moved to the west coast where she taught western civilization for three years as a graduate assistant at the University of Oregon. THE POOR LAW MEDICAL OFFICER IN GREAT BRITIAN, 1832-1842 was the title of her dissertation which she worked on the following two years.

Now living in Knoxville and having taught a year at Knoxville College, Dr. Kratz is a new part of the history department at Maryville College. Overwhelmed at the warm, friendly atmosphere here, she has been made to feel very welcome.

With only about thirty jobs existing in his field, Dr. Kratz' husband is presently at the University of Tennessee in medieval linguistics. They have one daughter who is almost fifteen. When not teaching, Dr. Kratz takes care of her family and enjoys reading, knitting, and gardening.

Coming from the Michigan public school system is Mr. Clinton Brown, instructor of music and string specialist in the Fine Arts Department. Mr. Brown earned his Bachelor of Music degree at DePauw University and completed work on his masters at Illinois Weselyn and masters at Illinois Weselyn University. Since that time he has studied at Ball State University and Northwestern University. During the summer of 1960 Mr. Brown participated in the European Music Festival Tour, which took him to nine foreign countries.

Aside from music, Mr. Brown is a short wave radio operator and is impressed with the beauty of the Maryville campus and surrounding countryside.

A new addition to the department of biology has been made in the person of Mr. Frank Brunell. A graduate of Indiana University in Bloomington, Illinois, Mr. Brunell received his Masters Degree at the University of Pennsylvania. He is impressed with the curriculum change at Maryville, stating, "It's the only way to teach." He feels it important to establish a dialogue between student and teacher and asserts that the new curriculum is fundamental to this idea. Outside the classroom, Mr. Brunell was a competitive swimmer, and is currently interested in journalism and classical music.

Coming from a dorm at American University with 780 girls, Mrs. Mary Kathleen Moody is now enjoying her work as the housemother of Lloyd Residence. Not having as much pressure on her and getting to know every girl individually, she finds her job to be very interesting.

EDITORIAL

This year's HIGHLAND ECHO staff is attempting to produce the complete communications device on campus in the form of a weekly paper. This newspaper will be operated by staff of students, but it is the entire community's publication and should be actively participated in by all interested students and faculty members. Divisions of the paper are representative of the various aspects of participation. For instance, the news and feature pages include basically what's happening on our campus and in other colleges throughout the world; the editoral page is reserved for the actual newspaper staff; and the Letters to the Editor provide a sounding block for the entire college community.

Space permitting, we will print any signed articles submitted to the ECHO, and we reserve the right to edit any copy before printing.

We sincerely hope this newspaper achieves our aspirations as a thorough and comprehensive instrument of communication on the Maryville College campus. We also promise to minimize dry editorals such as this!

"DO YOU REALIZE THAT IF THIS WAR GOES ON ANOTHER FIVE YEARS I'LL HAVE MY B.A.-M.A. AND Ph.D. AND I DON'T EVEN LIKE COLLEGE."

EDITORIAL

As the editor of this newspaper I have the opportunity to see some of the issues that are going to face our campus and our country and our world. Our world leaders continue to degrade and smear human lives on burnt soil for the sake of power and pride. If the widely spread violent rhetoric seeks violent action as an only alternative to silence our country will be in the grips of open rebellion in our major and not so major cities by 1972. Our campus leaders have inherited a grand conception and schematic sketch of a progressive community organization that has yet to be completed by a promised effective date in October.

Many of us soon will have to decide what we as humans and Americans are going to do about the country's third most costly war (that means human lives, baby): Vietnam. We all, being twenty-one in age or not, must face a major political election where no alternatives appear. Many are faced with the possi-bility of not voting at all. This can happen in the world's soundest democracy? The majority of the people that created the proposed community council concept are gone this year and the people that remain to make the promises come true are faced with inexperience. A great deal must be learned and done. There is little time to do it in.

It appears to this editor that our primary action for the next couple of weeks must be to insure that our new community organization is completed and passed by the October meeting of the Board of Dorectors. If we all don't get to work soon we will have, in the Tennessee idiom, made our bed and we will ALL have to lie in it. Get the student government acting, ask the presidents to reactivate the committees, and get out and do some of the work yourselves. I'm tired of talk. Or maybe I heard wrong. Didn't we want open hours in the girl's dorms, etc. etc. etc.

SOPHOMORE RESOLUTION

Recognizing the far-reaching significance of concepts developed and approved during the spring of 1968 by the Special Investigation Committees, the Class of 1971 urges immediate action by the Co-ordinating Committee on the implementation of these proposals. We insist upon the following steps as a beginning for this intricate process:

1. Immediate convening of the Co-ordinating Committee.
2. An extensive explanation to the student body by the members of the Co-ordinating Committee on the details necessary for the practical application of the approved concepts.

The opportunity to convert exciting theory into dynamic reality now exists and must be pursued with intelligent, decisive action.

recognitions

This is the first in what I hope will be a regular series of articles for the ECHO. The title "recognitions" is significant to me because that is what I hope these writings will contain: recognitions that come to me during the year on issues that for me have some meaning and relevance. I won't apologize for the arrogance implied in my planning to write what I guarantee will be a highly opinionated column. Instead I will explain my motives by saying that last June's commencement address had the effect upon me of reinforcing a need to reach out and attempt to touch others. In this address Dr. Glasse stressed the need for each of us to explain to others "how it is from here." That is what I want to try to do. In this time of crisis for our country we all must try to communicate, to reach out (painfully at times) and contact other lives. We must not become a part of the conspiracy of silence. Communication is too important. It is all we have. I am no prophet, nor intellectual, nor philosopher. With fear and trembling I offer up on the rather frightening altar of the public media my only gift, a desire and attempt to communicate. We can no longer afford the luxury of silence, for there are too many things that need the comment of the way it looks from here—and there—from me—and you. I an as afraid as anyone to speak what I believe, but now all of us must try to overcome fear and try to touch.

To finish my explanation of what I hope to do, I offer a poem and a quotation.

WE ARE HERE TOGETHER

Take my hand. There are two of us in this cave.
The sound you hear is water; you will hear it forever.
The ground you walk on is rock. I have been here before,
But never like this. People come here to be born, to discover, to kiss, to dream and to dig and to kill. Watch for the mud.
Summer blows in with scent of horses and roses;
Fall with the sound of sound breaking; Winter shoves its empty sleeve down the dark of your throat; Spring brings with it the feel of leaving. You will learn toads from diamonds, the fist from the palm,
Love from the sweat of Love, falling from flying.
There are a thousand turnoffs. I have been here before.
Once I followed the thread unrolled by a voice and when I returned my nails had grown into claws.
Once I fell off a precipice. Once I found gold, and then stumbled on murder, the thin parts of a girl.
Now I know the only way to be here is as we are:
The blind leading the blind.
Walk on, keep walking, there are axes above us.
Watch for occasional bits and bubbles of light, birthdays for you, recognitions: yourself—another.
Watch for the mud. Listen for bells, for beggars.
Something with wings went crazy against my chest once.
There are two of us here. Touch me.

Albert Camus, THE REBEL: "Those who love, friends or lovers, know that love is not only a blinding flash, but also a long and painful struggle in the darkness for the realization of definitive recognition and reconciliation."

My first recognition is of the darkness of this cave. The second is of the need we all have to touch and be touched. We ARE here together.

The Art of Bunse

While Dale Bunse's drawings are competent and his paintings imaginative, his first love is obviously ceramics. There are several fine functional pieces, including an unusual tea service, and two pieces of sculpture accented with flashing lights. But the real joy of the show are a number of whimsical sculptural ceramic pieces that turn out to be playthings. Chunky, squatty, cheerfully colored constructions decorated with bell-shaped protrusions that spring singly or in happy clusters from sides and tops, they are made in sections that separate and change positions at the artist's wish.

If you have seen the show only once, go back again, for Mr. Bunse rearranges his "toys," putting tops on bottom, literally turning them wrongside-out so that a piece may change its face altogether from day to day!

Mr. Bunse's freshness, humor, and technical ability are a refreshingly enjoyable combination, and his exhibition should not be missed.

Comment: Why No Peace?

WASHINGTON (CPS)—Four months have passed since the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRVN, North Vietnam) agreed to send in May 1968 a delegation headed by Minister Xuan Thuy to begin official talks in Paris with representatives of the United States. Yet no progress has been made, although Secretary Rusk often in the past (before May) stated that what he needed was an answer, a signal from Hanoi--and the war would be over.

But since then Washington has escalated its conditions, which in fact amount to the surrender of the DRVN and of the National Liberation Front of South Vietnam (NLF), and the recognition of the legitimacy of the U.S. intervention in Vietnam. It is not difficult for anyone who has read only one page in the long history of Vietnam to predict that the answer to such demands can only be, No. The patience of the DRVN delegation, whose country is being pounded daily by B52's is indeed amazing. And so is the persistence of the U.S. delegation, whose cities' are not touched by bombs, in their rhetoric.

The purpose of any meeting or conference is to reason over differences, and to reason requires the admission of certain basic truths. If one side is deaf to those truths, no conference can succeed no matter how long it lasts. On August 28 the Paris talks had reached their 19th session; even at that late date, Minister Xuan Thuy had to call the attention of Averell Harriman to such obvious truths as these:

"I have many a time made an analysis of it (the origin of the war). As fully demonstrated by facts, the origin lies in the U.S. government's aggression and its sabotage of the 1954 Geneva Agreements on Vietnam. Especially the introduction by the U.S. of more than half a million troops and more than 60,000 satellite troops into South Vietnam, and the unwarranted air and naval attacks on the DRVN, have exposed before the world and American public opinion the real nature of the U.S. aggression.

"You (Mr. Harriman) have besides tried to mislead public opinion by pretending that the United States has only "limited objectives" in Vietnam. It must be clearly pointed out that the United States has no right to have any objectives--no matter how limited--in Vietnam, for the simple reason that Vietnam belongs to the Vietnamese and not to the United States--the cities as well as all the plains, mountains, rivers, forests and seacoasts in South Vietnam belong to the Vietnamese people and not to the United States.

"So-called "limited objectives" of the U.S. in Vietnam simply aim at occupying the South in the hope of imposing on it a neo-colonialist domination. What an irony and a fraud in President Johnson's words about such "civil efforts" as "expanding education," "planting new rice fields," and so on while U.S. aircraft have daily been razing to the ground so many schools, hospitals, and villages, and U.S. bombs and chemicals have been destroying crops and even forests in both zones.

"President Johnson has said that a "genuine peace" in Vietnam should be in keeping with the "vital interest" of the United States and that a formula which would get the United States out of Vietnam would be "disastrous to the interests of the United States." This is a plain confession of the U.S. government design which dismisses all your allegation that you have "no ambition in Vietnam."

FACULTY contd.

When it comes to experience, Mrs. Moody has had it all, though all pleasant, she was quick to add. When her husband, a medical doctor, died thirteen years ago, it was her pastor who suggested that she become a housemother. Applying then to Maryville College and finding no openings, she began her work as a housemother by opening a new dorm at East Tennessee State College. At the University of Maryland she opened new high rise dorms and had 560 girls. At American University her 780 girls were from all four classes. She finds freshmen girls, who are less settled, to be most interesting.

Girls' rules at Maryville College are as liberal as the other places Mrs. Moody has worked. She has had very little trouble with her girls, If a girl wants to get in trouble, she can find the time no matter how strict the rules are, according to Mrs. Moody. At Maryville she has found the girls to be very responsible.

Mother of five, grandmother of ten, and great grandmother of two, Mrs. Moody has had a very life. She has been very active in clubs and organizations. Handwork is her hobby and making Christmas decorations is her present project. She hopes to join a Women's Club and Garden club in Maryville, but her job is her main interest.

A familiar face to many on campus this fall is Miss Marilyn Rankin, currently instructor of English at Maryville. Miss Rankin, a 1967 graduate of Maryville received her Master of Arts in English at the University of Virginia studying under a Woodrow Wilson Scholarship. Interested in archeology, the summer of 1967 found her studying at Oxford, followed by a dig in Cornwall at the sight of an Iron Age cliff castle. Besides archeology, Miss Rankin enjoys music and finds the new curriculum a challenge to both students and faculty.

Dr. Malcolm Willey, the head of the Department of Sociology, comes to Maryville from India, where he has spent the last five years working with the colleges and universities there. Sent by the Ford Foundation to study the problems of Indian higher education, his job took him to Calcutta, Delhi, within India, and to Nepal close to the Indian border. Dr. Willey did his undergraduate work at Clark University in Wooster, Mass., and received his M.A. and Ph.D. from Columbia University. Formerly he has taught at Dartmouth, and the University of Minnesota where he was vice-president for academic administration. His interests include photography and travel and his collection of slides include those from India, New Guinea, the Kheiber Pass, and Mexico, Dr. Willey finds Maryville a "refreshing contrast" to his surrounding in India, and when asked about the new curriculum replied, "that's what brought me here"

I would like to be able to love my country and still love justice.

SCOTS DROP OPENER 16-7

Scoring two touchdowns, a field goal and one extra point attempt, the Hampden-Sydney Tigers clawed their way to a 16-7 victory over the Scots in Maryville's opening game.

The Scots scored their only points in the first half with John Klein's rush for a T.D. and Jim Cannon's kick for an extra point. The Tigers duplicated the Scots' scoring pattern, and at the half the score was 7-7.

The Scots were unable to push by the Tigers' line or hold them back from scoring in the second half, despite a strong effort by both defensive and offensive teams.

Quarterback Dave Garner played a good game, showing that he can handle the ball and his team well. Perhaps with a little more protection from his line his passing will improve.

The next home game is scheduled for October 12, against Emory & Henry. Meanwhile the Scots will travel to meet their opponents at Georgetown and at Austin. The schedule remains open on October 5.

The team needs your support, so let's see you out there for our home games. Some of the away games may be shown on campus, for those of you that are interested. See you on the field. Go get 'em, Scots!

SCOTS ON TV

The Maryville Scots football team can be seen every Tuesday night on color television. Our own gridiron gladiators can be seen in color on channel 26 on Tuesdays at 7:30. Get another look at our team's plays on your color tube.

FOCUS: MC

Focus: Maryville College is a series of individual television programs dealing with the total life of the college. It is broadcast every Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2 (WSJK-TV) and is produced at the Knoxville facilities of WBIR-TV, Channel 10. During the last year, 54 original programs were produced ranging all the way from Christmas Vespers to an original play to student-faculty discussions with such people as Vietnam's former ambassador to the U.S. and Georgia legislator, Julian Bond. The program reaches approximately 20,000 people each week although selected programs have been broadcast as far away as Johnson City, Chattanooga, and Atlanta.

Programs are already underway this year. Do you have ideas for new types of programs? Want to try your hand with a new medium of expression? Mr. Art Dees or his secretary, Mary Jane Keim (who wrote or helped write several programs as a MC student last year), will be glad to help work out details. Mr. Dees' office is in the Theater. The programs also offer the student the chance to help publicize Maryville College. Here on campus, Focus can be seen at the Student Center or at the Dees' home, 224 Indiana Avenue.

This year for the first time, too, all the Maryville College football replays will be shown in color on Channel 26, WTVK (ABC Knoxville) at 6:00 p.m. Tuesdays.

—School and Racial Unrest—

Washington (CPS)--On the basis of information gathered about riots and other disturbances in America last spring, Brandeis University's Lemberg Center for the Study of Violence has predicted that schools everywhere "will become the sites of racial violence when they open this fall."

A recent issue of the Center's Riot Data Review classifies 44% of all recorded instances of disorder and violence during the first four months of 1968 as "school-involved." Racial disturbances occurred in both high schools and colleges with the largest number occurring during the first week of April immediately following the assassination of Martin Luther King. Of 91 school-involved incidents in April, 38 were campus confined with limited physical violence, 29 began in school buildings and spread to other areas of the community involving more arrests and injuries, and 24 were limited to instances in which schools were merely a target for fire bombing and window smashing.

The Lemberg Center's data (gathered for the most part from newspapers and, in some cases, witnesses) indicate that King's assassination accelerated the already existing tensions on the campuses. Most directly related to the assassination was the student reaction to the insensitivity of school officials. The Center denied, however, that violence in the schools was only a temporary reaction to an inflammatory event:

"Unrest in the schools appears to be a general and long-range phenomenon, the sources of which might be sought in any or all of the following areas: the search for excitement and action by youth, specific grievances directed at the quality of education and school facilities, and rising antagonism between white and black students."

The report urged school officials to study examples of the peaceful stemming of violence and the easing of tense interracial situations while recognizing that all random events that may trigger racial violence cannot be prevented. Racial tension in the U.S. in high and varies from community to community depending on the interaction of blacks and whites in the community. Of paramount importance, as in the schools, is the appropriateness or inappropriateness of the responses of white authorities.

UCCF Moves Up

Take your pick. We are calling ourselves the University Christian Movement now, instead of the United Campus Christian Fellowship, for several reasons. It's shorter, more poetic, and more dignified. Mainly, the Maryville UCCF has followed the example of the national organization which merged with the new UCM last year, along with many campus organizations of various denominations. The goals and purposes of UCM at Maryville will be explored in workshops at the fall retreat at Laurel Lake Setpember 21 and 22.

A number of M.C. students attended UCM assemblies during the summer. June Rostan, Emmy Ezzell, and Joan Gates blew their minds at a week-long conference at Webster College in St. Louis in June; Carey Cox, Jackie Goler, and June Rostan ended the summer at a late-August meeting in Atlanta. We will be hearing more from these students during the year.

National Chairman Nell Sayle will be on campus September 20 to talk with students. We hope to bring several such people to Maryville for conversations and discussions.

"Do not look back. And do not dream about the future, either it will neither give you back the past, nor satisfy your other day dreams. Your duty, your reward--your destiny--are here and now."

NSA

Washington (CPS)--NSA, which Maryville College joined last spring by vote of the Student Countil, held its 21st annual conference at the University of Kansas in August with 900 delegates from 250 schools attending. NSA has been forced in the past into a non-participatory political position by its tax-exempt status. As a non-profit organization which accepts government and foundation grants, it is prohibited by law from legislative lobbying and other political activities.

The August congress decided to divide NSA into two corporations. The first will retain the name National Student Association, will be tax-exempt but will not accept grants. It will therefore be allowed to engage for the endorsing of specific candidates. It will be supported financially by membership dues and its extensive services division which offers such things as student record and travel discounts.

The second corporation, to be called the National Student Institute, will in effect be the old NSA. It will operate all programs funded by foundation and government grants.

MC Unlocks New Doors?

The WSGA Council this week has released a report in response to questions about the status of the key system, which is to be inaugurated for qualified women students as soon as the necessary details can be worked out. Upon recommendation of the Special Committee on Community Life and Structure, the Executive Council, on May 22, approved a plan whereby upper class women could have the privilege of a card or key system giving them more freedom in dormitory hours.

Because of the possibility of a breakdown in the security of women's dormitories when so many keys are in use, some necessary regulations must be followed with a mature sense of responsibility and cooperation. Representatives of the women students themselves (WSGA Council) have suggested the regulations, such as a careful system of signing in and out, with whom one is traveling, the time of leaving, and the expected time of return. In addition, the Council has suggested that the keys be checked in and out of the dormitory by times which will be specified later.

Security considerations and an awareness of the seriousness of individual responsibility have led the Council to propose as a penalty for the loss of keys a twenty-five-dollar fine. Misuse of a key by letting it come into the possession of an unqualified person will be subject to action by the Judiciary Committee. The Council hopes, however, that the user will take her responsibility so seriously that the penalties will never have to be assessed, since it will barely cover the cost of replacing the lock and all the keys of the dormitory from which the key was lost, and assure the security of the residence halls.

Miss Schussler asked that all of these proposed regulations be regarded as tentative and still subject to change as the Council continues its planning. This information is being released primarily to create a better understanding of the problems that the Council is facing. "PLEASE don't think," she added, "that we're sitting on these keys. Now you have some small idea of how much is involved in the implementing of the system and how much work we've been doing already. We are working as fast and as hard as we can. Some of us want to take advantage of the privilege as much as you do!"

Special Committee On Community Life And Structure Reconstituted

On September 23 the Special Committee on Community Life and Structure met to continue the work begun during the spring term last year. The Committee is composed of the following members: Miss Linda Jones, Mr. Jim Moore, Mr. Jim Reynolds, Miss Mary Jane Schussler, Mr. Edwin J. Best, Dr. Carolyn Blair, Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, Dean Boyd L. Daniels, and Dr. Russell Parker. Mr. Bruce Semple, President of the Student Body, met with the Committee as a consultant.

After the new members had been recognized and welcomed, two major papers were reviewed to bring the membership up to date on the status of its work and the timetable objectives. The members were reminded that on May 22, 1968, the Executive Council had approved three major recommendations of the Special Committee: (1) the concept of an All College Council, the structure of which was to be designed by the Committee this fall; (2) the proposal for the Community Issues and Values program which has been put into effect this term and is now under the direction of a student-faculty committee; and (3) changes in the area of social regulations, including the new hours for resident women and extended automobile privileges now in effect, and the inauguration of a key system, the details of which are currently being perfected by those most directly concerned.

Having agreed that the most pressing item of business was the formulation of a structure for the All College Council, the Committee first reviewed the action taken by the Executive Council in which the general purpose of the All College Council was set forth and a timetable suggested. Discussion then centered upon the type of community life that might be established at Maryville College, taking into account the varied roles of the constituents, including the students, the teaching and administrative faculties, the Board of Directors, alumni, parents, friends, and members of the larger local community of which the College is a part.

In an effort to proceed rapidly and efficiently, two subcommittees were constituted, one to put into writing the concept of community life growing out of the discussion, and the other to draft the structure whereby this life might best be expressed. The subcommittees were asked to meet immediately and to be ready to report to the entire Committee at its next meeting on September 30.

Committees For 1968-1969

The operating committees for the 1968-1969 academic year have been selected and released by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of Maryville College. The selection was by a combined effort of students and faculty and administration. Primary consideration was given by Dr. Copeland and Bruce Semple, the Student Body president. Many of the committees are composed of both students and faculty. The publication of these selections is to inform the community of the membership and make it possible to create dialogue and creative suggestions. The committees are as follows:

MC Adds New Profs

The young, new addition to the French department, Miss Naomi R. Lesko, is beginning her teaching career at Maryville College. She received her B.A. in French at Wake Forest College in Winston-Salem, North Carolina and her M.A. at Middleburg College Graduate School of French in France. She studied in Paris one summer and has spent the past year studying at the University of Paris.

Born in Texas, Miss Lesko grew up in Miami, Florida. She enjoys tennis and reading and especially likes people. Being familiar with this area and wanting to teach in a small school, she chose Maryville College, and since she has been here she likes it very much. She feels the faculty are concerned and dedicated.

From her travels in France, Miss Lesko saw that the French and Americans have misconceptions of each other. The French have a different way of life, and more Americans should travel in France to see it first hand. The French are more world conscious, and they see the world from a different point of view. They are exposed to European propaganda and Communist influence. Seeing a revolution almost begin in Paris made Miss Lesko appreciate America more.

While in Europe Miss Lesko also traveled in Russia, Poland, and Czechoslovakia after the liberalization. A marvelous experience and very educational, it was very upsetting to Miss Lesko to see what has happened in Czechoslovakia.

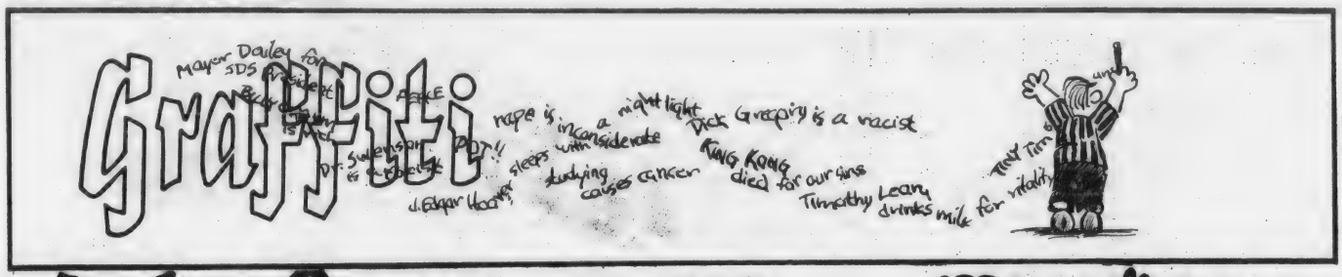
Council Reports



At the September 18 meeting of Student Council, Dean Daniels was present to inform members of the future of the proposed All-College Council. This Council, which hopefully should be ready to function in January, will become the sole decision-making body on Campus. According to the original concept, which has been discussed and approved by the Board of Directors, it will include students, faculty, and administration.

Dean Daniels emphasized the fact that no further details had been worked out as of yet but that a committee has been delegated this responsibility. The committee is composed of 4 faculty and administration, 4 students, and one board member. It was also noted that in working up the details of the Council's functions, any part affecting the bylaws of the college's constitution would have to be discussed and approved by the Board of Directors.

This situation could come about if the organizing committee decided to eliminate all other decision-making bodies, such as executive council, and incorporate them into the All-College Council. Dean Daniels pointed out to Student Council members that the organization of this All-College Council is the most important piece of business to be taken care of this fall.

When questioned on the possibility of re-activation the investigation subcommittees created last year, he answered that their reorganization should be held off,

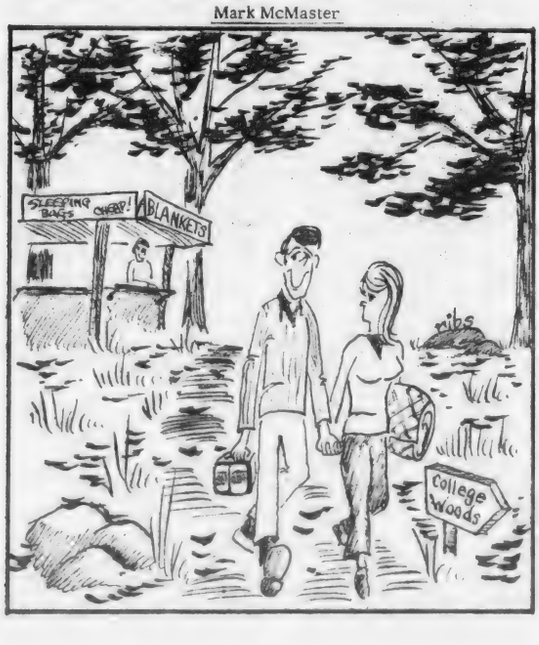
Welcome Maryville College Students -- so say the age-old signs of downtown Maryville. For returning students there were more reassuring signs of welcome. For senior there was at least good news... or rumour. And the work was that we will not have to dance around that ridiculous maypole of a schoolhouse, which most of us had little intention of dancing around anyhow. The word was that to build that schoolhouse of Isaac Anderson would have cost too much money, as we could have told them, if only on a cost-value basis. Too bad, for so many of us were looking forward to dropping out of that march. Perhaps President Copeland would have marched alone. But we will never know.

The idea was farce. One that lent credence to the oft-heard theory that Maryville is little more than a high school and a rather juvenile one at that. But it was a serious farce. Those who proposed it believed in it and perhaps that it was cute. We thought it was cute too but with a different meaning. It was cute in the way that too many things at Maryville are cute (and if we don't like them we can go to another school that is not so cute but maybe a few of us think Marvville is worth saving from its own cuddly ways!). We tend to think that this cute idea would have been laughed at by our highly-esteemed alumnae/benefactors/public. But again we will never know.



The word now has it that in the stead of our schoolhouse we will see a museum. And not an ordinary museum! This one will be a museum in the woods. Of course Maryville College may be in dire need of such a museum to display its treasures, but upon hearing this for the first time our thoughts were that perhaps museum was not quite the right word. We thought that instead of a museum what Maryville really needed out in those woods was a temple... a temple to Venus!

Here indeed is a project to arouse the interest and support of our public. Our more aged alumnae and benefactors could wile away the hours by browsing leisurely through galleries dedicated to Cupid, Eros, and Venus herself. They could gaze upon works of art, many perhaps done by inspired students, and wander endlessly through classical gardens. The college could turn a tidy profit by renting blankets to students and younger alumnae for use in a landscaped area of the woods which might be arranged into private nooks. The long-range potential of such a move is phenomenal. We should have no trouble filling our classrooms and dormitories. In fact, we might easily have a waiting list comparable to Yale or Harvard. The name of Maryville College would be known across the nation!

But alas, it is to be only a museum. A place to hide our relics of the past, as they are now hidden in the basement of Thaw. Undoubtedly it would be closed to visitor and student alike unless they knew who to ask about it. It could be hidden in some dark recess of the woods and built with lumber from Baldwin to further discourage discovery. And then again they might not build it and we would never know.

We would hope there are more building sites, if building is necessary. There is little evidence that it is. Improving the lower reaches of Thaw or utilizing some of the many display cases in Sutton are but two possibilities. At any rate, if it weren't for the word we might never know.

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

One of our Constitutional rights is the FREEDOM of expression. One form of expression is the use of campaign stickers on automobiles. To tear off a campaign sticker from a car is denying some person of his or her form of expression. We cannot tolerate people being beaten for expressing their views and we should not allow misguided people to deface political stickers that may be found on automobiles in the area. That includes stickers for Wallace, Nixon, Humphry, and some of the McCarthy signs that can be still found on Campus.

It started in New Hampshire and ended in the streets and convention floor of Chicago. It was a minor political miracle in this surprising political year. It was a "children's crusade" led by a man more visionary than pragmatist, more meditator than extrovert, more poet than politician. It started as the raising of an issue and ended in the unmaking of a president and the shaking of a national political party by a group of rank amateurs. This was Eugene McCarth's presidential campaign and before its bones are laid to rest I would like to offer one more very personal elegy.

Politics by its very nature requires a sell-out of principle in order to achieve election. For this reason politics remains basically an immoral occupation, and he who would be president must constantly compromise principle in favor of votes. A refreshing hiatus in the desert of party politics was Senator McCarty's campaign. A successful political expediency. But his presidential campaign was predicated upon the raising of an issue vital to the American conscience regardless of its effect upon his own career. This was the man alone, confronted with an injustice, who could not remain silent. Perhaps Senator McCarthy did not have the thirst for power absolutely essential to a presidential candidate. Perhaps he did begin his quest with martyrdom as his recognized goal. Still, his campaign brought with it an aura unfamiliar to American politics--the aura of innocence.

Innocence brings to mind ingenuousness, gullibility, and a wide-eyed, head-in-the-clouds approach to life. But innocence is far more than this. Innocence is an active approach to the complexity of contemporary life, for innocence is the manner of living which puts principle and ideal before tangible gain. Innocence must inevitably lead to rebellion, for it constructs a doctrine of limits and will not remain silent in the transgression of these limits.

When political innocence is confronted by entrenched political power, innocence must either, surrender or be destroyed. In Senator McCarthy's campaign destruction was certain, because compromise was impossible. His ideal was broken on the rocks of machine politics and now vultures of both parties swoop down to pick at the remains--the disenfranchised and dissatisfied youth, the members of the "children's crusade". Mr. Gore told us to try again in '72. Mr. Alexander welcomed us to Nixon. What to do is the liberal's dilemna. Can the Democratic party be reformed now that the old coalition is breaking up? Would a smashing Republican victory be a catharsis? Or does the answer lie in innocence, in a-political rebellion, refusal to sell out to either Nixon or Humphrey? For me the presidential campaign is over. Now there remains a choice whether to follow Senator McCarthy in working for relevant Senatorial campaigns or to become totally a-political and find an answer somewhere in the shifty and difficult concept of innocence and rebellion.

College Introduces CIV . . . .

Maryville College has taken another step toward relevant education--the Community Issues and Valus program. The philosophy of CIV sets it apart from the convocations of last year. It is not just a community get-together. It is an important part of the total academic program and is considered so significant a part of that program that credit is offered for attendance. With the belief that the educated person should be familiar with may different viewpoints in many different areas, CIV is an attempt to bring these viewpoints to campus and to present them in such a vital way that discussion will continue long after the particular program is over. CIV will try to bring the issues even closer to campus by using local resource people (such as the Blount County political party chairmen: as well as more widely known speakers.)

Mr. Arthur Dees, Communications Coordinator for the college, has been actively involved with plans for CIV. He sums up the point of the program: "the whole idea is that the whole community becomes involved in a single issue--not a single answer but a single issue--and can react to that issue in intelligent but differing ways."

Topics for CIV are wide-open. Ultimately, students should respond with suggestions for improvements, topics of interest, speakers and other media for presenting ideas.

Worship Set

Oct 6 is World-Wide Communion Sunday. Vespers will be a Communion Service led by Dr. Donald M. Stine. The liturgy is adapted from the Book of Common Worship of the Church of South India. The Church of South India was constituted in 1947 as a fusion of Reformed, Presbyterian and Congregational missionary churches from the United States and Britain together with Methodists and Anglicans. It is an unprecedented union of episcopal and non-episcopal churches--a symbol of our ecumenical age. Assisting in worship will be Areerat Hongspan and Donald Hickman, students, and Mr. Roland F. Lukner and Mr. Seung Kyun Ko, faculty members. Music will be by the Vesper Choir under the direction of Dr. Harry Harter. Dr. James Bloy is organist.

Navy OCS

Seniors may apply for Navy OCS and upon graduation, will attend an eighteen week course of instruction in naval science and physical fitness at naval OCS in Newport, Rhode Island. Upon successful completion, they are commissioned as an ensign with a three year active duty obligation.

THE FOLLOWING NAVY PROGRAMS ARE OPEN TO COLLEGE SENIORS:

1105 Line Officer
3105 Supply Corps
5105 Civil Engineering Corps Officer
2305 Medical Service Corps Officer

Detailed information can be obtained from the Officer Programs Team that visits the campus periodically. The first such visit will be on October 11, 1968.

A member of the English Department will be available D and E Periods on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday to discuss the organization and writing of papers. English Laboratory will be held in Anderson 314, except D Period Thursday when it will be in Anderson 316.

In its broader aspects the plan includes a provision for sophomore women to use their keys on Friday and Saturday nights, and for junior and senior women to use their keys on any night. The classification as to sophomore, junior, or senior is to be determined by the Registrar's Office, and the privilege extended to all those who are not on academic or disciplinary probation and who, if under twenty-one, have parental consent. January, 1969, was chosen as a target date for putting the system into effect.

Immediately following the Executive Council action, Dean Massey, working with the WSGA officers and consulting with personnel of the Treasurer's Office, began an investigation of both the card and the key systems. This investigation, including correspondence during the summer with schools using similar systems, led to the decision to adopt the key system, judged preferable both from the standpoint of security and ease of operation.

Mary Jane Schussler, the President of WSGA, in discussing the progress thus far, emphasized that those involved in the planning are well aware of the need for moving rapidly. Yet they also see the need for retaining the highest possible degree of security for all of the dormitory residents. Miss Schussler pointed out that few students stop to realize how many details must be worked out clearly before a college can operate under such a system for the first time. For example, letters containing all explanatory details must be compiled to be sent to the parents of all women students, along with permission blanks for the parents of those students who are under twenty-one. Not only do these letters have to be written and compiled, but an orderly system must also be devised for the women under twenty-one to request that the permission slips be sent to their parents.

Active in politics in the State of Tennessee, Dr. Agnes F. Bird is a new part time addition to the Political Science department. Her name is found in the 1966 issue of OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY LEADERS and WHO's WHO in TENNESSEE. A member of the Tennessee Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission she makes trips to various parts of the state for hearings. She is also a member of the State Democratic Executive Committee and President of the local chapter of the American Association of University Women.

Dr. Bird's educational background includes a professional art school and a Texas Woman's University as well as earning her M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Tennessee. She had an interesting variety of jobs before beginning part time teaching at the University of Tennessee, which includes being a draftsman for an oil company in Texas, a clerk at Alcoa, and an interior decorator.

Having lived in the Maryville area 22 years, Dr. Bird now lives in the country so that her 9th grade daughter can have horses. Dr. Bird's husband is a lawyer.

The feeling of loyalty of the students and faculty at Maryville College has impressed Dr. Bird. She likes the new curriculum, the new ideas on campus, and the effort to make improvements.

A Korean having lived in the United States for eight years, Mr. Seung Kyun Ko is teaching political science and is in charge of the East Asian Studies under our Non Western Studies program From the College of Wooster he earned his B.A. degree and his M.A. degree from the University of Pennsylvania. In 1966 he became a Ph. D. candidate and is presently writing his dissertation.

After teaching a year and a half in Korea, Mr. Ko taught University of Maryland in the Far East Division of International Politics and at Lake Superior State College. President Copeland, the C.I.V. Program, and the college community life have also impressed him. He finds Maryville to be similar to his alma mater, Wooster.

A TALK WITH MONK

I was a little worried about the state of our football team last year, and after Saturday night's game I decided to go and talk with Coach Tomlinson about it. I asked him what he feels is our basic "problem," in our ball games. It is very clear to me now what the reasons are. Since so many different people have ideas about why we have been a losing team for the last few years, I have decided to enlighten you with a few facts that I did not know before talking with the coach.

The football team at Maryville college has had a fine record over the years. Recently, however, this has not been the story. Why? Well, for one thing, the team lacks the experienced players who have started playing college ball as freshman and who have trained to meet the tough assignments facing them on the field. Despite what the "Football Facts" says, there are only two seniors playing this year. The team is made up of juniors, sophomores, and freshman. The average age is 18 years, 1 month. This, according to Coach Tomlinson, is below the national average for college football. The pressure is on the seniors and upperclassmen to supply the leadership that usually is supplied by a much larger number.

Maryville College is one of the few colleges remaining that does not have an athletic scholarship program. What it does have is limited to those men who fit academically as well as athletically. In other words, the ball players must keep their grades above the 2.0 probation mark, or face suspension or the draft. For this reason it is very difficult to keep men in school and playing football. Due to this fact we have lost about 80 athletes over the last three years. These men represent long hours of patient training and hard work. These men represent the foundation of experienced ball players which is needed to win ball games. The coaches have had to fight to keep the men in school and out of the draft. The coaches have to spend time doing things that they should not have to do. The school lacks the personnel (staff and players) to be a strong, winning school.

For the first time in a while the prospects are really looking good for the M.C. Scots. For the first time in a while we can see a foundation being built. Take a look at the defensive team, for instance. Such men as Steve Boggs and Paul Grice, who are both sophomores, are examples of what training and experience can do for a team. If these two, as well as the rest of the younger squad, can stay in school we will see a strong ball club develop during the next two years.

The offensive team looks weak because of lack of experience. Once these men have seen more action, they will improve. It does not happen over night. It is gradual.

All of this year's facts can be found in the "Football Facts." If you find some time, pick one up and read it. It might help you to understand better what I have said.

There remains only one thing to say. The team can not win without your support. No matter whether they win or lose, they are still part of Maryville College. What they do reflects on you because you are a part of Maryville College. I am proud of my school and I am proud of the athletic teams on this campus. I can say this because I see the effort that they are putting into it. I support the teams not because they are football, basketball, and baseball teams, but because they are Maryville College and I am too.

So stop complaining. Things are bound to get better, but they will get better a lot sooner if you show those men out there that you are proud of them and of what they are doing.

See you at the games!

Roger Stiles

SCOTS DROP CLOSE ONE

Well, here I am again, to tell y'all what happened in our game against Georgetown. Yes, I realize we lost again, but that is only half of the story. We almost won that game! In fact, we were only two yards from tieing the game when time ran out.

Not much can be said about the first half of the game. The Georgetown team was bigger and more experienced and tough. They scored two touchdowns and an extra point, and at the half the score was 13-0.

The Scots were not about to give up yet. The offensive team came alive for the first time this year and staged a strong come-back that was only stopped by the clock. Georgetown scored another touchdown in the third quarter, and with the score 19-0, it looked as if the Scots might be wiped out. But the Tigers had run around a tree and turned to butter, and the Scots took advantage of it. Halfway through the third quarter, Dave Garner passed to Brad Beck for sixteen yards and a T.D., and Jim "The Toe" Cannon booted an extra point, making the score 19-7. The Scots continued their push, and in the fourth quarter John Klein took the ball through the Tiger line from the 1 for a touchdown. The score was then 19-13.

Time was running out on the Scots, but they did not give up. With ten seconds remaining on the clock, Maryville was on the Tigers' 42 yard line. Garner passed as time ran out, and Freshman Greg Gavel (who, incidentally, received Honorable Mention, All Orange County, Fla. caught the pass on the 2 yard line. He was forced out of bounds and the game was over.

So, you see, the game was not really as bad as it sounds. Maybe our offense is trying to show us that it can play a darn good game if it wants. Guess we'll have to wait and see. See y'all on the field! Sock it to 'em, Scots!!

CHICAGO HURTING FOR CONVENTIONS

The American Humanist Association has become the fourth major organization in two weeks to announce that it is moving future conventions planned for Chicago away from that city.

Executive Director Tolbert McCarroll announced last week that the Association has sent letters urging similar action to hundreds of other organizations.

The action came in protest the treatment of thousands of demonstrators at the hands of the Chicago police department during the recent Democratic National Convention.

Two weeks ago the American Political Science Association and the American Sociological Association, groups of faculty members from around the country, canceled annual meetings scheduled in Chicago for 1969 and 1970. The American Psychological Association made a similar move.

CIV PRESENTS
The Democrats And Republicans

Appropriately enough the first two CIV's of this year were concerned with politics and the issues of this election year. Although the speakers did not generate excessive enthusiasm or heated debate among political partisans, they revealed to this writer an interesting fact about the politics of the present and gave a small glimmer of hope for the future.

Although both men, Mr. Alexander representing the Republicans and Mr. Gore Jr. representing the Democrats, used the political approach of generality and euphamism, the real significance this writer saw was the way in which the two men addressed themselves to their respective tasks. The confidence of Mr. Alexander in the rightness of his cause, the simple answers for most issues, and his obvious faith in Mr. Nixon because he was the party's leader smacked of the old politics. I had no doubt that Mr. Alexander wanted to be on the podium representing Mr. Nixon and having little doubt in so doing. There was not hint on his part that he did not have an answer, that Mr. Nixon did not know it all, or that all the trouble was not somehow our fault.

Mr. Gore obviously was uncomfortable in his task of representing not so much the Democratic Party as representing the Vice-President. Mr. Gore did not display the confidence or the smugness I saw in Mr. Alexander, but he did believe in the rightness of his cause: the success of the Democratic Party.

It is in the comparison of the way the men handled their tasks that an important dichotomy became apparent to this writer. Mr. Gore was no less a party politician than Mr. Alexander but he obviously had gone to a different school. Mr. Gore repeatedly expressed, in many ways, the doubt and uncertainty which great numbers of Americans are feeling about American politics and the drift of the country under the leadership of the current "politicians." Mr. Gore could not say anything more in defense of Mr. Humphrey than he was better than Mr. Nixon, that being the Democratic nominee was reason enough, that his liberal record was some assurance, that at least there was hope for progress under his leadership. Mr. Gore was concerned about and obviously unhealed from the effects of Chicago; he was uncertain of the role he would play in the politics of the future, but there can be no doubt that he was left upset and uncertain of the efficacy of the politics of the present.

Interestingly enough the uncertainty of the American voter was most clearly expressed by Mr. Gore, the not-quite-professional-politician (perhaps that is why he came across so honestly). Mr. Alexander, on the other hand, was confident and sure of the future of America as only a professional politician can be sure. Mr. Gore maintained a great degree of his humanness while Mr. Alexander seemed to float into a stereotype, a play-back machine whose only purpose was to look out serenely at the audience and to pronounce the best wishes and joy of his party and his breed.

That both men were not alike gave me the hope that perhaps there still is room for change in at least a part of our political system. Perhaps through men like Mr. Gore who have given up a degree of their politi- pragmatism (or have never allowed it to control their actions) for a little humanism and personal honesty our society will in fact be able to create a system more open and less repulsive to so many Americans..

SDS TO BE INVESTIGATED

WASHINGTON (CPS)--If representative Albert Watson had his druthers, the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) would be one of the groups on the government's Subversive Organizations blacklist.

The South Carolina Republican last week called on the floor of the House of Representatives for a "full-scale investigation" by the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) of the "most dangerous New Left operating in the country today."

Watson said SDS plans to overthrow the U.S. government, and cited as examples of their tactics the recent Chicago demonstrations and the disruption of Columbia University last spring.

He said Federal agents who attended the SDS National Convention at Michigan State University in June heard sessions which discussed the "fine points of firing Molotov cocktails from shotguns" and other tactics of guerrilla warfare.

Watson also charged that SDS was heavily infiltrated by members of the Communist Party, who see the campus groups as a good base from which to launch their own activities.

COUNCIL REPORTS

Student Body President Bruce Semple called the September 25 meeting of Student Council to order. Committee reports were heard. Social Committee has tentative plans for a costume dance October 5 with a Circus theme. Programs committee stated that tickets for the Ramsey Lewis Trio concert are on sale at the Ticket Office in the Office Annex. NSA coordinator John Ribble announced a new Student Council project. Life-time memberships for the NSA record club will be sold by Council members to students at $2.00 each. The council will receive from NSA fifty cents for each membership sold. The council member selling the most will receive a $5 prize. Don Hickman, new chairman of the organiza-

SDS LEADS IN CAMPUS DISRUPTION

While the organization known as Students for a Democratic society represents only a minuscule minority of students, it has managed to play a leading role in the violence, bloodshed and arson that have exploded across college campuses from Columbia to Stanford.

Details of how this small but militant group has managed to disrupt college life are revealed in the October Reader's Digest by Eugene Methvin of the magazine's Washington bureau. Quoting SDS officials and members, he reports that the organization's ultimate goal "is nothing less than the destruction of society itself."

Methvin quotes one speaker at SDS' national convention at East Lansing, Mich., last June: "The ability to manipulate people through violence and mass media has never been greater, the potential for us as radicals never more exciting, than now." FBI director J. Edgar Hoover has said: "They are a new type of subersive, and their danger is great."

SDS's tactics include use off-campus issues to disrupt campus life, the article points out. An SDS member from Wisconsin put it this way: "We organized dormitory students around rules, and then it was easy to move them on such issues as the university's relation to Chase Manhattan Bank."

The article quotes these among specific SDS proposals for disruption of society; picking public fights with welfare workers; starting trash-can fires and pulling fire alarms in high schools as "forms of protest", making appointments by the score with university deans and registrars- to "overuse the bureaucracy", checking out an inordinate number of books to disrupt libraries and study programs; disrupting draft boards by registering under a false name so "federal agents will spend much time attempting to track down people who do not exist."

While it purports to follow a line of "independent radicalism," Methvin reports SDS betrays growing signs of links to hard-core professional communists. Known communists have sat in on SDS meetings and coached organizers since the organization was founded in 1962; SDS leaders frequently travel to Red capitals; two of three national officers chosen at last June's national convention were self-proclaimed communists.

While many SDSers are actively anti-Kremlin, they share with the communists a common desire to destroy, to annihilate and to tear down, the article asserts.

Citing SDS's role in the recent upheaval at Columbia University, Methvin declares that firmer action by school authorities in support of the anti-radical "Majority Coalition" would have averted escalating violence that culminated in cancellation of classes at Columbia.

CARNIVAL OPENS ARTIST SERIES

The first presentation of the Maryville College - Community Artist Series will be the musical play CARNIVAL, the Broadway version of the movie LILI which ran for two years on the the New York stage from 1961 to 1963. The comedy will be produced at Maryville by Bill Fagan in association with The Third Eye Theatre of Denver. Tickets for the October 17th performance may be obtained at the ticket office in the Office Annex.

Students who wish to attend Artist Series concerts will follow a new procedure that will assure each student a reserved seat, instead of being seated after ticket buyers. There is no cost, since student admission is alread covered by the activity fee, but students will be asked to pick up their tickets in advance and reserve their seats. Certain days will be designated before each performance, during which each student will present his I.D. card at the ticket office in the Office Annex, and will have his choice of the seats not yet sold. No one will be admitted without a ticket.

Tickets for the musical play Carnival, to be presented Thursdat, October 17, may be picked up in the ticket office on October 15 and 16 and until noon the 17th. Idle Words

Last week I was drawn out of my comfortable fog of indifference by a visitor. His problem was that he had paid the fall bills for his son, and had unknowingly included in the payment an extremely rare coin from his collection.

I will help you find your missing coin, I said, intrigued by the thought of reward money, and always anxious to help my neighbor. This college is run by very efficient bookkeeping methods, and the administration will know exactly where every cent of your payment is. It will be no problem to explain the mistake, and recover your lost coin.

He seemed skeptical, but my faith was contagious.

First, I said, you must give me your bill, in order to see just what is the breakdown of your fees.

Unfortunately, the bill was of little help--it stated that the fees covered room, board, tuition, perhaps insurance, and indicated that there were no credits for scholarships, loans, etc. A single figure, at the bottom of the page, mysteriously arrived-at, was all I could find.

Nevertheless, I assured him, the offices will know how the bill is itemized.

In order to avoid the proverbial run-around, I started phase two of my project at the offices I thought LEAST likely to provide me with the facts. I covered the offices of the President, the Director of Student Help, the Head of the Economics Department, and the Dean of Admissions with the same lack of success. But when I reached the Registrar's office, I knew I was getting close. There they tried to throw me off the track by explaining that until they got their statistics straightened out, they didn't even know if the person in question was a full time or commuting student, or if he was a student at all.

By then I knew my plan had worked, and I marched confidently to the treasurer's offices, and demanded to know just what was going on. As expected, they suggested that I try various other offices for the answer, and were temporarily stunned when I presented a signed affadavit from each of the offices I had already seen.

Within a matter of minutes, however, my elation disappeared, as I was told that well, sure, we can find out all you want to know. I've been meaning to track those records down someday anyway. Just come back next Tuesday or November or sometime.

As I saw my visitor off to the airport, I promised that I would follow up the investigation that I was sure I had started. In the meantime, I asked, as he boarded the plane, have you looked in your pockets?

POLL FOR PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION TO BE TAKEN

UCM and the "Echo" are sponsoring a poll of all members of the college community in regard to the November presidential election. There will appear in all mailboxes a questionnaire asking your choice for president and other important questions concerning the campaign of 1968. It is asked that the questionnaires be filled out and placed in designated collection locations. After the poll has been taken a camparison will be made of its results and the results of last year's Choice'68 poll.

NAUSEA

You say life is absurdity
A carnival for melodies
You eye the big time bitterly
And set the stage so faithfully
The hawker for lord my story
While marching so religiously
Is the army that has paid to see
The choirboy of reality
Laugh at all authority
You smile O so cynically
The sole possessor of his key
But it's sad to know that's all You'll ever be!

FREE FLU SHOTS AVAILABLE

It is never too late and with the epidemic that has hit the campus it might be just the right time to get your free flu shots at the college infirmary. The flu shots are available in the infirmary at no charge. Take advantage of the college health plan and get your free shots.

LAW AND ORDER vs. DISSENT CHICAGO—AND BEYO

The time has come again to examine the place of dissent our society. The spector of Major Daley's thugs clubbing deserving and the innocent alike is an image which will lo haunt me when I consider the possibilities for further expres ions of civil disobedience. The reaction in the aftermath Chicago, with letters running 4-1 in favor of Daley's tacti indicates on which side America's silent people place themselv Recently another voice has been added to the anti-disse coalition. Spiro T. Agnew, the man most likely to be the n vice-president of the U.S. has come out strongly for the cau of law and order and in doing so has blurred the issue of t place of dissent. Two quotes from Mr. Agnew are worth co sidering as many of us seek a means to deal with out country fantastic problems.

"If one wants to pinpoint the cause of riots, it would this permissive climate and the misguided compassion of pub opinion. It is not the centuries of racism and deprivation th have built to an explosive crescendo, but the fact that lawbreaki has become a socially acceptable and occasionally stylish fo of dissent..."

It is difficult to believe that a candidate from a major politic party can be so short-sighted and simplistic in his approach the riots. To dismiss the blot of racism so glibly is the ma of the socially naive and intellectually deficient; in short, t mark of the politican playing on fear rather than trusting reason. What is perhaps more frightening and dangerou however, is Mr. Agnew's equating of rioting and acts of ci disobedience. Later in the same article, Mr. Agnew is quot as saying:

"In my opinion, I can be entirely for civil rights and entire against civil disobedience. I'm for the right to demonstra within the confines of free speech. That's a civil right. B when you cross that line and begin to break laws simply becau you are morally convinced that those laws are unjust, who judgement is prope about what is unjust and what is just? Th obviously, can't be left to an individual's decision." (both quot from U.S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT. Sept. 2, 1968, p. 9

In my opinion, this must be left to an individual's decisio The issue, which no candidate seems willing to face, is n law and order, but justice. When faced with alarming inequiti in our foreign policy and within our social structure, the co cerned individual must seek a means of dealing with the injustic Ideally the method is to work within the system, using t machinery of democratic processes to correct the grievanc Increasingly, however, there is evidence that in many ways t democratic process has broken down. The individual faces immense system controlled by machine bosses and ruled power politics. Perhaps the only recourse left is for the individ al to throw himself in front of the steamrolling mass of injustic knowing full well that his sacrifice may not affect a chang but still driven by the inability to contribute to the maintenanc of the injustice himself.

This politics of confrontation is, of course, basically a neg tive one. It is a process of reacting to injustice by the metho of passive resistance and non-cooperation. But in the lig of the candidates chosen by our political machines perhaps th is all that is left to us. Given the frightened mood of Ameri with either Nixon or Humphrey as president, Vietnam will submerged in "safe streets" programs, and dissent will increasingly unpopular and unhealthy. Therefore we must over the heads of the politicians to appeal to the people by mea of the politics of confrontation.

I must, of course, draw a sharp distinction between passi resistance and resorting to violence. To do nothing wh convinced of injustice is to admit that it is not justice but t law which is of consumate importance. But the use of violen to topple an injustice, however great, destroys the moral ba of the protester. Only those actions in which the dissent avoids violence are valid, and he who would bring injusti to the attention of the public by his sacrifice must expect f punishment by the law. I believe that the core of America good, but surrounding that core is a mass of injustice which c only be cut away if the American people can realize the scope of For this reason the demonstrators belonged in the streets Chicago, although I can support only those who refrained fro violence.

What Mr. Agnew and many other politicians are doing is blurri the distinctions between civil disobedience and riots. To do th creates a climate of fear which undercuts the possibilities appealing to moderate America's conscience by the politics confrontation. Using the loaded slogan "law and order", M

While acknowledging that legitimate grievances by students must receive "far more attention" from officials than heretofore, Methvin says that prompt action by students and administrators is a must to prevent campus-wide clashes in the future.

Sidney Hook, noted New York University philosophy professor, has said that SDS members "threaten to become the true grave diggers of academic freedom in the United States". Only prompt action by school authorities and the overwhelming majority of students can prevent the grave from being dug.

tions committee, announced the upcoming Who's Who elections. A summary of the candidates and their activities will be posted. The election committee reported that 65% of the men on campus voted in the recent MSG elections: 45% of the student body voted in the cheerleader elections. Queen elections are coming up this week. Pep Committee plans to award a $25 prize plus the traditional trophy to the first-prize float of this year's Homecoming parade.

Bruce Semple announced that Activities calendars can be purchased from any Student Council member for 25¢. Student Council minutes will soon be posted on strategic bulletin boards around campus to keep the student body informed on its proceedings.

Highlighting the meeting was a report from the Special Committee on Community Life and Structure which is planning the All College Council. The committee is composed of Jim Moore, Linda Jones, Mary Jane Schussler, Dr. Blair, Dr. Parker, Pres. Copeland, Dean Daniels, and Mr. Best, with Bruce Semple. The committee has divided itself into two subcommittees---one will draft the structure of the Council, one will explain the type of community desired at Maryville college. The committee is concerned over several questions. What will student reaction be to the All College Council? Will students be willing to put in time and assume responsibility in working on the various committees that will develop under the Council? Any committee member or Student Council representative will be happy to receive ideas from students on any aspect of the All College Council. A student body meeting is being planned to explain the concept of the All College Council and to receive ideas. Students are urged to attend.

Student Council will continue to meet Wednesdays at 7:00 in the Science Center.

Neglecting Nonviolence

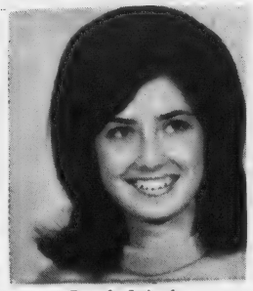
by Dick Gregory

Though it is no easier to get white folks to agree on a particular political issue than it is to produce like consensus in the black community, white America is generally united in deploring the violence of the black ghetto. Black militants are seen to be the enemies of wholesome race relations in this country and are continually publicly rebuked by the mass media. But white America fails to understand that its own rejection of the philosophy of non-violence has produced Stokely Camichael and Rap Brown.

Many people in this country forget, or perhaps never knew, that it was Rap Brown, Stokely Carmichael and other members of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) who taught nonviolence in the early days of the civil rights movement. If white America could have REALLY seen what those kids went through then, it could better understand and appreciate what they are saying now.

Every white American should have been with Stokely and Rap in Greenwood, Mississippi, when they tried to integrate the schools. All during the summer months, while most Americans were enjoying their vacations, SNCC members were canvassing the black community. They had to convince poor sharecroppers that their kids were needed to test the Supreme Court decision on school desegregation.

SNCC did a good job that summer. They got twelve families to permit their children to be used in the intergration effort. At least they thought they had twelve when they went to bed the night before opening day of school. The next morning only eight reported -- four had copped out. Just try to imagine what it feels like to go to a five-year-old kid's house to pick him up for the first day of school. He is all smiles and excitedly happy. And you place his little black hand in yours and wonder why someone hasn't had the courage to tell him that he might be going to die.



When you come to the school building, you see the cops barricading it and the sheriff says "Where you going, nigger?" And you answer, "I'm going to school." The little kid looks up innocently and says, "Mornin', mister." And the sheriff snaps, "Well, you can't bring that car in here." So you park the car and get out cautiously. You tightly grip that little black hand again and the inside of your hand is soaking wet with sweat. Not the kid's sweat, but your own.

As you approach the school building, you see a sight that makes you know that somebody is going to die. You see the mob and the police. When you hit the school steps, you know you weren't wrong. You are not only attacked by the mob, but by the sheriff and the police. The next thing you know you are flat on your back in the gutter with that sheriff's foot on your chest amd a double-barreled shotgun in your throat. You hear a voice snarl, "Move, nigger, and I'll blow your brains out." You're terrified but you think how ironic it is that the only time white folks will admit you have brains is when they are talking about what they are going to do to them.

Then the most horrible thing happens that has ever happened to you in your life. You suddenly realize that the little black hand is not there. And you turn around to look for that little five-year-old kid. You spot him just in time to see a brick hit him right in the mouth. That just doesn't read right for some reason. You have to actually see a brick hit a five-year-old kid in the mouth, regardless of what color the kid is. Only then can you realize the depths of blind and insane hate.

Now you have to take that bruised and bleeding little kid, whose early-morning smile has been pulverized and perhaps erased forever, back home to his parents who trusted you. You have to try to explain what happened. You have to hope you will have their support when you have the stomach to try again. And your own words choke you and anything you are able to say sounds so unconvincing.

You may never be able to justify Stokely and Rap, but when you know what they have been through, you may be able to understand them. If all white Americans were through the same treatment those SNCC kids went through, half of them would have committed suicide and the other half would be burning this country to the ground.

MEXICAN SUMMER

Among the many students from Maryville visiting foreign countries during the summer was Miss Brenda Laipply, a senior majoring Spanish education. Through a scholarship grant from Florida Presbyterian University, Miss Laipply attended classes at the summer session of the University of the Americas in Mexico City from June 14 through August 10. Traveling with her were 26 other students representing colleges and universities throughout the United States.

For the first 5 and one half weeks Miss Laipply attended morning lectures both at the University of the Americas and the University of Mexico designed to familiarize the students with Mexican History and culture. The afternoons were filled with classes in Spanish and Mexican literature and Spanish conversation--all taught in Spanish.

A series of weekend excursions to the floating gardens of Xochimilco, Teotichucan, the city of the ancient Aztec civilization, the shrine of Guadalupe, Acapulco and to bullfights gave Miss Laipply the opportunity of viewing the surrounding countryside. She was particularly impressed with the mountains and the natural beauty of the landscape. Her greatest thrill was a swim in the Pacific.

The last week of the trip was spent in Tepatzlan a Y.M.C.A. camp, where the students studied for and took their final examinations. On the return to Mexico City a tour including a 100 mile radius of the city included such places as Morelia, Querrentarro, Curenavaca, and Taxco, the silver city.

Miss Laipply found the Mexican people throughly involved with the prospect of the Olympic games and received what she called an Americanized view of Mexico because of this. However, the opportunity of studying and living in Mexico for a summer reaffirmed her conviction that the only way to learn a language is to live among the people who speak it.

Recognitions cont.

Agnew himself is bringing violence upon our nation. By taking what used to be a valid American term and using it as a hatchet, he chops away at the basis for the peaceful expression of an individual's conscience.

"America our nation has been beaten by strangers who have turned our language inside out who have taken the clean words our fathers spoke and made them slimy and foul." (John Dos Passos)

COLLEGE ARTIST SERIES SEEKS INVOLVMENT

The College Community Artist Series for 1968-69 is rapidly becoming a total involvement of cooperation among representatives of Maryville, Alcoa, Blount County, and Maryville College.

The 1968-69 Artist Series promises to be a highly entertaining one with three major events scheduled for college age students and older adults, plus the advent of a Student Artist Series, aimed primarily at grades from 1 through 6, but for secondary school children too.

The three college and adult events are the Denver's Third Eye Theatre presentation of the musical "Carnival" slated for Thursday, October 17; the Tucson (Ariz.) Boys Chorus calendared for Monday, March 3, 1969; and the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra with pianist Loren Hollander, and directed by the famous Robert Shaw, scheduled for Monday, April 14, 1969. These three events are to be performed in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville College campus at 8:15 p.m.

The three Student Artist Series programs are planned for afternoon performances at 2 p.m. in Wilson Chapel and are for young people from grade school through high school. The young people's programs include the local 3 Arts Theatre production of "The Magic Glen," a play designed to appeal to young school children scheduled for Monday, October 28. The Tucson Boys Chorus is slated for Monday, March 3, 1969, and the Continental Air Command Band from Warner-Robbins (Ga.) Air Base is scheduled for Monday, March 31.

Patron memberships are currently being solicited at $15 each with the final date of purchase Monday, September 30.

Single tickets may be purchased at the College ticket office located in the Anderson Hall annex. There is no general admission. All tickets are reserved and must be picked up in advance of the performance. Individual adult tickets are $3.50 and students through college age are $1.75.

The Parent-Teacher's Associations of Maryville, Alcoa, and Blount County are spearheading the sale of tickets for the Student Artist Series programs, and will be in charge of transportation to and from the performances in Wilson Chapel. Season tickets for the Student Artist Series programs are $1 per student for three performances. There are no single admissions.

H. I. U. PROGRESSES

Last spring the former Fred Hope Fund became the new "Hope for International Understanding." This organization has long stood as one of the few outlets for foreigh concerns, but it has been a one-way channel too much of the time because there has not been enough of a follow-through of student sponsored projects. With the new H. I. U. it is hoped that Maryville College can develop into much more of a cosmopolitan center simply by realizing the variety of cultures represented within the student body and faculty. Each year the Hope Fund will continue to raise money from the Maryville campus and community for a project overseas as a phase of the H. I. U. program that will kindle a greater international awareness for all. Last summer Dinni Drake, in the Crossorads Program, and Jim Spotts, at the Adura Riber Missionary Station, was supported partically by this fund as well as was the Tibetan Refugee School in North India. Each of these projects will be enumerated on in future articles in the ECHO.

There was a great deal of interest shown by the student body in last year's projects-- an interest that should be encouraged throughout the campus to broaden the scope of present educational programs, social activities, and intellectual pursuits. A dynamic team of students is needed on the head committee of Hope for International Understanding in order to coordinate activities and provide a stimulus for overseas concerns. For further information see David Rugh. Box 2755.

MUSIC COMPETITION

"Sounds of Young America", is a new national competition for collegiate composers and writers and will provide an opportunity for students to compete for national recognition and scholarships, plus a chance to see their works performed by the top stars of records and show business.

The event offers five categories of competition, two literary and three musical. Writers get an opportunity to demonstrate excellence in either dramatic and comedic writing or poetry and prose. Composers will compete in popular music, fold music and jazz categories.

Entrance applications may be secured from "Sounds of Young America", Room 458, Union Pacific Building Annex, Salt Lake City, Utah 84111. There is no charge for entering the contest.

1968 SCOTS

'ROOS OUT JUMP SCOTS

Scoring in the first quarter only, The Scots were defeated by Austin College by a score of 28-7. The Scots scored on a pass from quarterback Dave Garner to Don Hickman (a 44 yard play), and an extra kick by Jim Cannon.

The Kangaroos came back in the first quarter and tied the game. The second quarter was a big one for the 'roos, who scored a big 21 points, pulling way ahead of the Scots. Nobody scored in the second half.

The Scots did not do such a bad job out there. They kept Austin down to 28 points, 12 below their average this year. And if I'm not mistaken, the Scots were the first to score against them too. Austin had a record of 6-3-0 for last year and did not play Maryville. Their enrollment is 970. So, considering all sides of the story we can be proud of our Scots.

STAGG

Each week the football coaching staff chooses a player who, in their opinion, played an outstanding game that week. This player received the Amos Alonzo Stagg award, presented at the pep rally.

Born in 1862, Stagg lived to be 103. He is known as the "grand old man of football," and it is easy to see why. He had the longest coaching career in history. While at Yale, Stagg played end on the football team and was chosen to be a member of the first All-American team. He was also an outstanding pitcher, and turned down many offers to become professional.

After coaching and playing at Springfield (Mass.) College. Stagg joined the athletic department at the University of Chicago in 1892. Among some of his achievements while there were the end around play, the hidden-ball trick, the huddle, the shift, man-in-motion, and the practice tackling dummy. During his career five Chicago teams were undefeated and six won Western Conference chapmionships. Stagg retired from Chicago at the age of 70, with a record of 268 wins, 141 losses.

He moved to the College of the Pacific, and in 1943 was chosen coach of the year. In 1946 he moved to Susquehanna College, and then to Stocton Jr. College in 1953, where he gave up coaching in 1960. He had a 71 years coaching record. He died there in 1965.

Amos Alonzo Stagg stood for character development, clean habits, and a healthy mind and body. Because of his achievements he was chosen as a member of the Football Hall of Fame, both as a coach and player.

The man who receives the weekly award can be proud that he is carrying on such fine qualities of character and sportsmanship.

Sports Editorial

I went to the pep rally (that's what they called it) the other night. It was supposed to show the football team that the school and their fellow students are behind them. I guess by now the team has a good idea about how many kids are really for them.

It isn't as if the rally were a real long, time-consuming ordeal. Actually, it lasted only ten minutes. Wow! That really gets to you. Like, ten minutes out of your study time, one night a week, might really hurt.

And what happened to the band? They spend more time going and coming than they do at the rally. What about it, Mr. Stallings? Maybe we won't have any time for your concerts this year.

If the football team can go out and practice each day, if the coaches can put all their effort into training the team, if the cheerleaders can spend their time learning cheers, then you can find a few minutes to walk over to the field and show these people that their efforts aren't going for nothing.

There's a word that I think I hear in one of those cheers. It's Pep-ability. And the rest of it goes something like: You do your best, boys/We'll do the rest, boys/WE are the Maryville Scotties.

The next rally is for a Home game. Will you be there?

"Cool Generation"

A psychology professor at Haverford College who has been studying the "cool generation" of college students says their problems are the results of changes in national education goals over the past 10 years.

"We have abandoned the goal of every major educational philosopher since Socrates as well as the goal most appropriate for a democracy," states Dr. Douglas Heath. "We no longer strive to develop human excellence--- we strive to develop only intellectual excellence."

From a psychological point of view, he says student unrest stems from too much stress on intellectual development at the expense of emotional and social development. At the same time, Dr. Heath suggests it would be better if students would "blow their cool." He said: "To play it cool is to become more detached from one's feelings and moods, to distrust spontaneity, to reject tenderness, affection, sentiment, weakness, serious involvement..."

"Coolness produces inner emptiness, emotional bankruptcy and boredom."

Dr. Heath said analysis of data on incoming freshmen at Haverford since World War 11 also revealed these important trends:

"Young people today are becoming more self-centered. They over-value the role of the "intellect."

"Young persons spurred by the New Left desire academic power, believe they should organize the university, and are more competent than most faculty to make academic decisions."

"Contemporary freshmen are not hung up on sex, their parents, or their academic work. Their greatest preoccupation is loneliness."

All other things, to their destruction draw,
Only our love hath no decay;
This, no to-morrow hath, nor yesterday,
Running it never runs from us away,
But truly keeps first, last, everlasting day.

1968 - 1969 HOMECOMING QUEEN AND COURT

Miss Jean Hobson

At a student body meeting, October 8th, nominations were made for the Homecoming court for 1968-69. From the senior nominees, five girls were elected to represent MC in this year's Homecoming festivities. From these five: Sue Carr, Sally Green, Jean Hobson, Brenda Laipply, and Mary Jane Schussler, MISS BRENDA LAIPPLY was chosen Homecoming Queen for 1968-69, in a campus-wide election the following Thursday.

Brenda, a foreign language major from Mansfield, Ohio, has been very active in her four years at Maryville. Leading the Band as a Highland Lassie, participating in student government as Vice-President of WSGA, and serving as President of Chi Beta have distinguished Miss Laipply as an intregal part of campus life. She has also actively participated in the counseling program of the school as a Sophomore Aide and as a Junior and Senior Counselor. Demonstrating her scholastic achievement, Brenda is a member of both the German Club and Sigma Delta Pi, and has made the Dean's List and received the Padgett Memorial Scholarship, despite her extensive involvment in other aspects of college life.

An outstanding Court will accompany Miss Laipply as she reigns over the Homecoming events. MISS SUE CARR, a foreign language major from Medford, Mass., significantly contributes to campus life as Chairman of the Pep Committee and as President of Pi Delta Phi. Sue also holds the unique status of being the only female member of Alpha Sigma society.

SALLY GREEN from Windsor Locks, Conn. is a Psychology major who has earned a place of distinction at MC through her various activities, such as: Secretary of Student Council, Secretary of Psi Sigma Mu, Secretary-Treasurer of the Junior Class, Barn Warming Sponsor, a member of the Daisy Chain, and a Senior Counselor.

JEAN HOBSON is a Sociology major from Staunton, Va., who has proved to be a valuable member of the student body while serving on WSGA council and Programs Committee. Miss Hobson was also elected Circle K Sweetheart for 1968.

MARY JANE SCHUSSLER, an English major from Houston, Pa., has many distinctive accomplishments to her credit. Miss Schussler served as Chairman of the UCCF Social Commission, Literary Editor for the 1968 Chilhowean, and as a member of the February Meetings Committee. In the area of student government, Mary Jane now serves as President of WSGA, a member of Student Council, and a member of the Student Council Special Committee. Her other activities include having a Sophomore Aide, Senior Counselor, and a Daisy Chain member. Also added to her achievements are Dean's List and the Padgett Memorial Scholarship.

Both the queen and her court will be presented at the Ramsey Lewis Trio Concert, Friday night, and in the Homecoming parade on Saturday morning. Highlighting the half-time festivities of the football game Saturday afternoon will be the crowning of the Queen and the formal presentation of her court.

Ramsey Lewis -- Sketch of a Swinger

Sketch of a Swinger

"Pianist RAMSEY LEWIS is not only in, he is the hottest jazz artist going", reported Time magazine. "The younger generation has adopted Lewis as the purveyor of a new and wondrous sound."

The new sound of RAMSEY LEWIS, first heard on his Cadet recording of "The In Crowd", won virtual overnight success for the tall, academic looking Chicagoan, who has led his town trio since 1955.

The "In Crowd", which has sold into the millions, (followed by the equally successful recordings of "Hang on Sloopy" and "Wade in the Water"), has resulted in TV appearances on the country's shows (Tonight, Hullabullo and concert tours (Lincoln Center, Carnegie Hall, Ravinia) in every part of the nation.

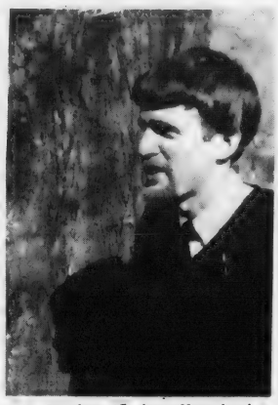
Lewis' recognition was capped, when the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences awarded him a Grammy (the record industry's Oscar) for "The In Crowd".

Ramsey began his piano studies at the age of six and by the time he graduated from grammar school in 1948, had won the American Legion Award for outstanding scholarship, a special award for his services as official pianist at Edward Jenner Elementary School, and a $150 college scholarship in a contest for gospel choirs and choruses held in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He also, took second place on the "Stars of Tomorrow", TV show.

In high school, Ramsey led the senior division of the American Society of Musicians in Chicago, got a superior rating from the Illinois Federation of Music Clubs, and won scholarships to Chicago Musical College and Roosevelt University. After graduation, Ramsey attended Chicago Musical College, worked as a record department manager, and played professionally with the Clefs, a seven-piece dance band.

While performing with the Clefs, attending school and working in the department store, Ramsey found time to marry his pretty childhood sweetheart, Geraldine. The marriage, as successful as Ramsey's career, has produced five children.

The Clefs disbanded in 1955, Ramsey formed his own trio. A Chicago policeman heard Ramsey and introduced him to Leonard and Phil Chess of Argo Records. A Chicago disc jockey heard their first recording, introduced it to his audience, and Ramsey's star began to rise.



Continuously in demand as the headliner for metropolitan concerts and the star attraction in American night clubs, Ramsey has appeared on the nation's top television shows. Established as a "regular" on the Tonight Show, and the Mike Douglas Show, Ramsey continues to reach every segment of the American public.

Radio personalities across the country report that the music of Ramsey Lewis is continuously requested during every time period of the day and night. Housewives, high school and college students, doctors, lawyers, and people from all walks of life make up the "In Crowd" who flock to each performance and to purchase recordings by Ramsey Lewis.

During the past eighteen months, Ramsey has been featured in most of the leading national publications. These include Time, Harper's Bazaar, Vogue, and Playboy Magazines. The Sunday Magazine Section of the New York News and Tuesday Magazine have presented feature articles on Ramsey Lewis. Over one hundred metropolitan newspapers and three hundred and fifty college publications have printed lengthy interviews with Ramsey Lewis in which he has voiced his opinion of the American music scene and the contemporary issues of our time.

During these times of mixed public musical taste; when new groups and sounds are soaring to the top, and then descending out of sight before the public can learn their names, Ramsey Lewis continued to garner new fans and reach greater heights in the world of entertainment. There is no doubt that this musical genius will remain at the top for quite some time to come.

On October 15, the college bookstore began sales of a new volume of poetry, MY WATERMELON MAN, by a recent (1967) graduate of Maryville College, David Reed Powell. The design for the dust jacket is the product of another Maryville graduate, Heather Van Dyke (1967), and the illustrations are by a third graduate of Maryville, Sara Parker Scotchmer (1966). My WATERMELON MAN is a Vantage Press publication and is now available at the bookstore.

Last week when I was asked to write about David's book for the ECHO, I felt a bit timid, but flattered and willing to say what I could about the small new volume of Powell poetry, realizing that what I can say about it is necessarily influenced by what I know of the poet himself. Many of us who were living at Maryville when David was (two short years ago) and who know him, or his poetry, like to say to each other, "I told you so," and appear smug about this, his first publication. However, speaking for myself, and I'm sure for others, the feeling I get when I hold the actual hard-backed, dust-jacketed book in my hand is amazement, wonder, triumph. The reasons for this are more than merely the fact that someone we know has published a book of poetry. The reasons are the someone, and the poetry.

David Reed Powell--a long, bony figure, leaning forward for emphasis, reddish, longish hair, a drawn face, sometimes bearded, and often distant but always kind eyes. Dave. He lived here as a student, first as a biology major. While he lived and studied at Maryville he spent a good deal of his time exploring the section of the Smokies we see from the back of campus. Beyond those mountains he travelled to Europe one summer vacation and brought back with him new dimensions of exploration. All along the way from Maryville and across the sea he touched and loved people and experiences. All along the way he captured people and experiences in words----he wrote poetry. Here at Maryville, he became known for his words--his images. He himself became an image. He talked his poetry to any of us who would listen to him, he wrote it and gave it to us, he read it to us in the Lantern, pacing and repeating, pausing to hope that his water color visions came clear to us. The ECHO printed his poems and some of us still have old clippings of them, the familiar words of which we recognize with great satisfaction in the new pages of MY WATERMELON MAN.

It is natural that in the gathering of David's poetry we see the development of a journey. He paints it light and dark as it goes - - - always wending, searching. I can't, I won't, begin to analyze one single line of it for you. We who know David and his poetry (the two are inseparable) know that he must be heard and it must be read as it is in the final perfect image, not in explication. Read this small book. Buy it or borrow it, but read it. Open it to the first poem of searching and expect to be not only witness of a journey, delightful, dreadful, capricious, somber, light-hearted, and of great import, but expect to travel along the paths of your own experience with amazing, even exaggerated clarity, through David's words and images. Watch and enact the journey and in the last poem ask with David and the goatherd, "why?"

So I have asked what is the meaning?
Now with winter and the long descent, this is the question in the cold grey skies of my tomorrow.

David's answer, the goatherd's answer... at least for the moment...

In the springtime when the mountains are the talk and the new sun has set the streams to bringing us the news of fields remembered, and the goats are losing hair, and all the bladder flasks are snug against our hips with getting on,
We shall know again as we have always known that the journey is its own meaning, and going up is easier than coming down for goatherds.

"The journey is its own meaning," and after you have closed MY WATERMELON MAN, wait and hope for more meanderings from David Reed Powell. Here is the wonder and the triumph.

All College Council Progress

At the meeting of the Student-Faculty Senate on Tuesday evening, October 8, members of the Special Committee on Community Life and Structure reported progress on their proposal for an All-College Council. For two weeks the Committee was divided into subcommittees, one to formulate the philosophical basis for the new structure and the other to draw up a plan for an All-College Council and committee organization.

Jim Reynolds summarized the findings of the subcommittee assigned to formulate the philosophy. His report included statements regarding the concept of community and the constituents of a college community. The requirements for the success of a community growing from a voluntary association, he stated, are "mutual respect, mutual trust, recognition of mutal dependence, promotion of community order, and acceptance of personal responsibility." Such a community demands informed, concerned, and active participation, with each member asking and answering one major question: "What must I be and do if this community is to fulfill its purpose?"

Jim Moore, a member of the subcommittee assigned to submit a plan for the Council and the committee structure, presented the report of that group. He explained that although the details must be considered tentative until the entire Committee had had time for fuller discussion, an attempt would be made to reach a consensus as soon as possible.

In working out the details the subcommittee was guided by these considerations: (1) the need for a balance between the continuing element and the transient element within the community; (2) a respect for the distinct functions of the consituent groups and at the same time a concern for creating a sense of unity; (3) a consideration of the varing levels of experience and responsibility so as to insure both a flow of fresh ideas and a mature weighing of those ideas; and (4) the desirability of providing in the legislative process for one group (the committee) to be concerned primarily with study, research, and the initiation of new measures; and another group (the Council) to be free to hear debate, to deliberate, to make impartial decisions, and to devote time to long range plans for the College.

The proposal called for equal representation from each of three groups: the student body, the faculty, and the administration and staff. It was proposed that student nominations come from the classes, with gradually increasing representation from sophomore to senior, and that the faculty nominations come from within the entire group, with selections to be made from three categories determined by years of service. It was further proposed that after each group makes its nominations, the total community participate in the election of all Council members. As another step toward creating unity and providing a medium through which every member of the community might have a voice, it was recommended that some form of town meeting be held at regularly scheduled times.

Continuing his report, Mr. Moore stated that the Committee was in the process of defining the scope and responsibilities of the present committees as a first step toward reorganizing the committee structure, the purpose being to simplify and to clarify the process through which legislative action must go and, if possible, to provide direct access to the Council.

Along with decisions regarding the overall committee structure, he added, must come decisions as to whether the committee should be all student, all faculty, or joint, the consensus of the Committee on Community Life and Structure being that more joint committees are desirable.

Following the two reports, Student Body President Bruce Semple called for reactions from the members of the Student-Faculty Senate. Points were clarified and suggestions made for methods of determining committee membership. The Senate was assured that the Committee would continue working to meet the time schedule established last spring.

Handicrafts: A Developing Resource For Appalachia

Six of the ten poorest counties in the United States are in Appalachia, a region that covers 150,000 square miles and is home to 17 million people. The number of people in Appalachia receiving federal assistance is 45 percent higher than the rest of the country.

But despite its abandoned mines, Appalachia still retains resources for the future. And two VISTA Volunteers assigned to the area have stumbled across one of its more unlikely ones—quilting.

Quilting is one of the hidden resources of Appalachia. Until recently it had proved about as profitable as the ability to tell a good tale or whistle through your teeth.

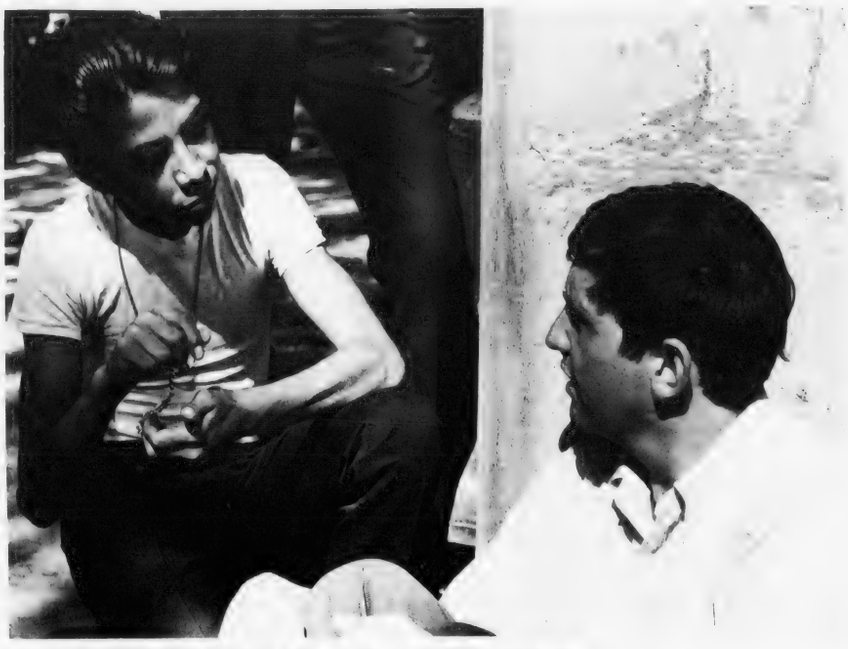
"Everyone makes quilts in Appalachia so there's no demand for them," said VISTA John Kobak, explaining why women would sell a quilt that took 150 hours to make for $10 or $12.

Kobak, 21, a Harvard man, is aware that there is a market for the crafts of Appalachia in the northern cities or on the East and West Coasts, where handicraft long ago disappeared in the flood of factory-made products. To get the money to reach these markets —to pay for advertising and shipping—Kobak and other Volunteers assigned to Appalachian communities are working to establish local handicraft cooperatives.

The cooperatives group together people with traditional handicraft skills and take 10 percent of the sale to meet the cost of finding new markets.

In Dickenson County, Kentucky, where Kobak works, 25 women have formed The Quilting Bee. Through a series of pie suppers, they raised money to pay for a brochure featuring photographs of the quilts and descriptions of the patterns.

Kobak, who talks knowledgeably of quilting, reels off the traditional pattern names, "Double Wedding Ring, Field of Diamonds, Star of Bethlehem, Oddfellow, Drunkard's Path." The last, he says, "looks just like op art."



"The women work alone on a quilt because a quilt made by one person is much more valuable," he explained. "They have a big frame which practically fills the room."

The Quilting Bee is setting up a standards board which will pass on each woman's work before she VISTA Rolland Michael talks with a gang member in Santa Fe.

What the Tourists Don't See in Old Sante Fe

By the thousands, year after year, and for very good reasons too, the tourists come to Santa Fe, New Mexico.

They flock to the colorful adobe-style city to walk its picturesque streets and they visit the Palace of the Governors built almost 300 years ago by Spanish colonialists.

Tourism is the industry in Santa Fe.

But the picture postcards and polaroid snapshots the travelers take home don't show the families of 8 or 10 living in two-room shacks without running water.

Or the teenagers who drop out of school because they can't speak English and can't keep up with the work.

Rejected by schools, employers, and society, the youths congregate at a five-and-dime store on the "Plaza," a square in the center of town. They group together in gangs that give them a stability they've never found elsewhere. Through violence the boys achieve a feeling of power.

Rolland "Mike" Michael of Rochester, New York, came to Santa Fe four months ago to work for a year as a VISTA (Volunteer In Service To America).

"Three years ago," Mike said, "Santa Fe was literally 'gang land,' with gangs 200 strong." A former high school teacher there, Brother Godfrey Reggio, S.S.C., broke the gangs down into smaller groups so that the youngsters could be reached and formed "Young Citizens For Action" with which Mike works now.

Mike met several of the youths, and found that they were involved in legal difficulties. "I went to hearings with them—their parents usually don't—got to know their friends, and helped them get jobs," Mike said. "As tough as they try to be, they're pretty scared inside."

Mike found that in working with the 14-to-16-year-olds, he had to demonstrate an interest in them as a group first, then as people. "The boys have no self-confidence," he said, "and the group gives them personality. They have no feeling of family or self-worth, and they hold in guilt feelings until they explode. This usually results in violence. They're a negative influence on each other. When you see them walk along the street together, a feeling of panic runs through you.

"But," he continued, "once you convince them that you're for them and that they're worthwhile, they want something to hold on to. They don't want to be violent, but violence is a means of expression. If you put them into a creative setting, they're surprised at themselves, and suddenly a fight is distasteful to them."

Mike encourages individualism, discourages activities as a group except for recreational participation. Mike tries to break the dependence on the group and have the boys think for themselves.

The schools are little help. There are no classes geared for youngsters who speak Spanish, and so the youths fall behind when the reading becomes demanding, which adds to their feeling of worthlessness. When Mike tried to get one 16-year-old boy into a special education class, he was told by officials that the boy should get a job. But the boy wanted to go to school.

"The kids are bitter toward school," said Mike. "School has convinced Hector that he's dumb. As far as academics go he may be. But there is nothing wrong with his mind and he knows what he's thinking."

Mike is quietly tutoring one boy, who is afraid the group will ridicule him.

In addition to helping the boys educationally, Mike has encouraged several of them to enter the Job Corps. In this way, they can receive training that will enable them to get jobs. As the boys find employment, experience shows, they form new friendships and break their dependence on the group.

Mike feels that in working with these boys it is important to maintain his own standards. "There are always people in the group mad at you because you won't concede to them," he said. "They continually test you. They wait to be rejected and constantly ask you to do things that you can't do, like buying them beer, for example. Their reliance on me determines how long they stay angry. The more dependent they are, the faster they get over it.

"It's a matter of teaching them that you don't use people for what they have," said the VISTA. "I try to make myself dependent on them instead. It helps a lot if you're on equal terms or if you're dependent in some measure on them. Then you can make suggestions as a peer. For this reason, I haven't gotten my driver's license yet. If a boy will walk three blocks with you, that's not so

College Students and Their Place in Society

We in VISTA don't subscribe to the inaccurate and over-inflated current concept which charges college students with failing to recognize their responsibilities and their places in society. We know that the students who dig in far outnumber those who tune out.

It's true that they don't make the headlines but it is also true, in a far more commanding way, that very significant numbers are aware of horizons unbounded by myopic, selfish views.

We see this in VISTA every day. What is more important is that numbers of the 30 million Americans who are forced by the circumstances of their lives into the tortured category of the poor see it too. Wherever there are poor people, in some small measure there are VISTA Volunteers. Today, in 49 states, in the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, in Guam and in American Samoa, there are VISTAs.

About 75 per cent of the Volunteers now out in the field or in training have been to college. And we have found that 35 per cent of the more than 8,000 Americans who became Volunteers since the program began in the Winter of 1965, either elected to serve for a second full year or increased their length of service by periods of months. That indicates very clearly I think, the quality of the people who join VISTA and how they feel about the job.

VISTA goes only where it is invited and the invitations—now that people have discovered what it can do—are pouring in.

Last year at this time there were requests for 13,850 Volunteers to serve on 1,101 projects. Today the figures are nearly 40 per cent greater with 18,987 asked for to serve on 1,509 projects.

That means America wants you if you're willing to give a year to a tough, frequently disagreeable, but profoundly affecting experience—for people who need your help and for you.

VISTA Larry Kelly is assigned to Allenville, Ariz., a community featured in the VISTA film, "While I Run This Race." The film, which depicts VISTAs working in two migrant communities —one Negro (Allenville) and one Mexican-American—was written and directed by Edmond A. Levy and narrated by Charlton Heston. The documentary is available free in a 28½ minute, 16 mm version and may be obtained through Sterling Movies, Inc., 43 W. 61st St., New York, New York.

Martha Donez, a 19-year-old VISTA Volunteer, works with the Choctaw Indians in Idabel, Oklahoma.

"All Allenville Is Almost One Big Drop-out"

Thirty-five miles west of Phoenix just off Highway 80 is Allenville, Arizona, barely a dot on a map. It goes largely unnoticed by the hundreds of cars that roar daily down the highway.

Yet Allenville is home to some 450 migrants, mostly Negro, who perform the stoop labor necessary to pick cotton, cucumbers, roses, lettuce and onions. It's backbreaking work that pays a mere 90 cents an hour and that only during the season which runs from September through December. The community is an eyesore. Junk litters the rutted unpaved streets. There are no street lights, no stop signs.

Entire families are crammed into foul, one-room shacks. Most are without heat, electricity or plumbing. Children attend school periodically, but even drop out from that to pick in the fields to help eke out a meager existence. No one goes to college and few finish high school. A migrant child grows up unskilled, suited only to become a migrant adult. New generations are bred into poverty, disease, ignorance, and filth.

But Allenville is changing. Last year two VISTA Volunteers came to Allenville to live like the migrants in a shack, share their discomforts, and work with the migrants to help them better their lives.

Today Allenville has its own beautification program. Trees, flowers and grass are gradually replacing the mud and dust, piles of trash, and abandoned cannibalized cars. The town had a clean-up campaign and its residents are developing civic pride for the first time.

Thirty-five adults are studying at night to pass their High School General Equivalency exams. The classes were started by VISTA Volunteers, Laurence J. Kelly and his roommate, Bob Breving.

They used the back room of their two-room shack for the classes.

"They really kept us going," said 22-year-old Kelly, who completed two years as a history major at the University of Minnesota before he joined VISTA.

"I read about VISTA and said to myself, 'It's about time you looked in the mirror. There are too many poor people here,' I decided to join VISTA and help."

Kelly trained for six intensive weeks at the University of Colorado where he learned such things as how to build an outhouse. After training he was assigned to Allenville to work for a year under the sponsorship of the Migrant Opportunity Program of Arizona.

The youth of Allenville are being trained for job skills through the Neighborhood Youth Program that the VISTAs started. Many young people now have jobs in nearby towns.

Six youngsters who dropped out of school are now back in classes due to the VISTAs who tutored them. "All Allenville is almost one big drop-out," explained Kelly.

But the Volunteers' biggest triumph was getting two Allenville teenagers scholarships to college: John, who was elected freshman representative, is studying sociology and Ocie is studying business.

Gradually the VISTAs are turning their work over to the community. Their adult education classes outgrew their cramped back room and are now conducted by local teachers in the new education center. The VISTAs had helped build a child care center that is also being run by the community.

The community banded together and got their first street lights and stop signs. The VISTA Volunteers helped them draw up their petitions and hold meetings but the people actually did the work themselves and took their petition to the County Supervisor's office.

By dint of ceaseless prodding the Volunteers have been instrumental in bringing new industry into their community. A shirt factory is opening which will provide employment. The VISTAs visit homes and get to know the people and their problems. They arrange for jobs and job training in nearby Phoenix for the migrants. The Western Electric hired a number of them. Slowly but surely the poverty cycle with the migrants is being broken.

The VISTAs' year was up in June, but Kelly elected to stay on for an additional year. "I felt somebody should remain to see that the programs really were carried on," he said.

As for the future, he plans to return to college and get his degree in sociology. "My aim is to work on community action and with juveniles," he said.

DIALOGUE: How It Is On the Other Side

VISTA recently taped a discussion with four Volunteers on the problems that confront a member of the middle class on moving into a poor neighborhood. Participants were Peter Howell, 21, who attended Wesleyan University; Martha Epstein, 23, who received a bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of California at Los Angeles; Jerry Morton, 24, who received a bachelor's degree from Michigan State University and a master's in journalism from Northwestern University and Edith Murphy, 23, who received a bachelor's degree in psychology from California State College at Long Beach.

Both Howell and Miss Epstein are assigned to the National Committee of Children and Youth in Washington, D.C. and work with Project Challenge, a job training and counseling program at the Youth Center for convicted felons at Lorton, Va. Both live in Washington, D.C.

Morton and Miss Murphy are assigned to the Baltimore Community Action Agency. Morton works out of the Wolfe St. Center. Miss Murphy works with the E. Baltimore St. Center in an area with a high percentage of Lumbee Indians.

MURPHY

EPSTEIN

JERRY MORTON: One of the biggest differences between the lower—so-called lower—economic classes and the middle class is the ability to control your own destiny. In the area where I work, people become very dependent on others, not necessarily by their own choosing. But all along the line their destiny and their life is controlled for them. First of all, if the man is on welfare, you have the social worker who has the power of economic life and death over a client. He gives the check to the client and then the landlord comes along and takes that check away. Or the check goes down to the corner grocer. There's no ability to plan.

You take so much for granted in the middle class. Shall I join VISTA or go to school or this or that? Or even go to a ballgame. But in the area where I work, people are really confined by lack of money. They don't get out beyond their own block.

PETER HOWELL: If you have money or stability in your background, you can worry about other people, about your part in society. Whereas, if you don't have money you just worry about you, yourself.

I think the main difference with the prisoners is that they don't feel responsible to other people because other people haven't been responsible to them. They haven't benefitted from other people's presence, generally speaking. So they're not concerned with helping others and they kind of feel they're not making it at all and everyone else is. They see nothing but new cars on the street and television shows that you should have silken smooth hands . . . and they don't. So they feel, "Some people have money. We don't have money and we should have money. It's kind of owed to us because this is supposed to be an affluent society."

JERRY MORTON: You're brought up with certain values and then you realize how relative values are. Relative to how much money you have—almost, you can afford to have certain values, if you've got a lot of money or have been brought up in a family which for generations has held pretty good jobs.

EDITH MURPHY: It's really pitiful how the people in our area have to go and beg. We tell them, when they go down to an agency, "Demand your rights."

JERRY MORTON: My area is about 50-50 racially, although 85 to 90 percent of the people who come to the Center are Negroes. As far as the older people are concerned, I can feel they expect this paternalistic attitude; they have a defeatist attitude. Almost the poorer people are—and we have very poor people in our area, both white and black—the more they want to talk to you and want you to come into their house. And the really frustrating thing is that sometimes I don't do anything. They call me and I'll go over there and just talk to them about a welfare problem and maybe give them information. But not really do much. And they feel like you've done a lot.

EDITH MURPHY: It's pretty hard to be objective when you go down with people to wait in Domestic Court and they're nervous. You're nervous too, because you really care that they get that welfare check. It's become a part of you. It's hard not to be emotional. I think maybe it's even wrong not to be emotional. But I think you do have to keep a little objectivity. Your background, your schooling help. Their lives are so tangled up. You can go into their home situation and say, "Why don't you do such and such or go to such and such." And they have never thought of it. And that way you're being objective because you can lead people to the right resources. And you have to be objective in this way. But you have to have the background to do this.

PETER HOWELL: Sometimes when people have these huge problems, I'll just feel that I'm not really that involved in it. I'm involved in it to an extent but it's not really hanging me up and I'll feel guilty that I'm not more involved.

JERRY MORTON: It's hard to say what defenses you use but there's something that keeps you from being torn apart. It's a kind of a deadening, I suppose. But not the kind that means you don't care. There are little things when you're talking to people—things like changing the subject—that are a part of avoiding confrontation with people. Over the long haul things get to wear on you. Poverty is really a very dull business, a grind. So then maybe you get out of the neighborhood for a little bit.

MARTHA EPSTEIN: I used to live in the Cardoza area but I wasn't really a part of the neighborhood because I worked all day and came back at night. But even so, I find that it's hard to ever leave the situation. You always bring it home with you at night.

EDITH MURPHY: I think that's one way that VISTA sort of caps all the manpower. They don't define what you are. You don't know what you are. You've got this conscience or you wouldn't have gotten into it. And God! You'll do anything, from sticking your hand into someone's mouth who's having an epileptic fit to burying somebody and crying, you know, because none of the family showed up. You don't know what the limits are. And your conscience says, "Do it all." In that way you really get depressed because you think, "I didn't do enough. I should be more responsible." And that wears on you. You know, you go home and say, "I didn't do something. I let someone down." Maybe you didn't but it's the undefined limits.

JERRY MORTON: It's interesting how your reactions to poverty change. At first I'd walk into a house and I'd really want to cry because it was so bad. One place I remember—my supervisor sent me out on a case to investigate a rat situation. The woman had rats. She said, "C'mon out in the kitchen and I'll show you." And I said, "Noooo . . . noooo. I believe you." In other cases, people will offer you coffee out of cups that look pretty bad.

EDITH MURPHY: Or you sit in a chair and you think, "Oh, there are probably lice in this chair." But you sit in it.

JERRY MORTON: Now I just don't care about it. I just drink the coffee and it doesn't make too much difference.

EDITH MURPHY: Living in a poor neighborhood, you sort of lose the middle class mores—everything has to be neat and everything has to be done just right. Because there are too many other things that are important and you can't wash your windows. I can't dig washing windows when there are too many things to be done.

JERRY MORTON: To a lot of outsiders, what we're doing looks rough. It is, again, a middle class thing. They think there's a lot of violence going on and we're very brave just walking down the street. People become very scared, mainly because they don't know the area. They've just gone there in a car. They've never walked down the street. You know, it's safe. Something could always happen, but I've never been fearful.

EDITH MURPHY: It's funny. Last night we were going to get a cup of coffee. We couldn't think of anywhere to go outside of the neighborhood. We drove around and around the city and couldn't think of any place to go.

MARTHA EPSTEIN: I don't write letters to my old friends anymore. I went home for vacation at Easter. But I found that people just don't care.

EDITH MURPHY: You do lose communication with people you used to know. I went home on vacation too. I went back to wall-to-wall carpeting. I had an apartment that rents for the same as the place I rent on E. Baltimore St. I got some people interested in going down to their community action agency. But people don't want to hear about what you're doing. I went and talked to one of my teachers in social psychology. He had a completely sterile attitude. He didn't want to hear what was going on. He wanted to know that when you push a button here what's your reaction there. They don't want to hear it. And you don't want to tell.

much. If he'll walk across half the city, he's pretty interested."

Mike was beginning a career in the theater when he volunteered to serve with VISTA for a year. With three one-act plays produced off-Broadway and his poetry published in the Atlantic, National Poetry Review and Kenyon Review, he was leading what he describes as "a comfortable life."

"But," the VISTA said, "I was never aware of how ugly poverty could be until I saw it while stationed in New York City with the Army. There was a question, a challenge. I couldn't turn my back on it. I was restless until I joined VISTA.

"Every day I say to myself that I'm going home. But I know I won't because there's something here to be done, and that was my purpose in coming."

is admitted to the group. Orders for the quilts, which will be priced from $50 to $100, will be distributed equally among the women.

Another group in Kentucky, The Grassroots Craftsmen of the Appalachian Mountains, also began selling quilts, but has expanded to include other native handicrafts: carved dolls, handmade furniture and hooked and braided rugs.

The group encompasses three counties, Breathitt, Wolfe, and Lee, and was organized by VISTA Volunteer Mike Reuss and the treasurer of the Grassroots Citizens Committee for Action, Nancy Cole.

"It's just now getting to be a cooperative," said Mrs. Cole. "It's getting so big it had to be one. We have 50 people—40 of them making quilts."

Reuss, a 21 year old from Stanford University, and Mrs. Cole feel that the project is very beneficial to the people involved. "One woman, before I got a hold of her, had done 23 quilts," Mrs. Cole said. "She was only paid $5 for each quilt."

To avoid a situation where women earn the money and the man is made to feel useless, the Grassroots group has expanded its scope.

"The only way to keep the men from feeling left out is not to leave them out," said Reuss. The Grassroots group has two woodshops where the men work on handmade furniture. Mrs. Cole claims that this is valuable not only because it provides employment but because, "It allows the young men to learn from handicraftsmen who have done this type of thing for a long time."

The Quilting Bee, which Kobak helped establish, has filled ten orders for quilts. The Grassroots group has sold $1,000 worth of merchandise and has orders for another $1,000. They also have quilts and dolls on sale at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., and the group recently exhibited at the Berea, Ky., Crafts Festival.

However, both Reuss and Kobak said that most orders so far have been from friends. And, until they can complete the brochures and raise money to advertise, newer and wider markets aren't likely to be touched. Both of the young men feel that it would be a good idea to link up the Appalachian VISTAs' handicraft cooperatives into one major group.

"However," said Kobak, "it would have to evolve from the people themselves. The cooperative is a good form of community action and we don't want the people to feel forced into a larger group, to feel that they're working for a 'boss' outside the community the way the local miners feel.

"This group has been good because the people have discovered that something could be theirs, that they didn't have to rely on an 'outside boss'."

THE LETTERBOX:

The following is excerpted from a letter to VISTA from Kathie Schmidt, 22, who trained for service under the Community Service Foundation in Tallevast, Fla., and went to work in Anton Chico and Villanueva, New Mexico.

"This is not a glory story, but the hard-faced truth about real poverty in this nation and what VISTAs are accomplishing—and failing—to do.

"One year in the Anton Chico area was not nearly enough to instigate all the projects that were possible. The area is populated with home-based migrants. People who have their permanent homes in one area, but who take their children out of school and leave to go wherever the jobs may be. They hoe, pick, irrigate, and run tractors for farmers in New Mexico, Texas, Colorado, Wyoming and Utah.

"My main concern was helping them while they were home. I never started a project that was not asked for by the people. I never forced my beliefs on them . . . They are the best judges as to their needs and wants. These people are not welfare seekers as many outsiders believe.

". . . Ninety-nine percent of these people have worked hard all their lives. They farm their own land and they work for others, but because of their inadequate education, their strangling ties with a local power structure, abnormally high food prices, and unknowledgeable opportunities, they are poor. It must be made clear that they are only poor educationally and economically. They are rich in culture, simplicity and faith. Believe it or not, they never asked for money, but what they did ask for were simple things that most people today take for granted . . .

"I instigated the organization of a community water association so that the people could obtain a well and not have to use ditch water. Once the association was well on its way the people took over and helped themselves.

"I also ran a recreation program during the summer for the children so they could learn how to play and to play with other children. The teenagers in the area were not juvenile delinquents, but they would have been if they lived in the city. Their only activity was riding around and getting drunk. They expressed a need and desire for a club and recreation center. I helped them organize a teen club which didn't work out, and I began projects for them such as dances, raffles, and a newspaper. I tried to teach them first-aid and etiquette and grooming centered around their way of life, not that of the middle-class . . . I also helped the local school with their lunch program. I tutored a remedial reading class besides holding study sessions at night.

"After my first year in VISTA I was transferred to the Villanueva area, basically the same in characteristics and population as Anton Chico. My projects included a successful teen club and an adult literacy class. I also worked closely with a local school in organizing a 4-H club, helping to get their basketball court renovated and helping the area to obtain telephone service.

"All of these projects exemplify what every other VISTA is fundamentally doing whether they are working with Indians, migrants, the mentally ill, Negroes, or in rural or urban areas.

". . . My failure with the teen club in Anton Chico was due to the fact that I did not possess authoritative power which the teens needed since it was lacking at the home level. I identified with them too much and let them take advantage of me and my home. Even though they liked me and supported and trusted me they did not respect me, so the club failed and I was the one responsible for it. However, I learned from this and organized another teen club in Villanueva which was successful.

"VISTAs fail and they succeed, but with success they must be able to accept hardships which they have not known before. VISTAs must live like the poor, in broken down houses, without running water, without transportation, using privies and not having any money.

"Not all of us experience all of these things but we do experience some, otherwise we could not start to know the problems of the poor. I personally did not live in a broken down shack, but I did work without transportation for nine months. I also learned how to live on the income of a migrant and how to buy cheap foods and how to keep from going hungry . . .

"VISTA is being awakened at night to deliver a baby. It is also going to meetings into all hours of the night. VISTA is listening to people's problems and visiting them often so they know you are interested in them. It is also trying to speak their language, trying over and over no matter how often they laugh at you . . . VISTA is when the people don't want you to leave.

"This is VISTA. I have loved my work, but most of all I love the people I have worked with and have tried to help. What is most gratifying is that these same people feel the same about me . . . In VISTA I have learned more about people, poverty and sociology than I did in my three years of college.

"I entered VISTA because I love people and I wanted to help where help was needed. I have helped some, but I have gained more. This is me as a VISTA and there are many more like me."

Married Couples Growing

Maryville College is changing, and one of the ways in which it is changing is in the increasing number of married students. In 1966 this trend was recognized and Sigma Mu Chi (Greek initials for "Student Married Couples") was formed with the expressed purpose of meeting some of the unique needs of this growing group.

All married students and their spouses at Maryville College are automatically included in the membership of the organization and may obtain "active" status by payment of annual dues which are one dollar per couple. Active membership privileges include voting and eligibility to hold office within the group. An activities card which admits a non-student spouse to all Maryville College home athletic events is also included.

The group is usually well represented at campus activities and meetings. In addition to the Student Council representative, Dave Messinger; Student Council President Bruce Semple, and Vice president Dave Maxwell are married students. Sigma Mu Chi President, John McLaughlin is our Football team captain, and Dave Maxwell occupies the same position on our Basketball team.

Under the sponsorship of Mr. and Mrs. David Cartlidge, the group will be engaged in many activities during the school year including: picnics, parties, intramurals, and weekly bridge games in which the wives occasionally exchange with U.T. student wives. The wives are also entertained periodically by the Faculty Wives and the Chilhowee Club giving them a change to socialize within the Maryville community.

Of equal importance are some of the services provided by the organization for its present and prospective members. In cooperation with the office of Dean of Men and Women, a housing list is kept for those in search of a place to live. Concerning prospective members, engaged couples are invited to some of the club's functions and are encouraged to seek counselling from members of the group.

The organization is growing in size and importance with a membership of about thirty-five couples and three children (at last count). There may be more on campus that were inadvertently left off the mailing list, so if you are a married student and have not been contacted by Sigma Mu Chi, notify the Communications Chairmen, Mr. and Mrs. Craig Heller or latch on to any married student.

CROSS ACCEPTS LLD

Dr. Frank M. Cross, Jr., Maryville College class of 1942, and now Professor of Hebrew and other Oriental Languages and Chairman of the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Literature at Harvard University, returned to Maryville to make two public addresses and have his alma mater confer an honorary degree of Doctor of Letters upon him.

Monday night, October 7, at 8:15 p.m. in the Maryville College Theatre, Dr. Cross spoke about, "Recent Research in the Dead Sea scrolls." He has been a member of the International Staff for editing the Dead Sea Scrolls since 1953. He has also published "The Dead Sea Scrolls" in the Interpreter's Bible, Volume XII.

Tuesday morning, October 8, Community Issues and Values included a formal academic occasion, that of granting an honorary degree of the Doctor of Letters on Dr. Cross.

Dr. Cross then spoke on "Grace and Law in the Faith of Ancient Israel." He spoke about the traditional problems of doctrine of law as over against salvation by faith. He brought it to the contemporary scene by developing its meaning by law and justice in the present society.

Dr. Cross is author of "The Ancient Library of Qumran and Modern Biblical Studies" (1958) and the co-author of "Early Hebrew Orthography" (1952). He has also contributed articles to professional journals.

Dr. Cross is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and a member of the American Oriental Society, the Society of Biblical Literature, the Biblical Colloquiam, and Phi Beta Kappa.

EDITORIAL

The McCarthyite witch hunts during the Eisenhower years were a terrible blight upon American History. McCarthy succeeded in terrorizing the American liberal into silent consent. I am not so sure that this would be the case today.

There is reason to consider this possibility. Law and order is now a pagan idol worshiped by the majority of the people in our country. This is, law and order, separated from justice, a term rarely used by the present majority leaders. A new witch hunt is beginning. But unlike McCarthy's days of slander the vocal and humanist minority is much larger. They must not keep silent. HUAC must now contend with not 81 names but literally thousands with possibly millions in sympathy. It has been proven in recent years that this minority cannot be silenced and suppressed by a violent power base interested in controlling the STATUS QUO at the cost of human dignity. The violence of oppression is now being met by the counter-violence of protest. How can we be surprised? When a group of human beings are neglected and oppressed by society, that group feels no justice in following the constraints of the society. The minority now DEMANDS that in their own home they must have a say in their own control. In a democracy that must be demand. In a facist or totalitarian state the dissenting minority must be silent or be beaten or die. Never in America?

We must re-evaluate our standards and our scheme of justice in our society. Democracies should not have civil wars and a civil war in our democracy would mean the termination of the great American experiment that has yet to conclude. Why must we react violently to dissent? If we are just or are to find justice we cannot afford fear. Or are we indeed finding justice uneconomical. When will our prophet arise and cast out our golden calf and replace it with humane and JUST social order.

recognitions

In the first "recognitions" I wrote for the ECHO I promised to tell it "how it is from here." Since that time I have dealt with political matters only--perhaps a waste of effort, since the cheapest of campus commodities is the amateur self-styled political expert. This time I want to return to what is most important: another attempt at genuine communication. No party, nor creed, nor candidate, nor proposal, nor philosophy. Just some statements in the form of year-old poetry, an attempt to reach out and emphasize that behind the smoke screen of doctrine and rhetoric there must be belief, a belief in love. Love. Concern for others. Love. Cheap, trite, syrupy, emotional. But also real, vital, and essential if we are to be for-true persons. So again, three poems: "Gifts," "My Job," and "Artifact." Dedicated to all those who have touched my life with their lives or their message: friends, past and present; writers like Camus, Hemingway, Thomas; musicians from Bach to Dylan to the Beatles; teachers (including those who didn't realize that they were); (even) adults; and my wife (cause she made it real and its gotta be real or it don't count).

Gifts

There are gifts like love
Like circles
Like poems
Like you and me
That do not fit in boxes.

My Job

Sometimes it gets to be too much...
The tree grows down from a bird.
The strong grass pulls up the earth to a hill. My job is to find out what the world is trying to do.

Artifact

With you I feel shy
as an object must when taken to the light
(one of those rare things never bought or kept).
So I am lifted,
turned in your frightened hands, set down into the window's pale and changing focus.
I am frozen dumb
and sit quiet as a thing, awed to feel the marvel
that I exist, by chance,
only in your eyes.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Sir,

While Mr. Stiles' point that pep rallies at Maryville are not well received by the student body is generally accepted, his slur on the band is not appreciated by the members of that organization and should not be accepted.

The band practices marching and playing five or six hours a week--in the hot sun or whatever sort of weather we have that day--and attends every pep rally, every home game, and at least one of the away games, We give up our practice time that could be used in preparing a better concert, which many of us would prefer, to be ready to strengthen our school spirit. In addition there is the amount of time we spend individually practicing and memorizing our music. All of this is basically a thankless labor. How may times have you congratulated the band on a difficult half-time show well executed?

About the band spending "more time going and coming": We are upholding a school tradition by marching to the bonfire when most of us would rather quietly appear, play, and dispersss... less time consuming.

Perhaps, if the band's performance is so painful to Mr. Stiles, he would rather we didn't show up at all...but then have you ever tried to sing en mass without accompaniment or heard those cheers with the sixty-plus bandsmen's voices absent and no drums?

Sincerely, Marty Monroe

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

continued

To the editor:

I would like to put in a word for the band regarding the sports editorial in the October 9 issue of the ECHO. I am not complaining or trying to elicit sympathy; if I did not enjoy being in the band I would quit promptly.

However, as it is difficult to see hard work put into something I consider worthwhile dismissed so peremptorally, I would like to bring up a few points Mr. Stiles does not seem to have considered in writing his article.

Most of us appreciate the time put in by the football team and the cheerleaders. The band practices a minimum of four and a half hours a week. Each piece of music played must be memorized, entailing additional practive time for every member. On nights of a ball game band members, what with donning uniforms (a complicated operation, especially for us lucky ones who wear kilts), being thirty minutes early in order to warm up and march to the field, and marching out of the stadium after the game, donate about four hours of their time to the cause of school spirit.

Mr. Stiles points out that pep rallies only take ten minutes of study time. Band members are required to be at the Fine Arts Center fifteen minutes early. In order to get to the Fine Arts Center and assemble an instrument, one must quit studying at least an additional fifteen minutes before the pep rally begins. By the time we have marched to the Scene (a tradition of which we are not fond but which was instituted, I am told, as a means of letting the rest of the campus know that a pep rally is impending) contributed our small, unappreciated part (thirty people really do not make that much difference in the throngs that usually attend pep rallies), marched to the dismissal point, put away our instruments, and returned to our books, a good hour is shot. An hour of study time, to some people, is valuable.

Perhaps eleven and a half hours a week (four and a half hours rehearsal time, two hours memorizing music, four hours at a game, and one at a pep rally) is not much time to contribute to school spirit, but I venture to hope that the band helps a little.

Next term the band will prepare two concerts. Many of us would prefer to be preparing them now; however, one must take the bitter with the sweet. I regret to learn that Mr. Stiles may not have time to come to them, but I realize that a total of two and a half hours spent at band concerts out of nine months could be a terrific hindrance to the furtherance of his education.

Respectfully yours, Deual Elam

An Open Letter

An Open Letter to Dr. Copeland and the Powers That Be

Gentlemen (and, no doubt, Ladies),

You were undoubtedly concerned by the caustic remarks in McMaster's column October 2, regarding some of the many preparations, rumored and real, for the great year of 1969. Apparently McMaster hasn't heard the latest cute maneuver, the elaborate academic mace that is being designed and constructed for use in academic ceremonies--or he would have attacked that too. I would like to impress you with the fact that his statements are an accurate reflection of the sentiments of a large part of the students, who are frequently amused and often repulsed at the College's "cuddly ways." I realize that your generation has a hang-up with tangible symbols such as Anderson tower and the Great Scot, and that to you an archives building is perfectly logical. But there are many of us who would like to see the College symbolized by less tangible but more important things such as an atmosphere of free and creative thought and constructive interchange of ideas, leading toward concerned action.

Building an archives building is looking to the past, which in our case is mainly a waste of time and money. That time and money, it seems, will be infinitely better spent on equipment for the science center or the projected athletic complex or the new library--C.I.V. speakers--books--and records for the FAC library--teachers' salaries!!-- or even such mundane unspectacular comforts as trays for the dining room and new beds for Pearsons, Memorial, and Carnegie.

We admit it will be difficult (but not impossible) to impress wealthy alumni with this sort of nonsense. Perhaps it would be more effective to erect a sort of Temple to Benefactors, with bronze plaques and oil portraits in honor of Those Who Give Money. That would certainly impress them, but it wouldn't have much to do with our education, which, after all, is the main point...I think...isn't it...? May I remind you that all of us will be alumni shortly--some of us very shortly--and that more of us than ever will have money, in the very important and not-so-far-away future. I for one will be very careful to specify how my gift to the College should be spent!

If you really want to have an archives building, add a wing to the new library--perhaps that will be incentive to build it as soon as possible.

Sincerely,
Marian Ezzell

Spotts in Ethiopia

Mr. Jim Spotts, c/o General delivery, Univ. of Ibadan, Ibadan, Nigeria

Dear Friends:

This letter is from Jim Spotts, a Maryville College junior now studying in Nigeria. Jim spent the summer at the Adura River Station in Ethiopia receiving partial financial support from Maryville's "Hope for International Understanding".

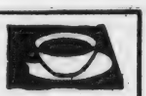
Adura is just another river that helps to drain the soggy mountainous country of Ethiopia: in the rainy season, only different in that here it isn't always soggy or ever mountainous on these plains which jut west into Sudan like a large wart. It's terrain is more like Sudan than Ethiopia-flat grassland spotted with bushes, anthills, and clusters or round mud-walled thatch-roofed tukels. The people too are largely Sudanese, and part of one of the largest African tribes, the Nuers. They live at an unhurried pace under a huge, hot sun which gives them their uninteresting diet of corn, maize, milk and occasionally fish or meat. All are self-sufficient, independent farmers, with most the burden on the women. There is no marketing within forty miles, but a few things are sold randomly.

The mission itself covers an area of what would be 1/2 a city block. That includes an airstrip, missionary home, clinic, school, church, & staff houses for clinic and teachers. It's a small mission, but the clinic draws people from miles around as well as a non-profit store which is open once a week, selling porcelain pans, plastic thongs, strings of beads and most other essentials including white cloth, gas lanterns, padlocks, soap and Ceylon tea.

The job the two of us (Jim was with another college student from Kansas) were given was to keep the grounds maintained while the missionary couple were on furlough and to build a new staff house. The staff house is complete and is a fine job of learn-as-you-do-it craftmanship. Topped with a light aluminum roof, which is covering more and more African heads all through Ethiopia, the building should stand up for many years against the architictural enemies--rain and termites.

Missionaries have become an object of criticism in colleges, novels and a few more-conscientious churches. My being here comes from my own curiosity of the same I find the missionary to be an intelligent, open-minded, un-naive, man of world experience and world concern with a commitment to the traditional teaching of Jesus and his disciples. He is aware of arguments against him, he has read Michenor's Hawaii, and he is skilled in his field, whether it be medicine, theology, agriculture, or construction, teaching, or sewing. The missionary is a catalyst to the internal development and unity of these growing and diversified nations. He does what he can to love his western way of life in a country that doesn't know motors, electricity, concrete, and stereo, and will not know them in their own homes perhaps in their life-time. Consequently he separates himself in his little Europe which forces all his contacts to be made from level to level instead of man to man. As a result, the native feels he has to beg, borrow or steal and the white man feels everyone is out to get him, This strangled relationship with the people is what the missionary often sacrifices when he insists on hie old ways of living. It's hard to love someone when he continually clamors for work, for favors or for money. It wasn't till the missionary returned from his furlough (Jim and his friend had been maintaining the missionary station for the summer while the missionary couple took a vacation) that I saw how this gap could be bridged by love. I wonder if this wasn't more the exception than the mode. Whether the Church should send its ambassadors to live in grass houses or little plantations is a big question, both have their good and bad.

... Are Christians raising an African church which will be as constrained and restricted and as separate from people's real lives as the church is in Bible-belt Tennessee? These questions need real thought and study. We must learn to confront the missionary and Africa intelligently.



Sincerely, Jim Spotts

Sponsor Cited

Miss Sue Anthony, senior English major from Maryville, has been chosen as the 1968-69 MC band sponsor. Presented with flowers in a ceremony at the home game on the twelfth, Sue will be marching with the band in the Homecoming Parade and the remaining games.

Sue used to be in her high school band and claims that they and the Highlanders march differently. "Here I have a hard time keeping up," she laughs.

Interested in all aspects of the theater, Sue played the part of Simonne Evard in last week's production of "Marat Sade." She finds character roles most challenging and fun. Sue meets a challenge well each time, as anyone who has seen last week's drama or last spring's "Barefoot in the Park" can attest.

Immediate future plans may include graduate school or work in some form of publications or communications. Sue plans to use her English major in an editing or writing capacity.

Currently doing her special studies on Mark Twain, Sue has on her wall a formidable picture of the gentleman, presumably giving her inspiration.

Sue thinks that this Homecoming is going to be very successful and urges everyone to come to the game. Our team will be doing their best, and the band has prepared a "really great" halftime show.

"This year a lot more people are coming back that I know," says Sue, "and I'm really looking forward to Homecoming and seeing them all again."

This year, also, is the first time that the band sponsor was nominated by the four classes instead of by the societies. The Highlander Band then voted on the four nominees. Also nominated were Sally Green, Noreen Bovis, and Mary Jane Schussler. The band hopes to make this method of nomination by classes a tradition at Maryville from now on.

Investigate Vista

Have you had it with sitting in classes learning things from other people. Now you have the opportunity to reverse your position. Instead of sitting in class staring out of windows, why not put your mind to work as a Vista Volunteer. You'll still be in a learning environment, but this time you'll be doing the teaching. You may be teaching Indians that doctors are sometimes better than medicine men, or Eskimos how to build better igloos, or slum tenants how to keep rats out of their beds. You may have just a dull, routine day where everything goes wrong, but in any case you'll be helping others to help themselves.

If you'd rather not dirty your alligator belt, or wrinkle your McMullin, or if you're too sophistocated to get involved with humanity then Vista is definitely not for you: But if you think this world could stand a few changes, and you would like to try things your way for a while.....You'd better investigate Vista.

If you still believe in old fashioned things like democracy, and equal opportunity, and Bilbo Baggins, then Vista needs you (although we can't send you to middle earth). You have to be at least 18, willing to give a year of your life to something you believe in, sincere enough to do something instead of talking about it in the dorm, dedicated enough to live in the same environment as the people you are helping, tenacious enough to try again when you run into static.

There are no entrance requirements, and you don't have to take any tests to join Vista. Your traveling expenses are paid, as well as housing, food, and clothing. You receive $75 a month spending money, and $50 a month is put in the bank for you, which you receive in one lump sum ($675) at the end of the year. (That's more than most people can save in one year.)

To find out more about this great opportunity for long hours and frustrating work, stop by the Vista information booth in The Library Lobby. Vista representatives will be there to talk with you on Oct. 24-Oct 25 from 9a.m. till 5 p.m. You can also see the Vista Academy Award-winning film "A Year Towards Tomorrow", narrated by Paul Newman. It's about college people who did something with their lives. If you're not sure what to do with yours, or just might like a year to think about it, let Vista supply you with a year of thinking and doing. Of course, if you'd rather pick flowers....

"THE SECRET OF SPIRO T. AGNEW." By Arthur Hoppe

Herewith is another unwirtten chapter of history from "The Making of a Loser--1968." Its title: "The Secret of Spiro T. Agnew."

At the time, Richard Nixon's selection of Spiro T. Agnew, a Greek-American, as his running mate appeared a master stroke designed to unify the ethnic minorities. And unify them Agnew did.

The campaign was but a week old when he unified all Polish-Americans by calling them "Polacks." And hardly had the furor died down than on a visit to Hawaii he unified its large Japanese-American population by referring to a reporter as a "fat Jap."

At first, political observers charitably ascribed these gaffes to one of three theories: Agnew was (1) inexperienced in politics, (2) an idiot or (3) an inexperienced idiot.

But such theories failed to hold water when Agnew went on, early in October, to refer to Mao-Tse-tung as "a chink in the enemy's armor" and followed this a week later with an address to the NAACP entitled "Let's Call a Spade a Spade." Which he did.

It was not until the campaign ended that the truth was revealed: the real Spiro T. Agnew had been kidnaped in Miami and a character actor named Hartingford Grommet had taken his place!

This political coup was the work, of course, of none other than Dick Tuck, the Democratic masterspy.

"It was easy," said Tuck modestly. "The moment I heard Nixon had chosen Spiro T. Agnew, I called Central Casting and ordered a florid, silver-haired type who looked like a Vice President. They sent me Grommet and we made the switch."

But did Grommet look like Agnew?

Tuck seemed surprised. "Who ever knew what Agnew looked like?" he said.

The rest is history. Some felt Agnew-Grommet's joke about "this Wop admiral who bought a glass-bottomed boat to review the fleet" might have drawn a few laughs--if he hadn't picked the Italo-Americans Columbus Day Banquet at which to deliver it.

His choice of Northern Maine for a lecture on the joys of frog sticking was also questioned. And he chose a B'nai Brith Luncheon to deplore "vicious attacks against my kike friends."

In Minnesota, he confused "honkies" and "hunkies." And in El Paso he shook hands with a Mexican-American service station attendant lubricating a car and asked how he liked "being a greaser."

By election eve, the Nixon campaign was a shambles. In desperation, Agnew-Grommet was given a half hour of prime time to explain his position.

He opened by saying he was sorry if he had offended anyone. And he devoted the remaining 28 minutes to a single sentence which began, "Why some of my best friends are Polacks, Japs, Chinks, Spades, Wops, Frogs, Kikes, Hunkies, Greasers, Limeys, Micks, Bohunks, Mackeral Snappers, Squareheads, Spicks...

A few historians stubbornly have refused to accept that Agnew was actually a plant by the Democrats. But they never have come up with any other theory that would adequately explain the odd manner in which he waged his campaign.

In any event, all agreed that he was the first candidate in history to unify the Nation. " For the wonderful thing about this country," as one historian musingly put it, "is that there's nobody here but us Polacks, Japs, Chinks, Spades, Wops..."

Tomorrow the Scots face Franklin in the annual Homecoming football game. It will be the Scots' third home game and seventh scheduled game of the season. There are ten scheduled games, with only two home games against Millsaps (Nov. 2) and Southwestern (Nov. 16) and an away game against Carson-Newman (Nov. 9) remaining.

The Franklin Grizzlies come from Franklin, Indiana. Their college has an enrollment of 670. They did not play Maryville last year, and wound up their season with a 6-3-0 record.

The Homecoming game promises to be one of the most exciting games of this season. Our boys have been working hard at trying to combine their efforts to make a winning team. The defensive team has been strong, and the offensive team has shown continued improvement. Against Emory and Henry they scored 21 points-an achievement which we have not seen since 1964. The team is due for a win this year, and it looks like this will be one.

The team will play its best, and the band will too, so how 'bout it gang? Let's all get down to the field Saturday. Kick-off time is 2:30. See y'all there!

Science Foundation Fellowships

Washington, D.C.—The National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of graduate and regular postdoctoral fellowships. Panels of outstanding scientists appointed by the Research Council will evaluate applications of all candidates. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1969.

Graduate fellowships will be awarded for study in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, nor for work toward medical or law degrees. Application may be made by college seniors and graduate students working toward a degree.

Postdoctoral awards are open to individuals for study or work in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Applied and empirical studies in the field of law which employ the methodology of the social sciences or which interrelate with research in the natural or social sciences may be proposed. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields. Applicants must have earned, by the beginning of their fellowship tenure, a doctoral degree in one of the fields of science listed above or have had research training and experience equivalent to that represented by such a degree. In both programs, all applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability.

Applicants for the graduate awards will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test scientific aptitude and achievement. The examinations, administered by the Educational Testing Service, will be given on January 18, 1969, at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries.

Wasps Sting Scots

The spirit was high for the Scotties Saturday night, though we were defeated by Emory & Henry by a score of 50-21. The Scots scored in the opening four plays of the game on a hand-off from quarterback Dave Garner to freshman halfback Rich Snyder, and an extra point kick by Jim Cannon.

The Wasps came back and scored but the Scots prevented their two-point conversion attempt. Things began to look brighter when the Scots' Terry Cox intercepted an Emory & Henry pass for another T.D. But it was in the second quarter when the Wasps exploded with four touchdowns. Each team scored once in the fourth quarter.

Make no mistake. The Scots played a tough game and gave undefeated Emory & Henry a battle for every yard.

The E & H team consists predominantly of seniors, while our starting unit consists of three freshmen and other underclassmen. The Scotties offer no excuse but lack of experience. The potential is there. All it needs is maturation.

Highland Harrier Highlights

The Maryville College cross-country team fell just shy of victory Saturday morning on its home course despite great individaul efforts by Dave Wiley, Jim Buxton and Henry Hastings. Wiley finished with a sizzling time of 18:40 for the 3.7 mile course while Buxton, in spite of a fall, came in eighth, with teammate Hastings ninth. Wiley was unable to gain the lead until after three miles, at which point he began building up a commanding lead and won going away. Bryan College still managed to take seven of the first ten places to win the meet. The Scots have a tentative meet with Milligan before traveling to Middle Tennessee State for the TIAC state meet.

SUTTON'S GIFT PUSHES 150 FUND OVER MILLION MARK

Fast for Biafra

A student at Warren Wilson College in Swannanoa,, North Carolina received a letter from home. This is usually a happy time, especially for a foreign student, which he is. This time, it wasn't. This was the first letter he had received for 15 months. It was from his mother. His father, a moderately wealthy business man, was wiped out. His family was homeless. Three of his brothers were dead. His favorite brother was missing and presumed dead. Everyone was hungry all the time.

This boy is an Ibo. He comes from Africa, more precisely, the region which recently declared independence and then was crushed, Biafra. This boy can't return; he would be killed. This boys family might be killed at any time, and he can't stop it. This boy's family is hungry, his friends and neighbors are starving, and he can't help. All that's left for him is to go to class, and to cry.

Americans have a disease. I call it "news-report saturation". We hear that 10,000 Ibos a week die of starvation. We respond with a shrug. It means very little. It's a "fact", we can't alter it, so we forget about it, saying, "Too bad," and feeling morally absolved of responsibility.

We are not absolved of that responsibility so long as there is one thing left which we can do, and in this case, there is. The case I speak of is that of the refugees, all refugees, of the Nigerian Civil War. The war is over militarily. Whether it was right or wrong matters very little. What matters is that thousands and thousands are homeless, destitute, starving. Starvation kills as well, but more painfully, than bullets. It's slow. It literally kills you from the inside out. It is the greatest killer of the war, and it goes on killing now after men have ended killing.

A UCM committee is now planning a Biafran Fast Day. Maryville students will be asked not to go to the dining hall for three meals on that day. It will be voluntary. It will cost you nothing but a little hunger, and what is one day's hunger in comparison to what is common in Nigeria. You will feel it gnaw at you, but you will know that the next day, it will be over. But, with the money saved by this, possibly some people, who you don't know since they're just news-reports, will be able to know that some day soon, that same gnawing will be ended for them too.

Bond Refuses UT Speaking Spot

Knoxville, Tenn. (CPS)–Georgia legislator Julian Bond, scheduled to address University of Tennessee students October 2, refused to appear in Knoxville because students there had been forbidden to invite Dick Gregory to the campus a week earlier.

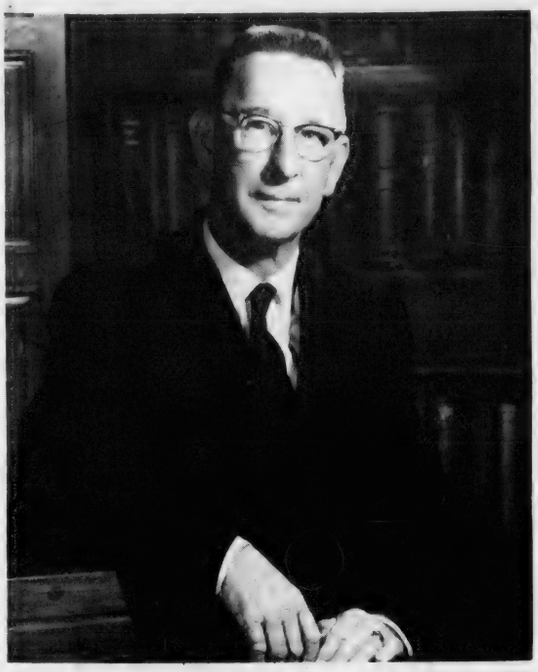
"If the chancellor of the university thinks the students are too simple-minded to hear Gregory, they are obviously too simple-minded to hear me," Bond said when he discovered he had been invited in Gregory's place. "I certainly don't want to poison student minds."

Chancellor Charles H. Weaver had denied a student speaker's program permission to invite Gregory, saying he had "nothing to say to the University community" and that his appearance would be "an outrage and an insult to many citizens of this state."

About Bond's cancellation, Weaver only said, "I am sorry that he is not coming."

"It's not a matter of Gregory himself," Bond said. "It's a matter of students' being allowed to make their own decisions. I wouldn't care if it were Harry Truman or George Wallace being denied permission. The issue would be the same--freedom of choice."

Bond, who was nominated for the Vice-Presidency at last month's Democratic National Convention and later withdrew because he was too young, compared the UT administration censorship with that of other Tennessee schools, where Gregory and other controversial speakers had been invited to campus freely.



The question of an open speaker policy--whereby any recognized student organization could invite any speaker to campus--has been the foremost topic of student

Student Council Reports

Recently, Student Body President Bruce Semple received a letter from NSA concerning the proposed All College Council. John Ribble, NSA representative, reviewed the letter for Student Council members at their October 16 meeting. The letter stated that NSA had on record only one other school with a similar government--Springfield College in Springfield, Massachusetts. The information sent by NSA also included a theory on student involvement as related to this form of self-government. The theory

The Making of an Echo

The following article is to inform the community, students, faculty, and even board members, who do not know the problems of publishing The Highland Echo.

The problems of publishing the Echo are many. It is hoped that the reader will take note of the problems and take them into consideration.

The Echo is a weekly newspaper distributed every Wednesday. The deadlines are every Monday, a week before the distributing Wednesday. That is nine days before the distribution. This makes it VERY difficult to keep the news current and it means that the staff must be notified or find potential news at times two weeks ahead of publication. This means that the many contributing members of the community MUST notify the paper in order to give proper and current coverage. (i.e. theatre, athletic dept., etc.) With our limited staff (we want more who are willing to work in any of our departments) we cannot be expected to be able to cover EVERY news story. We must be contacted in order to print what to many members of the community may be important.

Every dead-line Monday means that the editor must collect all the news from his editors and the services, the college information service, and news releases from hundreds of private sources. He then edits the material and decides how to set them in column width.

On Tuesday he takes them to the publisher, The Maryville Enterprise, and has the type set and galley proofs made. They are proof read on Wednesday and on Thursday the lay-out staff (Ann's Army) makes the paste-ups of the paper. This means the galley proofs are pasted on sheets of paper and laid out much the same as it will appear on the finished copy. Photographs are reduced or blown-up as well as drawings, and then the headlines are arranged and set. It is then taken to the printer on Friday and photographed and a plate is made from it to be used for printing.

On Tuesday the printing of 1,000 papers is done and then on Wednesday they are distributed at the College or are mailed out.

There is a remarkable lapse of time between the dead-line and distribution, but short of having our own printing plant or having a large plant in the area (who would have to print within our limited budget, a budget we would like doubled in order to give Maryville College a REAL newspaper) this is the most efficient system Maryville College's Highland Echo has ever had.

The staff puts in many hours a week and the editor can put from 20 to 30 hours a week to produce just one paper. Of course that includes writing, editing, seeing that news and advertising comes in, laying out the paper , and even time defending the team effort put into publishing it. Of

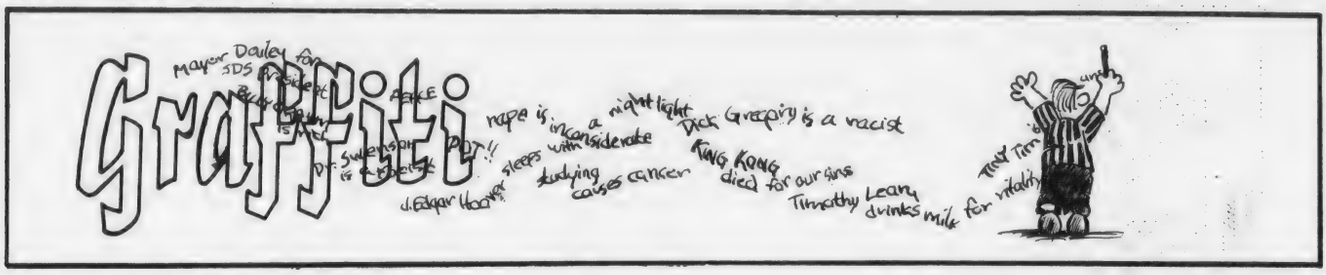
Pledges Additional $250,000

A gift of $250,000 by Maryville College alumnus Algie Sutton pushed the total contributions to the 150 Fund over the million dollar mark. Sutton is serving as General Chairman of the 150 Fund. This generous gift was reported to the college's Development Council by President Joseph J. Copeland.



Dr. Copeland, in announcing the gift, said, "We are deeply indebted to Algie and Elizabeth Sutton for their most generous pledge. It is the third time in the last four years that they have given the College a quarter of a million dollars. It sets the pace for the type of giving it will take if we are to reach our stated objective of $3.000.000 by the closing of the Sesquicentennial Celebration in June, 1970. We need more alumni and friends to follow in their footsteps."

Gifts and pledges to the 150 Fund total $1,028,789 as of September 30. The campaign will continue through June, 1970, with the hope that $3,000,000 in new funds will be realized by then. In essence, the College will be out to raise a million dollars a year for the next three years.

Alumni participation has been encouraging, Over 5,000 alumni have been solicited, and 550 pledges have been received. In the last campaign, 39% of the alumni contributed $173,365 which represented an all-time high for Maryville. The college is currently redoubling its efforts to match or exceed the alumni giving of the last campaign.

An intensive mail campaign will be conducted this fall in an effort to interest more alumni and friends to subscribe by making a three-year pledge. When they make a pledge it will be for capital expansion as well as current operating funds. It has already been suggested to the alumni that they consider a pledge of $150 a year for three years. This represents a dollar a year for each year the College will have been in existence in 1970, the Sesquicentennial year.

If the College's overall objective is attained, it will bring the Sesquicentennial Development Program to a record high of $12,000,000 raised during the last decade.

EDITORIAL

This was going to be my editorial supporting a presidential candidate. But something more pressing has come up. (More pressing than our next president?)

The Community Council concept is the most progressive and enlightening idea that Maryville College has come up with in years. It will make our college unique in a nation of progressive and interesting educational institutions. But the concept must be carried out in the practical mechanics as well as in philosophy.

There has been an attitude of making a democracy in our community, yet in the "tentative" (oh, how often have we heard that word) plan some are more equal than others. Then we hear that maybe this isn't a democracy, but this is the closest we can get to it. (See the Student Council report, page 1). We can't settle for an imperfect democracy! ALL of us, think of it, ALL of us have a great deal in this school, either for a living, security or a SOUND academic degree.

We also hear that it will operate much like our national government. Yet it is elementary that there are three INDEPENDENT powers, judicial, executive, and legislative. In the "tentative" plans the executive has a 1/3 interest in the legislative branch and has technical veto power over the judicial system. If we are to remain true to the impressive philosophy there must be a redefinition of the executive powers. This means a possible change in the college by-laws. So be it.

Did you know that a secretary from the administration can sit on the council and it may be that a full professor and department head may not be eligible because of the inequitable apportionment of the faculty representation. If two faculty representatives are to be of ten years service or over that will mean that there will not be any representatives from Foreign Languages, Philosophy and Religion, any of the Sciences (including Psychology), Education, Sociology, and Political Science. The chances for the department heads of these departments to be elected become progressivly weaker due to larger selection. There are only seven who fit in the ten year or over catagory. Yet a secretary who may have arrived at Maryville one year ago can get elected. Fair? This is faculty representation and the ratio with student seniors is irrevelant! (No, I have nothing against secretaries.)

There are more inequities. If we are to use the fine philosophy and concept it would be plain hypocracy to leave it in practice. It makes a fine sounding philosophy become just plain garbage. That is, if it is not put in practice, material that can be tossed away.

There are more, but yes, it is hard to get information. (Even some of the coordinating committee members have had the honesty to admit they don't completely understand what is happening.) Please, committee members, please don't sit back and float with the tide. We have to know what is happening. The attitude of some of the members that printing information in the Echo may create rumor is odios to say the least. Fact printed as fact even if "tentative" is still printed fact. (Regardless of the opinion of some members on the effectivness of the Echo. There is room for communication in this paper. There ARE good things printed in it.) How democratic is it to hide the proceedings from the community ultimately effected, or is it again secret keeping time.

Oh well, about the presidential race. The qualifications are that he be 35 years old and a natural born citizen. b.c.

LORD of the DANCE

O Lord, our messages are muddled, our minds are messed-up, our compasses point at ourselves, and our super-highways dead-end into brick walls. Hear us as we pray out of our desperation and despair.

We offer Thanksgiving baskets, hand-me downs, care packages when we know we should offer power, votes, and free trade. How long will we continue to salve our consciences? When will we realize that our lip-service to love and brotherhood is hollow without justice?

We have made our institutions into instruments of death. Technology is our god and General Motors is our prophet. We have sold our souls for respectability and education. Our colleges and universities have become factories for puppets who spew forth knowledge but know no commitment or humanity. We build our academic, scholarly walls to shelter us from the world's suffering and pain. We refuse to see the obvious. We have no guts. Our souls are dead.

Help us to hope. Help us to search. Help us to believe. Teach us the way of a man who was born in a stable, quit his job to roam the countryside talking to human beings, hung around with prostitutes, liars, thiefs, and beggars, and died on a piece of wood between two criminals. Teach us the way of one who danced on a cross and who dances in the midst of a changing world. In the name of the Lord of the Dance. Amen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dean Thomas

Dear Brian,

The other day I mailed to your office a recent issue of THE HIGH-LANDER, published by the students of the University of California at Riverside. This act somehow triggers further action that results in my attempting to set down for you (and for any other friend of mine now on campus) some narrative of what, where, and why the scene of my present endeavors.

But first, another word about the newspaper from Riverside. None of the sentiments or opinions contained therein necessarily coincide with my own. It just happened that on a recent Saturday I spent the day on that campus as guest of a conference. The Mission Indians who reside on the thirty-odd reservations in Southern California were meeting in an effort to form some sort coalition through which to obtain educational, economic, and cultural gains that will put them in (or at least "near to") the main stream of American life. The last address on this letterhead is an activity for which now I am responsible, and in which two Community Aides on our project payroll are providing important leadership to this current effort of these greatly disadvantaged Americans. Only last night, Mrs. Thomas and I attended a meeting focussed on educational needs of Indian children residing on the five reservations for which we provide some services. That meeting was sponsored by a United Indian Women's Club's Education Committee and convened in the cafeteria of the Pala Mission School out in the desert hills about fifty miles north of San Diego.

This club is incidentally probably the only organization num-

recognitions

I had hoped to be able to endure this presidential campaign without feeling a need to comment in this column of George Wallace. This hope was not out of fear, but rather a certain vague feeling many of us shared that if we ignored Wallace he would go away. This hope has unfortunately not been born out. Now I know I must say something about Wallace, not Wallace the man, but Wallace the mania, for this stubby hitler-with-a-drawl does not frighten me so much as does the climate of fear upon which he is feeding and festering like a germ on the sore part of America.

There is an ugliness, a disease, spreading in our country, not so much led by Wallace as personified by him, Some have termed it a "conservative trend" or a "shift to the right" but these are only the political manifestations of what is a deeper social phenomena. This phenomena won't make Wallace president, but its more subtle current will elect Nixon and it will be present and growing as we move into the next decade. It is composed of a reliance upon force to maintain order, a seeking of law instead of justice, a concern for stability rather than the redress of inequity, and a desire for international victory rather than peace. On the personal level, this phenomena reveals itself by a distrust and hatred of all that is different and particularly of those individuals who dissent and oppose the established order.

This movement, call it Wallacism, nazism, facism or what have you, is typified by the solutions offered by its "leader" to the domestic crisis of America. His approach in an attempt to curb violence is that of violence itself. For peace in D.C. of course any demonstrator who would lie in front of Wallace's car would meet Wallace's lynch-mob brand of instant law and order (a president who would so eagerly sanction murder is almost--but not quite-- inconceivable).

No, Wallace won't be elected president, but he and his kind will continue to be a rallying point for those millions of Americans who cannot understand and are fearful of the changes our country has been experiencing. Their misapprehensions and hatreds will grow and those Americans genuinely concerned with social action will be facing an increasingly hostile country. Repression is an ugly word, but its even uglier effect can be anticipated. We can expect a marked shift toward conformity with harsher treatment for those who won't fit the mold. Just look close to home. Maryville is in a sense a microcosm of our country, and certainly here the dissident, the unusual, the individual is met with scorn--and increasingly with hostility.

The only action we who decide to fight Wallacism can rely upon is a dynamic assertion of our right--our obligation--to remain individuals. It will get hot and very nasty, but somehow we must remain dedicated and only then shall we overcome. Physical intimidation is the crude resort of the frightened Wallacite. In the extreme it results in the lynch mob's rope, the thug's fist, or as we have too often seen, the assassin's bullet. However, the cause of liberty has never been stopped by the murder of a leader; it continues as long as freedom burns in the hearts of the people. Most of us are not leaders and will not have to sacrifice our lives for freedom. But all of us must be willing to, and each of us must in his own way insure the survival of his liberty and individuality in the face of threats.

After the invasion of Czechoslovakia, five Russian citizens demonstrated in protest in Red Square. All were arrested and sentenced to hard labor. One of the five, after receiving his three-year sentence said: "For three minutes on Red Square I felt free. I am glad to take your three years for that." Each of us who opposes the megalomania of Wallacism must be willing to pay with years for our precious minutes of freedom.

Nixon Wins UCM-Echo Poll

These are the results of the poll taken by UCM and the Echo. A total of 254 ballots were received. Nixon was the easy winner and the reason for the choice given by most of the people returning ballots was for the reason of the "lesser of two evils." It is interesting to note that it was Eugene McCarthy who won on this campus in the April Choice '68 election.

bering only American India Women in its membership which is registered with the Federation of Women's Clubs in the United States. We thought and spoke of the work of Doctor "Bob" and Mrs. Lucy Proffitt while we sat in that primitively beautiful spot last night.

Let me return now to the "what. I am Director of this Anti-Poverty War PROJECT ACCESS. Aided by a staff of seven professional social workers, approximately thirty non-professional "residents of the areas and members of the groups being served" (poor people, in other words), an administrative assistant, and one and a half secretaries I am "doing good" all over San Diego County. From the Pala Mission in the North-County-Area we have units located within four miles of the Mexican border City of Tijuana, to the south. Daily we brave entrance into one or more of the ghettoes of this fascinating city of San Diego, I frequently mount our trusty "Green Bomb" and dash off in many directions to meet with this group, or that, also busy at fighting POVERTY.

So much for the "what" and the "where" although I'm certain the English Department would have difficulty to accept the narrative in light of the technical discrepancies.

Among those who I believe are accomplishing some important things for "less-chance" people are two friends of mine--former colleagues in the fray in Los Angeles County. On the incomparable campus of Maryville College I could share only vicariously the frequent difficulties and the infrequent successes of those at the cutting edge of social change. Last year's increasing awareness on the campus of factors producing alienation, and the increasing insistence upon relevance were the clanging Pavlovian stimuli that could energize even an ancient and somnolent social worker.

This is patent over-simplification; but it's at the heart of the matter. Even so our released moments--and there are a few--bring on nostalgic comparison of these brown mountains and those green ones, or these sub-tropical flora and those of the temperate zone, of these orderly and well-policed freeways and those crazy back-country steeple-chases! Compensation floats on the unmatched Pacific, the ships of the fleet, and the daily sun! Poet, I'm not!

I'll hope that you might be able to use bits and snatches from this letter in some issue - and I'll be delighted to respond if some comments or questions should ensue. And, I'll hope that each of you can move satisfactorily toward your own "ministries".

Most cordial good wishes,

Edward C. Thomas

Dear Editor,

Item: At the urging of the International Olympic Committee, Tommie Smith and John Carlos were suspended from the United States Olympic Team by the United States Olympic Committee for interjecting political overtones into the XVIII Olympic Games.

The Olympics of paradox is upon us. Jesse Owens doing Schlitz commercials and somewhere in the back of my mind Buffy Saint-Marie sings (in an out of context way), "How could Hitler have condemned him. . .?" This is the whole point of this out-of-context Olympics.

Edict: Black pride has no place in the Olympic Games.

As Junior Wells might have said "Isn't four black men's setting of a world's record in the 1600 meter run Black Power?" Howard Kozel with usual nasal alacrity sums it up when he calls the Olympic Team a microcosim of what is happening in the United States. And the T.V. flutters on and you try not to think about it.

Scene: The national teams march around the stadium under national colors.

South Africa is missing.

Trying not to reason it will not make it go away. The fact that the modern Olympic is a political propaganda machine must be realized. Somewhere in the black streets of Chicago or Harlem a young man leans against a building, pulls a KOOL from his lips and wonders why he isn't allowed to be proud of himself. He knows it is one thing to be free and another thing to be proud.

White piety on the part of the Olympic Committees of both the United States and of the world kind of makes this young man laugh. "How can the Olympics support national teams and national relay competition?" he wonders. South Africa was recognized by the Olympians as politically inferior because of it's written segregationist laws. Your mind might wander back to someplace in your past where somebody once told you that politics had no place in the Olympics but you can't think too long because you're caught up in the stirring strands of the French National Anthem (or is it the American?; Peruvian?).

But try not to think about it--politics has no place in the Olympics and, of course, you agree as you reach for the evening paper and pour over the Gold Medal tally sheet. And someone has to tell you that Tommie Smith's fistfull of frustration is not a new Clint Eastwood movie.

Marat Sade in Review

by Marilyn Rankin

It is France in 1808. Discontent has replaced the unrest after the Revolution. The idea of change has distinctly different connotations to the still sharply-divided classes of society, even though the privileged sector declares that they are no longer privileged. Within the walls of Charenton Asylum, the inmates are performing a drama written by the Marquis de Sade concerning the death of Jean-Paul Marat. The allowance of such "freedom" is explained as a therapeutical experiment in human rights. The conflict expressed in the play-within-a-play is still as modern today as it was 160 years ago. The madness in the play reflects the madness in the audience and in the world--a universal insanity of alienation and death. To placate the blind aristocracy, the inmates insist that they are portraying conditions as they were long ago. Today, they say, all are God-fearing men. Yet religion offers no saving grace; the priests talk about international and universal love. They maintain that all men are brothers, as they look down into the "pit of injustice" and continue to eat with the rich. To the poor, they say, "Suffer," for their kingdom is not in this world. Within the asylum itself, the behavior of the sisters in questionable; they feel compelled to dominate the inmates by

DISASTER

Maryville College lost its fifth game of the season Saturday afternoon as they went down to defeat at the hands of the undefeated Randolph-Macon Yellowjackets by a score of 50-0. The Scots were never able to get their offense rolling on the rain-soaked field. Seven fumbles plagued the Scots.

Maryville's only real scoring opportunity of the day came in the first quarter, when a blocked punt gave the Scots the ball deep in Yellowjacket territory. The Scots drove to the three yard line, but one of the costly fumbles gave Randolph-Macon the ball and halted the drive.

After a scoreless first quarter, Randolph-Macon broke loose for three touchdowns before half time. Freshman Howie Stevens led the Yellowjacket attack by scoring the first two touchdowns, and Mike Fyock took a nine yard pass from quarterback Dave Wetzel for the third score, Randolph-Macon continued to pour it on in the second half. Stevens was the main cog in the Yellowjacket's offensive machine, as he carried the ball 17 times for 188 yards and three touchdowns. The Yellowjackets rolled up a total of 373 yards rushing, compared to the Scots' 49 yards. Maryville dominated the passing game, however, as they gained 152 yards through the air, against 75 for the Yellowjackets. Randolph-Macon is now 4-0 and is averaging 47 points per game. The Scots are 0-5 and are averaging a little over 9 points per game. (The Scots have scored 48 points in five games, and have been scored upon with 163 points, or 32.6 per game).

The song of Charlotte Corday and Monsieur Duperrett expresses the hope for a time to come when all men can be equal, honest and trusted. Marat pleads with his fellow prisoners not to be deceived by the lies that they hear about the free state which is attempting to make living in poverty respectable.

In order to present Marat/-Sade, the playhouse expended a tremendous amount of time and work. The inmates of the asylum mastered a hauntingly authenic laugh, and the insane look of wildness was continual in their eyes--both before and throughout the play. The aristocrats (Bob Abel, Kathy Smith, Rachel Kent) conveyed a properly noble pedigree in their appearance, haughty actions, and evident convictions that there is no question of anyone being oppressed with the availability of soup kitchens and clothing welfares. They choose to ignore the fact that the persons involved in traitorous scandals during the Revolution have honored government positions at the present.

The Herald (Bill Beasley) was extremely competent as the mediator between the players and the audience. With his painted face and tricolors of the Revolution, he displayed a bright and, at times, welcome comic relief. The revolutionary Jean-Paul Marat (Bob Hutchens) was excellently portrayed. The audience was able to empathize with his constant suffering and impassioned cries. The Marquis de Sade (Phil DerPilbosian) seemed almost mechanical in his recitation of lines. He did not emerge as a person, but rather as a part in a play. Jacques Roux (Fred Callies) was very well interpreted as a fanatic whose mind is obsessed with freedom and who responds wildly to hearing simply the words, "Freedom." Charlotte Corday (Pam Durgom), as a melancholy murderess, beautifully conveyed the image of a mad saint. Both Simonne Evrad (Sue Anthony) and Monsieur Duperret (Harry Robertshaw) displayed a pathetic devotion to their "masters." The four singers and dancers (Harry Weisgerber, Kent Marshall, King Bennett, Phyllis Neal), had fine voices themselves without the assistance of the taped singing. The fact that the two were not co-ordinated was distractive and infringed upon the total effect of the play. For once, the Jonesian stage direction of bodies littering the floor was relevant and applicable. However, the evident disgust of Sade at the end was an extra unnecessary touch.

Much of the script for 1808 resembles 1968 dialogue: we must all carry weapons nowadays; it's easy to start a mass movement for freedom; why all this doubt and confusion; everyone knows this war will end in victory; the present state is a world of bodies, each with a terrible unrest.

The world's animating force is destruction. To Sade, man is not destroyed by external strengths; he is annihilated by internal co he is annihilated by internal coercion. The Marquis sees no use in worrying about the outside world, as the only reality is one's imagination and own self-interest. Marat is clogged with the dead idea that men are equally free to fight in "happy mutual robbery." He is writing in pre-world with fresh eyes and to work to improve the wrongs. To him, one physical ruler is replaced by another; the Revolution was fought for the bourgeoise, and the masses are more oppressed than when the Revolution started. The poor are demanding their revolution with the constant cry of "Freedom." They say that they want to see people and governments existing in harmond. A wild laugh reminds one that the harmony of the inmates is discord to the sane, whoever they may be. Fanaticism--outside the asylum--must be replaced by beauty and concord. Marat is willing to suffer for the people, who must choose a leader and fight for their lives. But the Marquis says that it is too late for a call to the nation. It is too late; the Revolution is over.

With the end of the play-within-a-play, the audience is left with external doubt of the no-ending. Who won? Who lost? Both Marat and Sade advote forceful revolution, but Marat's is of physical destruction with axes and knives while Sade's is of an inner annihilation. With the end of the play, it appears that Marat has overcome, as the inmates brutally kill the aristocrats. But shouldn't each person in the audience be allowed to make the decision for himself?

WHALE WATCHING WEEK

Scotlights on Basketball

The Maryville Basketball team opened practice on October 15th with hopes of continuing the winning ways they established during the final month of last season. Nine lettermen, including four starters, return from last year's team, which won eight of its last twelve games, finished with a 10-15 record, and posted the best slate for Maryville since 1959.

Returning starters Phil Bettis, Mike Barrows, Bill Padgett, and Dave Maxwell provide an experienced nucleus for the team while Lyn Mize, Glenn Morefield, John Leibrock, Lyn Dildine and Lyn Raby provide excellent depth. However, no one has a starting position nailed down, for Coach Boydson Baird also has a talented group of freshmen, some of whom could possibly crack the starting lineup. 6'5" center Warren Morgan, along with Dan McKinstry, Jon Scarlett, Paul Wright and Bill Paxton are among the leading freshmen candidates.

Additions to this year's schedule include two games with Clinch Valley College from Wise, Virginia, and the Tennessee Temple tournament in Chattanooga, which replaces the Randolph-Macon invitational that the Scots played in last year. The toughest opponents are expected to be Ashville-Biltmore and Baptist College, while Emory & Henry, Kentucky Southern, Milligan and Mars Hill present a talented challenge.

(This season looks like a great one for the Highland Hoopsters, so let's make plans to see them in action on our home court.)

promoted the idea of community, that is, faculty, administration, and students all working together. It stressed that each member of the community would need to make a commitment to the program if it was to be effective. The main problem to be encountered in this community-type of government, as well as in any other type, would be that of becoming disconnected with the real trends in the attitudes of the community. Also, there must be a special effort put forth to avoid any disruption of the balance of power among the groups involved, especially avoiding the growth of student power. This can be prevented in part by agreeing on a comprehensive goal and by continually working for it. A community-type of government is of great value in educating students in responsibility and decision-making.

A Freshman Year Should Be . . . .

New Haven, Conn.-(I.P.) - The freshman college year should be a breathing - spell of orientation rather than intensive academic study, according to a 66-page report released by the Committee for The Student in Higher Education. Funds for the survey booklet, "The Student in Higher Education," came from the Hazen Foundation of New Haven.

The report recommends:

1. More research on the educational application of developmental psychology and provision for a liberal education for those "who score relatively low on the IQ scale.

2. "No matter how much it may confuse schedules or course loads, and no matter how many new faculty must be hired, colleges should strive to have as many individual seminars or tutorials and as few large lecture-hall classes as possible.

3. Competition in all colleges must be reduced. Grades should be optional, and students should be permitted to take courses on a "pass-fail" basis if they desire.

4. "A new kind of faculty must appear, composed of men and women whose primary concern is the facilitation of the learning experience of students, and helping them derive personal meaning from those experiences." A good many of these teachers should not be from the academic community at all but the workaday world.

5. "The power of the professional academic guilds over undergraduate instruction should be broken. Faculty veto groups, however powerful, can no longer be permitted to block reform in undergraduate education, or to specify what educational experiences a young person should have before he is admitted to graduate school."

The report says students should have increased power in educational policy-making because "they do have insight into the meaning of their educational experiences which ought to be important in making... administrative decisions."

"Student representation at the very highest governing levels of the college--even on the board of trustees if possible--is also necessary to prevent...the repetition of student victimization by the professional guilds and the college administrators."

In addition, "wide democratization" of rule-making and enforcing on the campus must be undertaken, and should be done "with Outstanding students have been honored in the annual directory since it was first published in 1934.

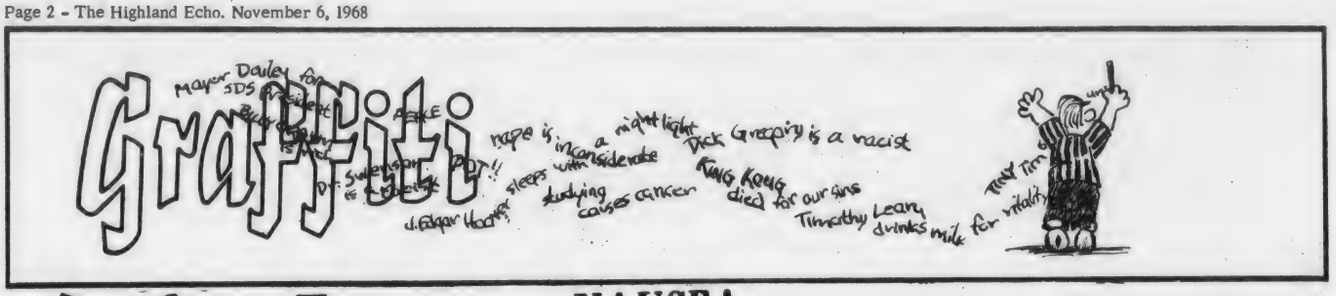
NOVEMBER 14 SET FOR BIAFRAN SYMPATHY FAST



Have you ever felt hunger? I don't mean the 4 o'clock pangs, but real hunger. It eats at you, starting from the inside. It follows you wherever you go. You can't escape it. Nor can you escape the changes it makes in you; that hollow look in the face, the withered muscles, and the lost look in the eyes. Nor does it leave off here, for it torments you, follows you wherever you go, and, finally, resigns you to your fate. But maybe you're lucky, and get some food. That staves it off for a while, but it will be back. For half the people of the world, it's always back.

UCM thinks hunger is a wonderful thing. Men aren't so proud when they're hungry. They are able to see the world without the contented viel of a full stomach. On Nov. 14, UCM is going to let you, if you're willing, join the majority of the world and feel hunger. Of course, it will only be for one day, so you'll only get a taste of the feeling. But it will do you good if you let it. November 14 is Biafran Fast Day on our campus, and you're all invited to join in the festivities! All you have to do is agree not to go to the dining hall on that day, and then sign your name in a book. You can sign up at Pearsons any meal time, from now until noon on November 11, or at CIV. Then, on November 14, you arve. Nothing to it.

What do you achieve by all this? First, it is a way of raising funds for the relief of the refugees of the Nigerian civil war. The cost of the food for one person for one day's meals, actually only a little over one-dollar, plus any other donations received, will be put to the cost of feeding these refugees. It will only be a drop in the bucket compared to the needs, and we realize that. But it will be something. Secondly, and in many respects most important of all, you will get the opportunity to starve! This won't be as easy as handing a volunteer for the United Fund a few bucks and closing your door, and your involvement, on the problem. You will be involved. You will feel along with those you're helping. And maybe, with that feeling in the pit of your stomach, you will in some way better understand the "other half" who feel it all the time.

Come on! Stop being a non-conformist. Be like the rest of the world. Starve!

Acrobat Clowns

While Freedom and Violence the acrobat clowns
Do a balancing act on the graves of our sons
While the Tapdancing Emperor sings 'War is Peace!'
And Love, the magician disappears in the fun.

Presidential Election, 1968 ... over. Where has it all led? Where are we now that we weren't before? Is the writing on the wall any less obscene? McCarthy stickers only fade away. What have we done to America? The United States is and will be, maybe. But where is America? What choice did we have, or was it all predetermined anyhow? Will we ever know again the watermelon days of stories past?

The right to vote ... and the right to abstain from voting in silent protest. Was it too silent, or has America heard? And if you need a more tangible relevance to your everyday life, then ask why Maryville College cannot take a stand on a controversial issue. Ask what the "full and free exploration" of your Maryville education has to say about your involvement (and you will be involved) in a racial riot next summer. Is Maryville's only answer in blind obedience to law and order? The people and experience of Maryville College can provide that answer or another. They can also provide the next question.

Freedom and Violence are acrobat clowns. They constantly interplay. It depends on your position which one is on top. The United States, Canada, Vietnam ... countries, but viewpoints too. Our days are limited to walk the earth. And we must make peace with ourselves. Love, the magician is there. But does he really change the dream? Would it be too much to touch another human? Maryville College?

The lyrics are from Tim Buckley's "Good-By and Hello".
And I wave good-by to America
And smile hello to the world.

SPORTS EDITORIAL

The Homecoming festivities proved once more to me that the spirit at Maryville College is still alive. The pep rally had a good attendance and lots of pep was stirred up. The Freshmen boosted the pep with some new cheers which have been heard recently at our rallies.

These who made vows to wear skirts, etc., added their little push to the pep. The Sophomore class can be thanked for their addition of the Scottie dog, played so well by Gary Nier. Each person did his best to show that he was and still is FOR the Scots.

The team played well, and proved that it can win ball games. Anyone who was there at the game could see that Coach Tomlinson is right in saying that the team has matured. They are proving that they can work together. I feel that we have come a long way this year, in that the whole school has become more concerned with what is happening here at M.C.

The Scots play Carson-Newman on November 9 at Jefferson City, Tenn. That's only a short distance from here, so you kids with wheels might want to roll over and see the Scots roll over C-N.

Sock it to 'em Scots!

DON'T BUY GRAPES

BERKELEY, Calif. (CPS)-- In what they consider a "major victory," Mexican-American students at the University of California have won important concessions from President Charles J. Hitch.

Hitch has agreed that individual UC campuses may refuse to buy California table grapes although they may not officially support the boycott. He had earlier said campuses could only stop buying grapes if it were uneconomical.

He also dropped university disciplinary action against 11 students who were arrested after taking over his office Oct. 14 to demand university support for the boycott. Hitch will ask the court for leniency for the arrested students.

Hitch also agreed to work on the students' other two demands. He said a Center for Mexican-American Studies is already being started at the Los Angeles campus and that he would work on the proposal for increased minority group admission to the university.

The Taj Mahal is located on the Jumna River in Agra, India. Built by the Mogol emperor Sha Jahan, it is the tomb for him and his Hindu wife, Mumtaz Mahal, whose name means "chosen of the palace." She died in childbirth in 1631 and Sha Jahan built the Taj as a memorial to her. The construction required 20,000 workmen and 22 years to complete.

When you visit Agra to see the Taj you expect a typical tourist trap, Nothing could be as beautiful as this structure has been described. Fully expecting a disappointment, you make the trip across the Jumna over a bridge so narrow the squealing, honking, smelling, shouting traffic of cars, bullock-carts, donkeys, and people can travel only in one direction. Since this is the only bridge, you sit and wait until the flow is headed toward your destination, and then you join the surging mass. Along the bank of the river you pass a cremation ceremony and realize how close death is at all times in this land. Finally you arrive...

On First Seeing the Taj Mahal

The small fee to enter is paid and guided you face the dingy brick facade which shroud-like veils
the tomb.
The tomb--the thought that death lays hidden behind this wall seems out of touch with the moment, but the thought hangs there all the same.

(A skull. It will gleam white and dead like a skull.)

"This way, sahib."

You hesitate,
then stumble as over thoughts fallen in the dust.
Is the shiver that bounces down your backbone caused by forsaking the Indian sun for the cool, slighty clammy entrance tunnel?
Or is it the tingle of an expected contact with history--and beyond?
Surrounded with dark,
the smell, the cool;
ahead the opening, the garden,
Then
White
White White
So white it pierces your eyes without pain, but burns inside your mind.
So white you think a cloud has settled to earth,
pulling the sun-gleam with it.
So white--as white as you'd guess this love between a Muslim and his Hindu wife must have burned.
For it is burning, burning.
It is not a skull which gleams, but thoughts inside your skull which burn, burn, and you know would continue,
would not cool
would not turn to stone
even with your touch.
And yet the wonder is not the white not the love
nor the burning...
The wonder is that the fee to enter is so small,
small,
and still so large
you know your pocket never can contain it.

REVIEW:

The Ramsey Lewis Trio

by Warren Gaughan

Ramsey Lewis came to Maryville College one Friday. And in his "bag" he brought bassist, Cleveland Eaton, and drummer, Maurice White, but most important of all he brought jazz. The Trio imaginatively and intricately improvised their way through the concert, leaving the audience excited and impressed.

The Trio's repetoire was much more varied as compared to the records they have cut, (Ramsey's albums usually sound like a forty minute mixture of "Sloopy" and "Wade in Water") and I truly believe that the varied program suggested an honest attempt at an all around jazz concert. Tunes along progressive lines, in the Latin American vein, and even recently composed ones were featured by the trio, helping to make the evening enjoyable.

Each member of the Trio was obviously a talented musician. Maurice White, the drummer, came on strong in "Ode." His lengthly solo featured, other than his talented drumming, the introduction of an African Thumb Piano, on which he displayed his versatility. In the way of background, White did a good job, except for an occasional rim shot which was out of place, but seemed to keep the audience on their toes.

The bassist, (and "choreographer") Cleveland Eaton, was an intricate musician who had a lot to say but was hardly heard due to a poor mike set up. He manipulated his bass in such a manner that at one time or another during the concert he probably covered every part of it.

I'm sure the audience would have enjoyed Cleveland more, had they been able to hear him.

I had only one complaint about Ramsey Lewis--no matter what he played or how advanced his improvising became--he always threw in his funky "Wade in Water" clinches. This, I think, was detrimental to everything he was trying to do. A perfect example was "Emily" (his first encore), which he murdered. In this arrangement Ramsey started off with a nice, soft, flowing melody and ended likewise, but the middle section was irrelevant and sounded as if he tried to squeeze "In Crowd" into it. His improvisations, notwithstanding the funky cliches, were sufficient and well done. I think that as the concert progressed, his improvisations improved.

All in all, the concert was an excellent musical experience for anyone--even for an audience such as Friday night's. I say this in all sincerity, the Maryville audience was terrible. The only excuse I can perceive is that the audience was never subjected to a jazz concert. Maybe it was the influence of previous folk and rock concerts that caused them to clap in rhythm to Ramsey's more progressive works. (Ramsey Lewis is an artist. Have you ever tried to appreciate an artist's self expression through chaotic clapping of a hundred ("teeny-boppers"?) Maybe it was the experience of some who laugh at things they don't understand that provoked some people to giggle at Cleveland Eaton, who was emotionally and physically involved in his solos and background playing, which are part of artistic expression. But most of all, maybe it was the childishness in the audience that caused them to stamp and clap impatiently when the Trio took a "big" two minutes to come back on stage after intermission. (Ramsey's group changed clothes during this time). The only thing decently executed by the audience was giving Ramsey and his group a standing ovation. Maybe what this college need is a few more jazz concerts to teach its students jazz etiquette.

good grace rather than as a result of ever-increasing student pressure."

Furthermore, the report emphasized, all administrative personnel, from the highest to the lowest level, must play a larger role in education "because they are the ones the students most frequently deal with."

"One wonders how much of the student unrest," the report commented, "could be attributed to authoritarian police, rude clerks, hostile and unfriendly secretaries and testy tellers. If the institution as a whole is devoted to promoting the full human development of its students, then all of its personnel should be trained to understand the needs of this development.

The committee urged that undergraduate education should be made more flexible so that students who need or want time off to work or do other things should not be penalized en route to their A.B. degrees.

Colleges and universities have shown little inclination to ease up on "the tyranny of prerequisites and sequences of courses" so that "he who departs from the straight and narrow path to graduation is expected to pay severe penalties for his idiosyncratic behavior."

Conversely, the time the students take off from college work "is more likely to contribute to their development and increase their interest in professional training," the committee noted.

"The committee is under no illusions that any or all of its recommendations will provide the answer to the boredom, frustration, apathy, bitterness, and alienation which many observers find characteristic of college students today," the report said.

"The roots of these problems are in our culture, and educational reform cannot by itself change a whole culture. But our recommendations provide material for beginning an educational reform that would open to the student the possibility of improving our society and its culture. A good education ought not to be expected to provide all the answers, but at least it can offer the raw material for vision and hope."

The report also recommends that volunteer service in the similar projects be more closely integrated with a college education "before the volunteer era ends in complete disillusionment."

Grizzlies Ground on Gridiron

SCOTS AT THE BUSINESS OF WINNING

A very happy Sports Editor was seen leaving Honaker Field after the Homecoming football game. And he had a real good reason to be happy. The Scots won the game 28-13. After weeks of pleading, mistakes, apologizing, and cold stares he was rewarded with a victory.

The weather was fine and all were in good humor after a great parade of band and floats. Hopes were high for a win, and the only ones that were let down were those people from Indiana, whoever they were.

With five minutes left in the first quarter quarterback Dave Garner passed to halfback Don Hickman for a T.D. Jim Cannon made the score 7-0 with one of his four extra-point kicks. But the Grizzlies came back and tied the game. That brought us into the second quarter. Less than four minutes had ticked by when Garner and Hickman repeated their touchdown play, and again the extra point was good. The score was then 14-7, and that's the way it was at half time.

After a great half time performance by the Highland Band, the presentation of the colorful floats, and the introduction of the stunning Homecoming Queen and her gorgeous attendants, the Scots took the field to try to maintain their 7 point edge over Franklin. Just a little more than 9 minutes were gone in the third quarter when a Franklin pass play turned into a touchdown play. A two point conversion attempt failed, and the Scots maintained a precarious one-point lead. Four minutes later Garner passed for a third T.D., this time to Brad Beck. Cannon's third extra point boosted the score to 21-13.

Franklin put things into high gear, and the ball flew many times into the air, intended for a Franklin receiver. The Scots, however, never let them catch the ball. They took over and Dave Garner ran for a fourth touchdown. A fourth extra point gave the Scots a 15 point lead, 28-13.

A well-executed on sides kick helped the Scots maintain control of the ball in the final minutes of the game. As the buzzer signaled the end of the game and victory for the Scots, a big cheer and an audible sigh of relief drifted out across the field.

Lunch goes off so grandly while Porky leads the band,
Breakfast is amazing 'cause we really eat some food,
But what happens on Sunday after dinner was so good?

I like the sturdy paper plate, the plastic art called spoon,
I like the milk and candy bar, but they are gone too soon;
I do not mind a single "dog" or even tuna fish,
But I do not like to watch the chili dancing in the dish.
His cousin, we've named "Sloppy Joe", is so much more behaved,
He sits there on his big white roll a looking up so grave.
I cannot stand to look at him he is so sad to see,
I quickly close the roll up tight and bite down viciously.
He yells out once to protest death--that it should come so quick,
If he had lasted through that meal, week-old meatloaf I'd have bit.

Sunday is a day of rest, I'm sure I know, don't you?
That is why at supper time we rest our stomachs too!

Food?

Rumor has it that some of the rejected meat is salvaged for meatloaf. Now I ask the administration if that is necessary on a thriving campus like MCI. Or maybe the problem is that we are broke and the school can't afford to buy more and/or better food. Just where is the meat money? Surely not in Miss Ware's cookie jar. As I understand it, Miss Ware is a very nice person who tries to please the students and appeal to their tastes. Ask any of the summer school kids how it was. They'll tell you how good the food was and how much of it there was when she had money to spend on the small group. Why can't she have more money to feed a greatly augmented group of students. Was she given a proportionate increase of money? Personally, I think the answer is no. There must be some truth to what the summer residents say!

Doesn't the Administration know that warehouses need money with which to operate? Well, Susie Ware's house also needs money. Is the Administration going to wait while the football players one by one fall over on the field from malnutrition and our alma mater--M.C.--is declared a disaster area because of the starving students? Do something NOW, before it is too late. Students may gripe about quality in food, but if you don't have quantity either, you end up with no students. (How about all those empty rooms in the new dorms?)

Get on the ball. Get food!

This poem was not written as a protest against Miss Ware, but as a protest against the food that is served here. Most of the students, I think, recognize the enormous task that faces Susie Ware. She does her best, but there is just so much that can be done with nothing. If the administration would delegate some funds to the Dining Hall, I'm sure that Miss Ware could and would provide good, edible food, geared towards the many and diverse students' tastes.

Antioch and Innovation

Yellow Springs, Ohio. Despite the risks, Antioch College must continue to innovate and experiment in order to find ways to improve education and meet the needs of today's students, the Board of Trustees reaffirmed here recently.

The board made its feelings known when about one-third of the faculty presented a petition calling for " a change in the direction of administration" because of problems that they believe result from innovation and experimentation. In response, trustees adopted a resolution expressing their confidence "in and sympathy with" Pres. James P. Dixon, the present administration and the faculty.

As one trustee, who is also an alumnus, put it, "If Antioch goes down because of innovation, that's too bad. It if goes down because it refuses to innovate, that's a disaster."

Very simply stated, there are those at Antioch who believe that the college's growing complexity and number of experimental programs are adversely affecting the quality of education.

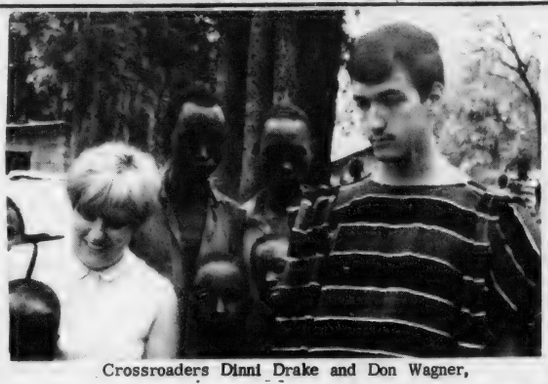
Daley and Wallace Called to Pike County

Pikeville, Ky. (CPS)--Bib overalls, out-of-state license plates, and singing of "We Shall Overcome" were introduced as evidence of un-American activities during an investigation of Appalachian Volunteers here last week.

The Kentucky Un-American Activities Committee (KUAC) held hearings on alleged seditious activities in Eastern Kentucky, a culmination of a conflict that erupted last year when five anti-poverty workers were indicted on charges of plotting to overthrow the county government.

The state law on which the charges were based was later ruled unconstitutional by a federal court.

The dispute includes Pikeville College, a small liberal arts school headed by Dr. Thomas Johns. He fired local residents by hiring professors opposed to the Vietnam war and by holding open forums on strip mining.



Dr. Johns' critics protest that the college is becoming too liberal, but the president has continued his new policies. "What I'm going to do is run the best educational institution, I can which means I'm going to demand that the issues facing our society be discussed, investigated and analyzed. I'm not going to sell my soul for prejudice, hate or bigotry," he said.

One of the anti-poverty workers indicated for sedition, Alan McSurely (he wore bib overalls), charged recently in a radio broadcast that Pike County was run by a "courthouse gang" working for a few coal-mine operators. He also said it was not illegal or wrong to work for peaceful change in government.

That statement prompted the local prosecutor to say, with all seriousness, "I want to warn McSurely that if he calls on Russian tanks to help him conquer Pike County, I intend to appeal to Mayor (Richard) Daley of Chicago and (former Ala.) Gov. George Wallace for help in defending Pike County."

The KUAC committee packed up and left without naming any Communists or taking any action other than recommending less political involvement by AV's. And latest reports indicate that no tanks have been spotted yet in Eastern Kentucky.

ALCOA GRANTS MC $50,000

The Alcoa Foundation has brought the Maryville College Sesquicentenial Development Campaign closer to its goal with a new $50,000 grant. The first installment of $10,000 was presented to Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, Maryville College President, by Alcoa's Tennessee Operations Manager Roy J. Fisher, who represented the Foundation.

"The grant," said Mr. Fisher, who is also a director of the college, "is a token of how very much we appreciate Maryville College playing such an important role in providing a solid liberal arts background for its students. Independent colleges like Maryville have always been a major value in strengthening the higher education system of America. Aloca and the Alcoa Foundation are pleased to be able to further this important endeavor."

Dr. Copeland complimented the company and the Foundation for their continuing interest in the development of young people and encouraging the growth of educational institutions over the years.

"This grant comes at a time when the need to accelerate our development program is greater than over with the increasing demand for trained young minds to assume the responsibilities facing our country and the world," he said.

The Alcoa Foundation was formed for the purpose of using its net income exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary and educational purposes. Awards such as this one are divided approximately evenly between educational and non-educational grants.

MC: A WHOLE LIFE ANEW

Three "bicultural" freshman girls recently commented on their first month at Maryville. Beth Urquhart, from Korea, Jennifer Seely, Thailand, and Barbara Seel, Venezuela, have all spent most of their lives in foreign countries. These girls have the advantage of being able to compare American culture with that of a different people, and their observations reflect not only the usual freshman exuberance but a refreshingly broader world view than many of us are accustomed to.

The girls all emphasized the friendliness of the nationals, the people with whom their missionary parents are living and working. They noticed a difference in Americans as a whole. Americans tend to "mind their own business" more and are not as easy to get to know. All were impressed, however, with the friendly atmosphere here at the college. In the States the girls had to adjust to the fact that when walking down the street, they would see unfamiliar faces. In Caracas, Barbie knew everyone within the church community and pointed out the deep sense of fellowship there. Beth said it was "sort of a shock" to see people she didn't know in the same dorm.

The girls commented on how much Americans are respected in foreign countries. Jennifer said that little children trail after them in the streets, perhaps because Americans are still pretty much of a novelty in Thailand. In both Korea and Venezuela American education is highly valued. Education is most important to the Korean, who wants very much to learn to be like an American. Many Latins attend the two English-speaking high schools in Venezuela, so that they will be able to continue their education in the U.S.

The schools that the girls attended before coming here were American schools, similar to ours, though very much smaller and more cosmopolitan than U.S. high schools. M.C. has met the expectations of each girl. Barbie explained that it was "like starting a whole life anew"--all kinds of new friends, new surroundings, new experiences. To an extent this is true for all freshmen, but for our foreign students it is especially valid. Barbie also pointed out that for her, M.C. is the first place she really feels is home. On her previous visits

Ethopia and Africa Joined Through Hope

'Dinni-lynn Drake is a senior religion major from Tonawanda, New York. Last summer she was a Crossroader in Gambela, Ethiopia where the group joined with ten African counterparts to renovate an abandoned coffee warehouse into a student youth hostel to provide a home for Sudanese refugees who were attending the Ras Gognas Government Elementary School in Gambela, Dinni-lynn was sponsored by the HOPE for INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING.

Africa is a vital part of me and in order for me to share my summer with you I would have to grasp you hand-your being-and take you with me to my home-Gambela, Ethiopia. Words are abstract terms and lose their true meaning on this printed page. I hope that as you read this you will be able to feel in a small sense what I experienced, and what became me.

In our Crossroads group there were thirteen different young people. Statistically we were 11 whites and two blacks, seven males and six females, eleven Americans and two Canadians, eleven undergraduates and two graduates, from thirteen different schools, nine states and two provinces, and represented nine majors. But to us we were people; people grasping and groping for life, a meaning to being alive. To each other we became Real People-we were our experience, our summer. We were laughter and tears, optimism and pessimism, excitement and frustration, involvement and apathy, and we were love! We shared ourselves and revealed our beings. Our counterparts, Sudanese Christian Freedom fighters, were no longer Africans but our African brothers and their life became ours.

Gembela is a cluster of grass-hut villages along the muddy, swift flowing Baro River in southwest Ethiopia, only sixty miles from the Sudan border. Because of the proximity to the border we learned the true meaning to war and hatred. We became a part of the battle of the oppressed Southern Sudanese Tribesmen who are being persecuted by the Ahab Moslem Government in the north. Little is known of this war that has raged for six years and has killed over a half million people, mercilessly torturing many more. The Southern Sudanese is being killed for his freedom to be equal, to be Christian, to be educated, to be HUMAN! Our counterparts were forced to flee from their homes and many of their families were tortured or killed. This summer we saw the horrible, ugly face of war pressed against our faces. We heard the haunting cry for help. We saw, we tasted, we smelled the terror of death. We saw and felt men haunted with fear and filled with revenge and courage. We felt utterly helpless because we never knew war. Our feelings soon molded into our counterparts, feelings as we struggled with them. We could grasp the why of men fighting-fighting because they want to Live their Own Lives as Humans!

Our counterparts and village neighbors shared with us their lives. Bargaining was a real experience. The market was life. You could feel and smell people and goods. The individual stalls sold their goods through colorful displays and loud shouts. We saw our meat killed, skinned and then handed to us like a piece of shoe leather. None of us will ever forget the slippery feel of fresh meat again. The Ethiopians live on a brown, sour, flat bread made from rancid butter and a cereal grain. With this bread-injera, they eat a firey Hot sauce-wat. We lived on oatmeal, canned corn beef, bread, rice, boiled meat and tea.

Our work day on the hostel was from 8:30 A.M.-1:00P.M., and 3:00-6:30 P.M. After work hours Africa was ours. During this time we taught English and learned Anauk, Nuer and Amheric. We learned to pound corn into meal in a hollow trunk with a heavy, six foot, wood pole. We had our hair braided and wore elephant hair in our pierced ears. Our African sister paraded

REMEMBER ! Don't Leave for your semester break until you've seen FAHRENHEIT 451. This critically acclaimed movie will be shown Friday night, November 15, at 8:15 P.M. in the theater. This movie is part of the Playhouse Movie Series so admission will be either one dollar ($1) or series season ticket.

The movie stars Oscar Werner (star of SHIP OF FOOLS) and Julie Christie (star of DOCTOR ZHIVAGO) in a story by world-famous science-fiction writer, Ray Bradbury. The time is the future, and things really haven't changed too much, except:

Reading is forbidden by law!
Watching television is mandatory!
Children are rare because child-bearing is unfashionable!

and other MINOR alterations. As chilling a story of the future as 1984. Don't forget, Friday night, November 15, at 8:15, it's the movie FAHRENHEIT 451, which, by the way, is the temperature at which book paper burns.

EDITORIAL

What is a democracy? We hear cries for a democratic student government but do we understand the implications? Can a college or university operate in a pure democracy? Charles Frankel comments in the November 2, 1968 issue of the SATURDAY REVIEW: "a university is at once a highly individualistic and unavoidably heirarchical human organization. It is based on the premise that some people know more than other people, and that it cannot perform its tasks effectively unless these gradations and knowlege are recognized in its form of government."

If institutions of higher learning should be run completely democratically, and if Mr. Frankel is way off-base in his implications, then we must ask ourselves why more colleges haven't installed this type of government. Springfield College in Springfield, Mass. has partially attempted to comply with these democratic principles. In examining this "liberal" program, we find their college council's primary purpose is to " deliberate on important matters of the college and make appropriate recommendations to the President on aspects of college life." This council is made up of seventeen voting members, two of whom are students.

If this is the most democratic form of government NSA has to offer us, we must carefully consider the direction in which we are proceeding. Before we criticize the mechanics of the system, an acceptance or rejection of the system's basic purposes is in order. These objectives are as follows:

1. "The need for a balance between the continuing element and the transient element within the community." A real democracy would dictate a balance of equal representation between these elements. However, in light of the other three purposes, and since the effects of their contributions may not be felt by those transient decision-makers, is a "perfect" democracy feasible here?

2. "A respect for the distinct functions of the constituent groups and at the same time a concern for creating a sense of unity." Surely in an institution of our kind, we can hope for a mature respect for all members of the community and a merging of minds on pertinent issues. Unity through a meeting of minds is possible only as a result of accurate communication.

3. "A recognition of the varying levels of experience and responsibility so as to insure both a flow of fresh ideas and a mature weighing of those ideas." This principle must apply to both student and faculty representation. As is obvious, however, complete representation on this council is impossible - with only six faculty members, for instance, how can every department be represented? Both student and faculty representations are set up with this ratio in mind. (A quick glance at the 1968 catalog would show that there are seventeen faculty members in the ten years and over category - not seven as previously stated - and that there is a possibility for the Foreign Languages and Philosophy and Religion Departments to be represented in this group.) Under this plan, all decisions rest with the entire community - thus the name All-College Council. Therefore, would it be fitting to eliminate any phase of the community - such as secretaries, coaches, or the President?

4. "The desirability of providing in the legislative process for the co-ordinating councils and committees to be concerned primarily with study, research, and the initiation of new measures; and the All-College Council to be free to hear debate, to deliberate, to make impartial decisions, and to devote time to long range plans for the college." The committees will be the drawing boards for future policy and will embody the essence of both student and faculty representation. It is in these committees that total community involvement must be felt or the cornerstone of the structure will crumble.

Each member of the community must take the responsibility for analyzing these four principles before we proceed any further. If they are acceptable, then conscienctious, constructive criticism must be begun within the established framework.

By the way . . . qualifications for the Presidency of the United States also include a residency requirement of fourteen years!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

In contemplating the weekend of October 26, I think the whole college community should be congratulated for a job well done--the parade, the game, the board meeting (!) etc. However, there was one aspect of the weekend which was quite a disappointment to a suprisingly large number of people, this being the basis on which the floats were judged. It was my understanding that they were to be judged on such qualities as originality, color, theme, and the amount and quality of work evident in the float itself (not on the basis of costumes!). According to some of the persons who worked on the theatre's float, it took approximately four hours to put it together. This was obvious. When the "players" stepped off the float, there was nothing left. Perhaps the theatre was accredited with originality, but this is a fallacy as the theatre has made a tradition of entering such a float. As a result of this seemingly unfair float I know of quite a few persons who are refusing to put an effort into similar projects of the future. This is a rather sad situation. I feel that some of the kids who put DAYS into their floats deserve an explanation!

Sincerely, Joan Gates

BIAFRAN CONTRIBUTIONS

Any who wish to contribute money to the Biafran refugee fund which is being raised on campus! may do so by leaving a contribution in the book store. This money is to be used, along with that raised by the Biafran Fast on Thursday, to help support relief work for the refugees recently displaced by the Nigerian civil war. This offer is open to faculty as well as students, and all such contributions will be appreciated.

Idle Words

In planning what was to be the nature of the articles printed under the above title, I made up my mind to attempt nothing but humorous pieces. I firmly believe in the effectiveness of laughter to make a point; when there is no point to be made, I firmly believe in the use of humor to hide that fact. I resolved to make few, if any, exceptions to that general philosophy.

The time for an exception is now. A subject has been brought to my attention that cannot be treated properly except in the most serious of tones; nor can I afford to ignore it on the assumption that others will find out in due course.

I refer of course to events recently occurring of which, in spite of the commotion and excitement involved, the exact nature went largely unnoticed. Ordinarily I would not have been surprised at this, or even think it worth comment--it was not the first time by any means, and would surely not be the last.

But at Maryville I have learned to find value in things characteristically deemed common and worthless. Thus although many may say that it is a waste of time, nevertheless for the sake of the interested few, I offer in the following sentences my own interpretation, based on rather thorough research and a previous familiarity with its nature in general.

Surprisingly enough, the origins are largely unknown. The most logical explanation seems to present more fancy than truth, and therefore cannot be relied on. In fact, the more closely I probed, the less I was fully able to confidently state as either one or the other, the results of my findings. At any rate it was clear that what was desired was not so much a condemning expose as it was a supporting and promoting union of the two, which I can furnish to anyone who wants to study it in more depth than I am permitted by present space requirements.

Nationally, the implications are obvious. As a cohesive whole the country must depart from its time-proven path, or failing that, whether for reasons stated above or because of facts not yet assimilated, encourage what must now be seen as complete folly. Either policy, of course, will prove itself to be a burden and menace to the remainder.

Nor do I think that the specific implications will escape anyone concerned with local and moral questions. Having formed, as we have, a prior commitment to dedication of the place of interest and thought in general, there is really little to add on this point.

I realize that the chances of my actually convincing anyone from the arguments of this short article are slim. Such was not my intention. I would feel disappointed, however, if some of what I said did not at least stir more controversy, and hence more thought, toward the eventual solving of one of our most critical problems.

Soulful Music Men of Pepperland

"Don't play cool," said Big Al Brodax, producer of the new animated Beatle motion picture "Yellow Submarine. "How many lousy little Yale professors get to meet the Beatles?" Erich Segal, professor of classics could have replied, "How many college professors are writing a screenplay for the Beatles?"

One of the most unlikely new members of the screenwriting fraternity, Erich Segal, a 32-year-old assistant professor of classics at Yale, the son of a Brooklyn rabbi, has several prior claims to fame. He finished 151st in a field of 750 runners at the 1966 Boston marathon, he was both class poet and salutory speaker at his graduation from Harvard, he has authored several scholarly works and has his Doctorate degree.

All that has changed. His fame now rests on his recent success as a screenwriter and for having played the piano for Ringo Starr,. the Harvard fight song, of course.

It began with Brodax's request that Segal hop a jet to London to collaborate on the script for "Yellow Submarine," a United Artist release.

Working from The Beatles hit song "Yellow Submarine," Segal and co-authors Brodax, Jack Mendelsohn and Lee Minoff, whipped up a screenplay.

The Beatles themselves made script contributions, John Lennon once called Segal at 3 in the morning to suggest, "wouldn't it be great if Ringo were followed down the street by a yellow submarine," The scene was put into the script.

Although Segal has achieved the enviable distinction of having one of his lyrics accepted by the Beatles for their new film song, "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds," he still remains very much a member of the academic community.

"If I had to choose one life or the other it would be the university." And his students are grateful for this decision.

Enthusiasm for Erich Segal and his professorial approach is indicated by enrollment in a course on Greek Tragedy which jumped from 60 to 300 since he took over the class. Moreover, this upswing began before Erich Segal met a single Beatle.

Though some of the more scholarly types on the faculty have difficulty understanding his venture into screenwriting, both the chairman of the department, Professor Havelock, and Segal himself, think that this sideline may actually improve his work as a scholar.

Says Havelock, "I think that it has helped him to acquire the gift of approaching a classical work as one might approach any modern one. He sees Plautus as you might see a contemporary playwright. Hence, he's always able to ask fresh and provocative questions."

"Yellow Submarine" starring Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Heart's Club Band, is produced by Al Brodax and presented by Apple Films as a King Features Production. The film was directed by George Dunning and designed by Heinz Edelmann. It is in Color by Deluxe.

The original story by Lee Minoff, based on the song 'The Yellow Submarine' by John Lennon and Paul McCartney, was written for the screen by Minoff, Al Brodax, Jack Mendelsohn and Erich Segal.

to the U.S., she never felt as if she entirely belonged here, Because of living in Venezuela, she was not aware of the little things, such as fads, latest songs, in our culture and consequently never felt really "with it." In Venezuela, she was, of course still a gringo. So in a very real way Maryville is home to her.

Probably the most mentioned item as being missed by the girls was the people themselves. Beth misses the Koreans and longs to see a jeep again. Jennifer misses the friendly Thai people and their food—sticky rice and curry, a favorite of hers.

Depending upon family circumstances and their college careers, the girls would like to return to their foreign countries, at least for an extended visit. Barbie has hopes of joining the Peace Corps and working in Latin America.

The consensus of the girls is that they have already gained much by coming to Maryville; that life here is exciting, the work interesting, the people friendly. M.C. has gained, too, in their being with us.

through the village in her new blouse and mini-skirt, while our African brother marched about in a West Point tee-shirt and boots. We played hour after hour with the world's cutest children. When we walked there was a child clinging on to each finger. We laughed at each others attempts in each others culture and though we could not always communicate in words we communicated much more because we loved, laughed, cried and became ourselves Together!

Africa also was a man to us, an American man who has given his entire being to others, to the African. A man whose love of life and others has given him eternal youth, Dr. W. Don McClure, secretary to the American Presbyterian Mission in Ethiopia, was God's gift to us. He won our devotion and our hearts. He was always there when we needed help whether it was stomping cobras to death or administering peanut-butter. He shared his African life with us through his adventure stories and witness to the African. This man was, and is, our ideal because he represents so much of what we dreamed we would someday become. Dr. McClure proved to us that all was possible if we only had the courage to forget ourselves and give our lives to God and the world.

As we walked down the dusty road, wadded through puddles and mud, slipping through the tall grass to the flat part of grass where our cargo plane, the "Vomit Comit" would land to carry us back over the mountains we cried. We did not want to return! These green hills and sky filled with zillions of stars we could almost touch was our home! These people were a part of us and we were a part of them, we were one. Many people say that we who are "civilized" should go to Africa to teach these men how to live. But these people are disillusioned for the people we lived with this summer taught us how to live. Their life is not a list of empty expressions as our's is. Their life is Living! They empty themselves out onto the world and fulfill by giving. . . . LISTEN TO THEM, EVERYBODY LISTEN!! STOP SHOUTING AND LISTEN TO THE CRIES OF OTHERS!!! LET GO OF YOUR BEING . . LOVE . . LIVE . . ALLELUIA . . AMEN!

As the mighty Maryville Scots came on the field Saturday night they were greeted by a standing ovation and a very exuberant crowd.

Spirit was the word as our "Big Reds" triumphed over the Millsaps' Majors of Mississippi by a score of 17-13.

The action began in the 1st quarter when Maryville was faced with a punting situation, Quarterback Dave Garner punted, Millsaps fumbled, and the ball was recovered by Dean Bercaw on the M.C. 49 yd. line. The Scots then marched in twelve plays the first T.D. of the game. The Scots scored on a hand-off from Garner to John Klein. The extra point kick by Jim Cannon was good to make the score 7-0. In the last few moments of the quarter the ball was again fumbled by the Majors and we took over on the 38 yd. line. But, as the seconds ticked by, Garner's attempted pass to Brad Beck was picked off by the Major's tough defense.

The 2nd quarter is when the Majors came back and scored their first touchdown, but the extra point failed because of a bad hike from their center and an added effort from our own tough defense. We took over the ball and it was 4th down and 3 yds. to go when Cannon attempted a 47 yd. field goal which was good and pushed us ahead 10-6.

The third quarter proved to be successful for the Majors as they scored their only additional touchdown and extra point. It was in the 4th quarter, however, that freshman Tom Ickes recovered the third Millsaps fumble and in three plays the Scots gained their final T.D., on a 38 yd. pass from Garner to Capt. John McLaughlin who made a tremendous diving catch. Cannon added another extra point kick, making the score 17-13.

One could not spotlight any one or two players, for this week the Maryville Scots worked as an inseparable unit. They have come alive and have the taste of victory. We will just wait in anxious anticipation for next Saturday when our Scotties meet Southwestern for their final game of the season. Let's get 'em Scots!

A STUDENT VOICE AT WILLIAMS

Students at Williams College will be given a voice in recommending speakers for commencement and persons to whom the college awards honorary degrees.

The college trustees have approved creation of a six-man recommending committee to consist of three students and three faculty members.

Names of possible commencement speakers and honorary degree recipients will be suggested by the student-faculty group to the trustee Committee on Degrees, which will continue to make the final choices.

The trustee action in approving the new committee stemmed from a recommendation made by the senior honorary society, Gargoyle.

President John E. Sawyer said he believed the new recommending committee would first see service in connection with the commencement for June, -969.

WOMEN'S HOURS AT O.S.U.

Corvallis, Ore.-(I.P.)-Oregon State University is considered by Janet Crist, assistant dean of women, to be as liberal as most other schools throughout the country concerning women's closing hours. "Of course, our policy must be viewed in proper perspective," she added.

Midwest universities have general policies that coincide with those now in effect at OSU. Oregon State can be considered conservative when policies are compared to universities in the Pacific Athletic Conference. Washington schools are very liberal. There are no closing hours at the sophomore level at Washington State University and no closing for anyone at the University of Washington.

Dean Crist cited examples of liberalism in the California schools also. UCLA has lowered the age for no closing to the sophomore level as has the University of Southern California.

Even private colleges in Oregon have weekend closing set at 2 a.m. Lewis and Clark College and Linfield College for example. The University of Oregon has adopted no closing regulations beginning this fall. OSU has extended the privilege of no closing to juniors. According to Dean Crist, there has been very little complaint from staff or parents and the experiment is considered very effective.

Besides extending no closing to sophomores there are other regulations that can be changed to blend in with liberalism. "The University of Orgeon has considered having a no closing dorm in which women students of any level can live with parental permission." Dean Crist revaled.

FLAGBALL FINALS

Well, this year's intramural Flagball games have come to a close. It was another exciting year for those who played and for those who got a chance to watch the going on behind the Student Center.

If you think football is rough, then flagball is hell. It is a rough game where anything that you can get away with goes. But it is all friendly (or is it?) competition, and all have a good time.

This year five teams played in the Intramural League. It would be impossible to print all of the men's names that made up this year's rosters, but it is possible to give you a few of the results. I will give you what I have, and hope that I am correct.

There were a total of 21 games between the five teams, and the final Stinking Shoe Game played by Alpha Sigma and Kappa Phi. This year's SS game was won by the Sig boys, who stomped their opponents 60-13.

Of the 21 games, only 2 resulted in ties. Here are the other statistics.

TEAM	WON	LOST	TIED	RECORD
Sledgehammers	8	0	0	8-0-0
Independents	2	5	2	2-5-2
Circle K	4	3	2	4-3-2
Devils' Brigade	3	4	0	3-4-0

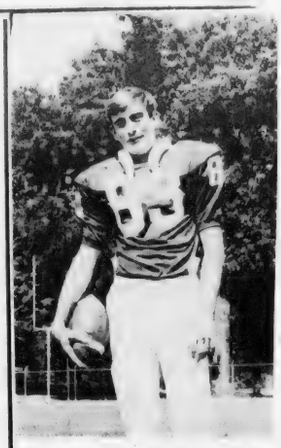
LICKIN' LYNX WRAPS UP SEASON

The Scots wrapped up their 1968 football season with a 15-14 victory over Southwestern College last Saturday night. This victory marks the end of an inspiring year--a year that is filled with hopes for next year.

The Maryville College football team has come from behind and has established a winning pattern, a task which many people had given up as futile. Those who have stayed with the Scots despite the many crushing losses can look at this year's record and know that at last their prayers have been answered. Many victories are awaiting the Scots, for they have come alive, they're hot and can't be stopped.

The Scots snapped an eleven-game losing streak in the Homecoming game against Franklin College. The following week the Scots upset Millsaps for a second victory. Carson-Newman got lucky. Southwestern didn't have a chance.



This year there were two seniors, captain John McLaughlin and Joe Dawson, on the team. They provided the leadership which usually is given by a much larger group. These men will not be back next year, but there will be a tough group of men to take their places on next year's roster. The Scots have built a foundation on which they can build their victory house. They have come from the cellar and are climbing toward the chimney.

The last four games gave the team the will to win. They gave the team a pride in their group, a pride so strong that it will carry over to next year. The team has worked together to become real football players.

It is impossible to single out any one player and give him more credit than the others. Each man did his best out there, never giving up the spirit that a great team needs. Each man did his best for Maryville College.

The team will return next year for Spring practice, and will have a tough list of opponents lined up. The team can not continue, however, without your support. The Scots look forward to a winning season next year. They can do so now for the first time in four years. They want you to be part of it, too, for they are Maryville College and you are Maryville College.

We can only give the Scots a sincere "Well Done", and our best wishes for next year.

Captain John McLaughlin

Senior Joe Dawson

Scoring was held to the second and fourth quarters Saturday night, but the Scots scored one point more than Southwestern. The final score was 15-14.

John Klein, who ran for a total of 155 yards, scored the first touchdown of the game, and Jimmy Cannon booted the extra point over, giving the Scots a 7-0 lead. The Lynx, however, came right back and scored seven points with only 22 seconds in the half.

Southwestern scored their final touchdown with about 6:23 remaining in the game, and took the lead, 14-7. The Scots battled back and brought the ball into scoring position. Garner ran the ball into the end zone, and brought the Scots to within one point of the Lynx. Time was called, and Maryville decided to go for two points to win, rather than to tie the game. Garner again held the ball and dove over the Southwestern defense into the end zone. The Scots held their lead for the remaining minutes of the game. A pass interception by safety Larry Stevens secured the ball for the Scots in the waning moments.

The freshmen did a great job out there, with Stevens' interception, Tom Ickes' two interceptions, and Rick Snyder's good running. Two seniors, captain John McLaughlin and Joe Dawson, played their last game for Maryville.

The Scots can truthfully say that they look forward to a winning year next season, for they have started something this year that can not be stopped.

OUR MAN HOPPE

By Arthur Hoppe

Once upon a time there was a young lad named Horatio Alger, who was determined to struggle and persevere and somehow get himself a good education. A good sex education.

But the little lad faced many hurdles. The first was the local school board, which voted 5-4 against showing Horatio any sex education films. The second was Horatio's parents, who voted 2-0 against allowing Horatio to attend any Adult Movies.

"Adult movies," thundered Horatio's father, "are corrupting the morals of our youth and destroying our American way of life."

So Horatio was 18 and on his own before he saw his first Adult Movie. He didn't of course, understand it. But he thrust forth his chin and vowed to persevere.

For two years, Horatio persevered. He saw Adult Movies thrice weekly and twice on Saturdays. "It was a hard struggle," he said proudly on reaching 20, "but at last I have won myself a good sex education."

It was then that he met Miss Penelope Trueheart and fell in love.

"All I desire on this earth," he said, falling to his knees one night in her apartment, "is to be the father of your child and spend the rest of my life as your husband."

"Oh, dearest," said Miss Trueheart ecstatically, "when will we be married?"

"As soon as we have a child," said Horatio, drawing on his good sex education. "For we can't have one afterward, you know. People never do."

"And how do we have a child?" she asked, blushing modestly.

"There are several ways," said Horatio. "The easiest, I believe, is for you to smoke a cigarette on the couch. I will pounce on you. Your hand will go limp and the cigarette will fall on the carpet. (We can use an ashtry, I suppose, if you worry about fire.) And then you will cry."

"I don't smoke," said Miss Trueheart.

"Then we'll have to throw your clothes on the floor," said Horatio," though it isn't very tidy. But please turn up the heat first as we have to lie under just a sheet and talk. Then I will go for a drive and you will cry."

"Will you take me in your arms, dearest?" she asked hesitantly.

"Yes," said Horatio. "In the shower."

"I don't have a shower," said Miss Trueheart, close to tears.

"Well, I guess we can skip that," said Horatio dubiously, as he threw his tie on the floor. "Come, my love, I can hardly wait."

So they threw their clothes on the floor, got under the sheet, talked, and then Horatio dressed and went for a drive while Miss Trueheart cried.

But, oddly enough, though they faithfully repeated this routine every night for seven years, they never did have a child.

With his good sex education, Horatio privately blamed Miss Trueheart for neither smoking nor having a shower. But he was too gallant to say so.

Moral: Adult Movies may, indeed, destroy our way of life. And the human race along with it.

recognitions

In India we visited the farm of a wealthy Rajistanni family. There a girl danced for us, and thinking about her dance has crystallized for me some far-reaching thoughts (allowing for change according to the dictates of poetry) about India, and women, and those differences even music can't bridge. I hope the poem captures some of the beautiful, sensuous, and discordant--yet flowing--nature of the dance.

The Dancing Girl

I came for your dancing,

You knew that I'd come.

Your gown was all crimson,

Your hair all undone.

Stop

Then begin

Graceful

Yet awkward

Changing

You writhe

Innocence and wisdom blend in your dance.

Flowing and turning,

Set to harsh chords

A servant plucked out.

Your body tense

Then smooth

As though you

Fought an uncertain

Battle against a melody

I could'nt even hear.

Gold round your neck and the gold of your throat,

Silk on your legs and silk against the silk of Your legs. You flash. Gold and black and red as you twirl

The night, the heat, your face music

It is inside me

Yet half a world away.

The mystery is more

Than the dance.

The mystery is India

And summer, a peacock

Screaming, and Woman.

I came for your dancing,

You knew that I'd come.

As slowly you twisted - -

Your hair came undone.

CIV Analysis

As stated last spring, the purpose of CIV programs is to provide stimulating and thought-provoking educational material, which will be relevant enough to deserve the mandatory credit we receive for attending. Since this "course" has no required homework, this paper feels that it may serve as the center of intellectual discussion and/or action stimulated by these programs---especially when they fall short of their purpose, as has been observed to happen more than once.

It is the intention of this writer to see that an article is turned in concerning each CIV program (is that a hint?). It is hoped that these articles will make us THINK---not necessarily in the same vein as the programs---and PROJECT what may be suggested on Wednesday (Tuesday? Thursday?) mornings into some sort of useful reaction.

The musical program offered on November 5 was a refreshing contrast to the usual lecture-discussion procedure. Remember, it was not put on for our entertainment, but as an expression of support for the United Nations' International Year of Human Rights. The first number, "The Testament of Freedom," was admittedly performed much better than some sceptics may have expected. It was obvious that a real effort had been made to coordinate the band and choir. The text of this number is a brilliant, courageous of "the American Dream,"---something we seem to ideally desire but sometimes fail to understand---is taken from writings of that often obscure, but probably greatest genius in history, Thomas Jefferson. If we have such a great need and desire to maintain this country, maybe it would not be such an unpardonable sin to listen to one who helped create it.

The fourth verse begins "I shall not die without a hope that light and liberty are on steady advance...," and it is obvious that the composer (and conductors) was restating this in his own gifted way.

The second number, "The Song of Human Rights," may be somewhat justly accused of using archaic expression, but its thought is certainly relevant to the preaching of the leaders of our generation on the supreme value of the individual.

After the program, that venerable sage Dr. Campbell, who is always visibly impressed---one way or another---by anything and everything he observes, emphatically advised that we think of "all the meanings we have applied to patriotism," and another friend replied that patriots "run all the way from minutemen to peace demonstrators." This brought to mind two final thoughts. First, that the (far-off?) American "ideal" expressed in this program was remarkably similar to what I heard from a member of SDS not too long ago (they're not all Communists!). Second, I thought of all us educated people---expecially of a good friend who didn't like the program but couldn't say why---as being able to learn a tremendous lesson from Dr. Campbell. Let me explain. When I received that long blue Victorian scare-sheet explaining this particular CIV program, I was not looking terribly forward to it. Not that the notice was so wrong, but it somehow turned people off, and we all went to the program with mental blocs, and closed our minds to what we knew would have nothing to offer us. Another problem is that many of us cannot feel expressive in music and stuffy language. But does not this problem relate to one of the great advantages of CIV---that we must be able to share in the mode of expression of others in order to be a progressive COMMUNITY as intended by the new philosophy of our Committee on College Life and Structure, and as is required in any peaceful community of human beings?

"Freedom, justice, and peace
Human rights
The design of law
The dignity and worth of the human person.
Amen. So be it. Shalom.
Freedom, justice, peace."

SEVEN RUN

Seven members of the Maryville (Tenn.) College Varsity Track Team ran in relays the Maryville College - Carson-Newman football game ball to be used in the Scots-Eagles gridiron tussle at Jefferson City on Saturday night, November 9 at 8:00 p.m.

The seven Maryville trackmen were Dave Wiley, Heiskell, Tenn., junior, who planned this program; Edward "Rocky" Brown, Decatur, Ga., junior; Henry Hastings, Ho-ho-kus, N.J., freshman; Edward Hawkey, Mt. Holly, N.J., junior; Darrell Smith, Mt. Holly, N.J., sophomore; and Steve Zerwas, Iowa City, Iowa, sophomore.

Carson-Newman College trackmen ran the game ball to Maryville College last year and Maryville returned the favor this year.

DEBATORS SEEK RECUITS

At the first debate meeting for the year, Maryville College found itself in the rather embarrassing position of having only a skeleton squad of debators returning from last year's successful team. Transfers to other universities took their toll, along with ordinary things like dropping out of school and participating in the Junior-Year-Abroad program. Only Ray Phillippi, Penny Proffitt, and Charles Myers remain as experienced debators.

Mrs. Proffitt, director of forensic activity, has assembled a small but eager group of first-year speakers who attended their first tournament on Nov. 1 and 2 at Appalachain Univ., Bonne, N.C. The Affirmative team, composed of Janet Welton and Georgia Briggs, won 4 out of 6 debates for a very promising opening to the season. Others competing in debate and individual events at that tournament were Mack Garner, Cindy Esty, and Robert Hutchens. Cindy Esty won third place in the Dramatic Reading contest with selections from the Apple Tree, based on Mark Twain's Diary of Adam and Eve.

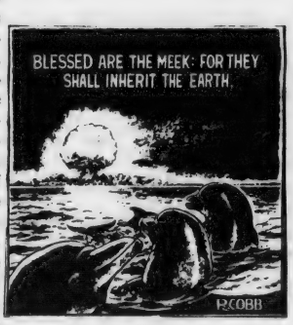
In order to carry out a successful season, even on the Novice (1st year debators) circuit, several more students are needed. Previous debate experience is not necessary, but it is an asset! The topic for 1968-69 is Resolved: That the Executive Control of Foreign Policy Should be Significantly Curtailed. Here's your chance to be a part of Maryville's winningest team!

Pineville Project Proposed

Our second interim is upon us. As a whole, those of us who were here last year found the interim period to be an enjoyable and satisfying learning experience.

One of the more unusual interim projects is being led by Dr. Carol Wahler, newest member of the psychology department. Dr. Wahler and 18 students will be working with children with behavior problems at the Bell County Health Center, Pineville, Ky. The students will be trained in operant techniques so that they will, in effect, become behavior therapists.

Perhaps a brief explanation of the operant method is in order. When a problem child is brought to the clinic for help, the psychologist observes the child's behavior over a period of time and makes a chart of his baseline rate; i.e., the rate of his aversive behavior compared to his acceptable behavior. Then by reinforcing the acceptable behaviors and extinguishing the undesirable behaviors, the psychologist can record the child's progress as shown by his baseline graph, until the problem is cured.



An example of a problem child is one who throws temper tantrums continually and exhibits little cooperative behavior. The therapist first records the child's baseline rate. If social approval is reinforcing to the child, the therapist then praises him when the child cooperates, thus reinforcing desirable behavior. When the child throws a temper tantrum, the therapist withdraws his social approval of that particular behavior by ignoring him. Soon the rate of the aversive behavior begins to drop. When the temper tantrums have disappeared, the therapist will differentially reinforce. That is, he will reinforce any crying or signs of anger by paying attention to the child, while at the same time, he will ignore the child's cooperative behavior. Soon the aversive behavior will be as high as before. This is done to prove that it was the therapist (who could be the child's mother or the student) who was responsible for curing the child's behavior problem. When all is recorded, the therapist will again extinguish the temper tantrums and reinforce cooperative behavior until the problem is cured.

The technique has no ill effects on the child, who is unaware of the process. We are all controlled by others' social approval in like manner every day.

The MC interim project is important for a number of reasons, in addition to its educative value for our students. There are not enough behavior therapists at the Center to be able to treat all the disturbed children. Parents can be trained in the operant method, but many are not interested or do not fully understand it. The children will be the ones who will benefit the most from our students' participation.

The children range in age from five to 12 years. Two students will be working with each child. They will accompany the child at work or play and observe his behaviors and others' reactions to him. They will then apply operant techniques in hopes of a cure.

Dr. Wahler plans to publish the outcome as a study if all goes well. Furthermore, Union College is using this MC interim project as a pilot program for a possible graduate program using students as therapists. It promises to be a rewarding experience for all concerned.

Eagles Slide By Scots

Most of Saturday night's game was played in a heavy, steady snowfall. The field was a mass of puddles, and the ball was as slippery as a wet bar of soap. Despite the weather conditions, however, fans were pleased with a well played game.

The game ball was run from Maryville by the Highland Harriers and was delivered to the Carson-Newman stadium by a team of wet, cold men. Last year the Carson - Newman X-Country team ran the ball to Maryville. We hope that this can become a tradition.

Maryville kicked off and recovered a C-N fumble on the first play of the game. Jim Cannon attempted a 26 yrd. field goal, but failed to score. Larry Stevens intercepted a pass for the Scots, but it did not pay off. The Scots were pushed back to their end zone, forcing Cannon to kick for 41 yards. By now the second quarter had begun, and it was snowing heavily.

The Scots pushed the Eagles back for a loss of 39 yards, and Boggs stopped their 4th and 40 play on the Carson-Newman 12 yard line. The Scots took over and Dave Garner drilled a pass to John McLaughlin for a 12 yard touchdown. Jim Cannon's kick put the Scots ahead 7-0.

A bad hike from the C-N center dropped the Eagles on their 21 yrd. line, and the Scots took over. But the Eagles came back with a pass interception. The Scots held them, and with 5:33 left in the first half, Boggs recovered another fumble by C-N, who had blocked a M.C. kick on the Scots' 13 yard line. The Scots could not move the ball during the rest of the second quarter, but they showed the Eagles that they were a tough defensive squad. At halftime the Scots led 7-0.

After a combined performance of the Carson-Newman and Maryville bands, which was quite pretty in the snow, the Scots came out with intentions of keeping their lead and winning.

The third quarter was marked by numerous fumbles. Boggs recovered another fumble (#3 for Boggs), but the Eagles prevented any scoring by the Scots. Gary Reagan recovered another C-N fumble later in the quarter, but the Eagles recovered a M.C. fumble less than a minute later.

A sustained drive by the Eagles resulted in their scoring with a pass and a 2 pt. conversion attempt. Carson-Newman took the lead 8-7.

Again, fumbles hampered both teams during the fourth quarter. Gary Reagon got his second recovery for the night, and later M.C. recovered its own fumble. Neither team could cash in on the other's fumbles, so the score remained 8-7 in favor of the Eagles. As time ran out, fans witnessed a succession of kicks by both teams, each trying to prevent the other from gaining ground. The Scots could not gain field goal position, and the clock ran out as Carson-Newman recovered a M.C. fumble and maintained control of the ball.

The Scots lost a real close ball game to a team that was favored by much more than 1 point. Our defense did a good job, proving that they can work together to stop anything the opponent can throw at them. The whole team worked together and played a great game.

Now that the season is over, we can only wait 'til next year when, we hope, the team returns to show everyone what a winning ball club is really like. Well done, Scots!

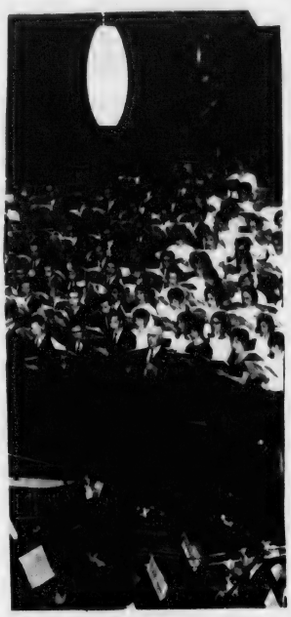
Vol. 54 MARYVILLE COLLEGE, Maryville, Tennessee, December 13, 1968 No. 9

Christmas and tradition just seem to go together. When the Christians took over the pagan festival of the winter solstice, they retained the customs of gift giving, singing, and burning the Yule log. Today Christmas combines these anceint traditions with the birthday of Christ.



Here at Maryville College tradition has taken on somewhat of a negative connotation when applied to rules and academic procedures. But for the month of December, particularly, tradition comes into its own as it helps us to celebrate the coming holdiay season with a special relevance.

Making a tradition of something--whether it is decorating a tree or reading Luke 2: 1-20--not only makes the celebration more meaningful, but adds to the feeling that without this particular tradition, it doesn't seem quite like Christmas.

The Maryville College community has recognized for years the value of the feelings of well-being and Christian togetherness inherent in our traditional Christmas activities.

One such tradition is the annual production of Handel's "Messiah" on the last Sunday before the holiday vacation. No matter how many times you have heard or participated in the performance, you never tire of this great oratorio, for it tells, in a very beautiful way, the Christmas story and life of Christ. The familiar words and music form a common bond uniting the performers with the audience, so that students, faculty, and townspeople under the direction of Dr. Harter each year continue to bring the true spirit of Christmas to the college community.

Another musical Christmas tradition at the college is Christmas vespers. It offers an additional opportunity to further the Christian sense of community at this most meaningful time of the year. There is something, too, about an evening worship service that takes on a greater significance at Christmas. Perhaps it is due to the religious music sung so well by the choir. Or perhaps it is due to the feeling of spiritual togetherness, and of realizing that we are a part of a continuum of worshipping Christians celebrating the birth of our Lord.

Christmas readings in the lantern is a tradition at Maryville that diffuses throughout the listeners the old-fashioned spirit of past Christmases and joy in the present holiday season. Community caroling follows, as once again the sense of community combines with Christmas good-will in singing favorite carols. Strains of "Silent Night," possibly the best loved carol, can awaken the Christmas spirit in even the worst Scrooge, when carolers sing beneath his window. The old custom of caroling continues at Maryville to be one of the ones most signifying the Christmas season.

The Christmas tree and accompanying decorations form a tradition that is inextricably bound up with the celebration of the holiday. Each dorm has a tree and a decorating party to trim it. It is interesting to note how often the trimmed tree will reflect the personalities of the dorm's inhabitants. A comparison of the tree in Carnegie with that of one of the new girls' dorms should illustrate this. Often a dorm will house a few unusually artistic people who will contribute their time to decorating the windows, ceilings, and anything else that they can legally find to spray, tape, or paint. The festive dorms add much to putting everyone into a happy holiday mood.

Christmas lights can be seen on one or two prominent trees on the campus. If Maryville is lucky enough to have a light snow, these trees look especially pretty at night.

All in all, the college community recognizes the celebration of Christmas in its every aspect, religious and secular. The perpetuation of Christmas traditions can add much to our enjoyment of the season, as we look toward the deeper spiritual significance.

CHRISTMAS IS . . .

New York (NAPS)---So you're dropping in on the Big Town this winter?

Whether you're coming for the first time or the fifteenth, you're sure to be excited about your visit to the most complex, colorful and cosmopolitan city on earth. And eager to visit fabulous sights you've heard about or might have missed on a former visit.

Since not even an avid native spending a lifetime exploring New York City could cover every point of interst, it's wise to make a list of "musts"---then plan so you have time for these top attractions with enough left over for a few of the off-beat offerings that provide their own special enchantment and exhilaration.

New York has two brilliant new stars and each of them belongs on your "great sights" list. As you'll be coming in winter you'll want to see the brand new Madison Square Garden Center--the world's most spectacular sports palace where the colorful sea of cheering spectators provides almost as many thrills as the featured event.

The other outstanding newcomer is Lincoln Center where each of the performing arts---opera, symphony, dance and theater---is housed in its own daringly designed building. Winter is the peak season here with top artists featured, but even if you can't attend a performance, the guided tour through this unique architectural wonderland will fling you forcefully into the future. You'll be amazed by the vast mobiles, the ultra-modern sculpture, the gilt and scarlet decor, the dazzling chandeliers and glass walls of these breathtaking structures. Whether you find the ensemble aesthetic or shocking, it's sure to be one of the most unforgettable moments of your trip.

Put Rockefeller Center high on your "must" list. A city within a city, this midtown landmark symbolizes the dynamic vitality of Manhattan. Here you can join the ice skaters or watch them glide gracefully to music---then catch a glimpse of the TV scene with a tour of NBC. Finally, there's the plush splendor of Radio City Music Hall where you'll enjoy one of the best bargains around: a first-run film plus the world-famous Rockettes in a lavish stage show.

Your list will not be complete without visits to the Empire State Building (still the world's tallest structure), the United Nations where you can attend official meetings free of charge, the New York and American Stock Exchanges and Chinatown. And you'll want to sail to the Statue of Liberty and gaze down at the superb view from her crown.

Sure, you'll want to visit all of these places, but while taking in the "greats," don't forget the thousand and one small towns that make up that diverse yet wonderfully cohesive conglomeration known as the Big Town.

Of course, you'll want to shop on fabulous Fifth Avenue and visit the giant emporiums on 34th Street and the East 50's. But if you have even a tinge of the explorer in your makeup, you can discover a myriad of small shops selling treasures and tidbits from every corner of the globe.

Take a bus to the East Village where you can buy love beads from a flower child while getting a clear look at the middle-class moppets who are making the mod scene even modder. Browse for a bargain in the little antique shops along Third Avenue. At shops along MacDougal Street you can pick up a Mexican blanket, a pre-Colombian mask or a Portuguese pitcher. A few blocks north, on 14th Street, there's a specialty store selling nothing but Spanish imports.

Don't miss Broadway at night when natives and visitors mingle amidst the razzle-dazzle of bright lights and ballyhoo, sables and saris, diamonds and dungarees. But don't forget the cultural explosion erupting Off and Off-Off Broadway. For a pittance, and sometimes for free, you can frequently view a new lay written by a budding dramatist performed in a basement by the stars of tomorrow.

New York's restaurants are justly renowned. You will certainly want to visit some of the famous ones, but don't miss out on a few of the more unusual, out-of-the-way spots which often serve gourmet dishes such as Steak au Poivre at budget prices.

Savor stuffed grape leaves and cold "tanabour" soup at an Armenian restaurant in the East 20's. Stuff yourself on stuffed artichokes and lobster Fra Diavolo at a "ristorante" in Little Italy which is one small world you'll want to see. Sup on sukiyaki while you sit cross-legged on a Japanese cushion or dine on finnan haddie at a famous businessman's dining room on Fulton Street. Order Shark's Fin Soup in Chinatown or return to the nostalgia of old Vienna at almost any eating place in Yorkville.

Whatever world you seek, you are almost sure to find it somewhere in this little island which cost Peter Minuit $24 back in 1626. And when you do, remember that most New Yorkers came from a small town, somewhere, and remain small towners at heart, as awed by the great metropolis as you are, and eager to share with you the special flavor of their own very special town.

EDITORIAL

After the vacation we are going to realize as a community our new governmental system. But we all in the community must still devote much time and energy into the final formulation of the legeslative aspect of our community council. The newly published proposal is still considered tentative.

We must enter into the implimentation of our community council with unfettered realism. To be realistic cannot mean to back into an experiment but rather must mean that we must enter into new realms with a spirit of daring and trust. We will deny our progressive and unique concept if we enter into the new system with our conclusion in mind. If our conception of a true community council is to be realized we must take a chance in the experiment and wait for the results. We cannot truly progress if we concieve of the result before we operate the experiment.

Trust and respect is essential to a successful system. We cannot afford to deny respect to our fculty. We have the best faculty that Maryville Collete has ever had and for that reason we must not insult some of them by believing that some in the faculty may not have the maturity enough to judge reasonably in matters important to the college's operation. A professor's value is recognized in many ways more than just tenure. Trust and cooperation is essential to our community's operation.

In this crucial step of the community's development we are going to make history. But we will not make history if we insist on denying that we are within a new situation. We cannot operate as if we are in the same situation that Maryville has been in for 150 years and are faced with just another incident in the situation. When the situation changes some of the by-laws may have to be changed to fit it. This has been done even in our United States Constitution. If we do not investigat the new situation we may deny history (at least philosophically) at Maryville College.

This writer hopes that we can all return from a good vacation and be ready to meet the challenge that is facing us all as a community. But let us do it in a spirit of cooperation and dialogue. This must be in reality and not in decieving rhetoric but to make it a reality we must all participate. But we all must be allowed to participate

This song is a grabber. It reminds me of another man we killed. Merry Christmas.

Has anybody here seen
My old friend Abraham?
Can you tell me where
He's gone?
He freed a lot of people
But it seems the good
They die young.
I just looked around and
He's gone.
Has anybody here seen
My old friend John?
Can you tell me where
He's gone?
He freed a lot of people
But it seems the good
They die young.
I just looked around and
He's gone.
Has anybody here seen
My old friend Martin?
Can you tell me where
He's gone?
He freed a lot of people
But it seems the good
They die young.
I just looked around and
He's gone.

Didn't you love
The things that they stood
For.
Didn't they try to find some Good for you and me.
And we'll be free
Someday soon.
It's gonna be one day.

Has anybody here seen
My old friend Bobby?
Can you tell me where
He's gone?
I thought I saw him
Walking up over the hill
With Abraham, Martin, and John.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

December 2, 1968

Dear Mr. Editor:

I have just today received the communication on the proposed All College Council. After studying it a short time it is readily apparent that those who worked on this proposal have spent much fruitful time and energy in bringing it to its present status. For this work they should be soundly commended.

Since I am a member of the faculty my attention naturally was focused on how it was to be represented. It was at this point that I personally became disappointed. Therefore, I have

recognitions

Christmas. A time for dreaming. "And visions of sugarplums danced in their heads." Dreaming. Christmas. "I have a dream." Gifts. Christmas-dreams-presents. A white can't know black, can't presume to speak for black. But a dream can be shared by anyone. ("I'm dreaming of a white christmas?") blackwhiteblackwhite. Christmas. Christ, christmas--any beyond, the new year--and beyond . . . ? Black? White? Or maybe fire-red? But then, as Dylon says, "I wouldn't worry about it none, though. Them old dreams are only in your head."

Dream

I dreamed the Black went striding beautiful as night, silent but softly terrible, as he burst through the dream's deserted streets, stepping sewer-deep and city-tall

The jagged stars burned in his eyes and teeth, his face shone glassy like warm amethyst-- his grin was ringed in bonfire red, his breath was smoke.

Jails, each bar a man, fell down in the cool, quick fires of his hands;

crashing

but silent still, as the very winds were halted at his feet.

The air around him shimmered, hung spiced--it shone, it whirred.

His silver laughter razor-sliced the skies glowing golden in the dream.

A halo of the sun was his, like molten gold, and in its brilliance his face flashed bronze--then black.

His enthronement in the deep and golden night was darkness encircling the beauty of its own.

"I'M TEACHING FOUR DIFFERENT COURSES IN EDUCATION - AN' CONFIDENTIALLY, I GIVE THE SAME LECTURE IN ALL OF 'EM."

Idle Words

I remember two years ago when an upstart student body president tried to bring off an evaluation of teachers by students. From the start I knew it wasn't right. Teachers are paid to evaluate students and they are professionals at the job. But students to evaluate their teachers? The very word "student" implies a lack of knowledge for this task.

So the proposal was shot down on the trumped-up reason that the students ought to wait until the new curriculum was started, as any teacher evaluation would be invalid until then. I am glad that they found a reason to stall this project, even if the reason has long since expired, because the consequences of a teacher evaluation are terrible to contemplate.

Consider: For the first time, the administration would have a means of deciding whether a teacher is competent or not. Not only would this give consideralbe more work to our already over-worked Anderson Hall staff, it would thrust upon them the grave moral question of how to tactfully let a rotten teacher go. Imagine too the psychological impact on the administration if they realized that not all of their faculty are educational geniouses.

More than the administration, of course, the faculty benefits from not having the evaluation. What with textbooks, class notes, outside readings, and papers and tests (not exams--there are no finals under our new curriculum) to read, why add the possible insult of making a teacher read his own evaluation? Put yourself in the place of the faculty for a brief instant. Would you take kindly to some ignorant class criticizing your work when you no doubt have spent every waking hour for their benefit? The idea of a class telling a teacher how he teaches is absurd--does not the teacher himself know better than the student how he teaches? Obviously, a teacher evaluation would merely add to a teacher's current duties, and might even tend to alienate him from his class.

Finally, if the students stopped to think, they would see that they too are better off without teacher evaluations. O.K., maybe you don't think a teacher is doing his job. You can see Dean Daniels about it, and he will decide what kind of action your complaint warrants. There is no need to go to the trouble of filling out a form for your teachers--and why risk the grave sociological implications of bypassing the proper channels? In a democratic society such as ours, how could students even consider an action of anarchy such as having all the people involved in maintaining the quality of our teachers?

If students feel the need of expressing themselves about their professors, maybe they should hiss a poorly-prepared lecture. This would save us from all the above-mentioned evils of the evaluation, while at the same time allowing freedom of expression. Harvard Univeristy students do it, and it hasn't hurt them one bit.

M.G.P.

BLUEFIELD, Va. (CPS)--The students and administration at Bluefield College have decided to keep the school's American flag at half-mast until the end of the Vietnam war.

Dr. Charles L. Harman, president of the Baptist junior college, said he approved the idea after the 250-member student body voted unanimously for it.

One of the distinguishing things about man is his ability to look into, and plan for, the future. This is one of the qualities that has enabled him to rise above the animal kingdom, as the saying goes. This ability shows itself even in man's institutions when something as massive as the government of our nation plans for its future and endeavors to perpetuate itself. Maryville College does not exempt itself from this trait of mankind and its creations. The decisions rendered by Anderson, et al, apply not only to our daily existence and current usage of our facilities, but look forward to our needs for next year and the years to follow.

This can be noted in several events of the past year or so. For instance, those legendary trays for the Dining Room are in existence and have been for the past year! Why aren't we using them? The answer is to be found in Maryville's foresight: those responsible for ordering the trays didn't bother to determine a few associated facts beforehand. The tieup in this case centers around the fact that these trays can't be washed fast enough in our dishwater. Have any idea how long those unseen men in the kitchen would be working to wash some 800 trays at approximately 6 trays at a time? A slight mistake on the part of someone, and as a result those trays are stored away, presumably awaiting Armageddon.

What are Maryville's plans for Fayerweather? We're not sure but we presume that such a dilapidated structure will be torn down in the not-too-distant future. Until then it fills a place for offices for our campus publications and the displaced Sigs (shades of Baldwin). Fine, but again such a use can only be temporary and the future can hold little but Fayerweather's eventual razing. Does anyone care to estimate how much our college has spent building their little laundromat in the basement of that science building? What will happen to that investment when the college finally does tear down Fayerweather? The machines can be recovered, if they find a place to put them, but the labor and cement and wiring cannot. Though this amount may seem insignificant compared to our annual budget it is a waste and one that might have been avoided with a little thought.

Of course there are no other examples of this sort of thing. Maryville is not usually this thorough. There are other reasons for the books mildewing in the lost recesses of Thaw. There are other reasons why those men in the kitchen have to slice all your roast beef and lamb and pork and tomatoes by hand (this is what's known as portion control). Maryville does not have money to waste and so it must plan carefully for its future.

decided to make use of this forum to propose some questions to the committee in the hope that they might see fit to reply to them (and questions from others) before the entire community so that we all may share in the thinking behind the proposal.

Faculty to be chosen? We are quite fortunate to have an excellent one already in hand so there is no need to change. However, even her staunchest admirers will admit that she will not last forever. What will happen when a successor has to be chosen?

#2 Do we need a Secretary of the Faculty in this new organization? Why does this particular role guarantee a permanent seat on the All College Council? Why is there on faculty member not subject to community election?

#3 Why have the faculty representatives been broken down into three age brackets? Is wisdom allocated by the number of years one serves on the faculty? It seems to me that we would be in a better position if we found some way to choose the best six faculty possible, period. Can we be bold enough to break with tradition on this point?

I trust that this letter will be construed as an avenue for open and honest discussion on the proposal and not as a critical splashing on the excellent work already done. I am sure that there are answers to the above questions. By raising them in this manner I am merely hoping that we all might be able to arrive at the best possible answers.

Sincerely yours,
David P. Young

To the Editor:

The College Judiciary System, one of the first well-established components of the new community structure, has been in operation now for almost one year. This is a sufficiently long period, I feel, for us to attempt some assessment of this system, and the purpose of this letter is to raise the issue for further public discussion.

The central problem of any judicial system is, obviously, how to deal fairly with individuals and with the community in which the individuals live, and the corresponding frustration is that the system often cannot be completely fair to either one. In an attempt to meet the special conditions of our college framework, the present system consists of the following components:

(1) the rules and regulations of the college, which are used to aid the Judicial Council in its actions

(2) the persons or bodies (e.g. Deans, dorm councils) who bring matters to the Judicial Council for action

(3) the Judicial Council, consisting of three students and two faculty, which meets privately with those concerned in a given problem and reaches a final decision and

(4) a Review Board which, in cases involving suspension, meets at the request of the defendant to review the case and to present its thinking to the Judicial Council before a final decision is reached.

There are several clear dif-

ferences between this system and the system operating in a public court of law, cases in point being the making of decisions in private, rather than public, hearings, and the dual judge-jury role of the Judicial Council. While these differences are of fundamental importance and are worth careful consideration as to their value, my intention here is just to mention their existence before dealing briefly with the four items above.

First to the rules and regulations. One of the many rumors which fill the air is that the total collection of rules and regulations is so sacred that only a few high priests know of its whereabouts. Having seen them, I can vouch for the fact that they are not carved in stone; in fact, they look more like a hastily assembled scrapbook, having been pasted together from several different sources. The assemblage is available to anyone in the Dean of Students Office. Admittedly a more available copy is needed, and this problem in in the process of being solved, I understand. More to the point of this letter, however, is the fact that many of the rules are not clearly enough spelled out. While it is true that codified law cannot hope to give an equation for justice in all cases, it is equally clear that statements authorizing undefined punishments for "conduct unbecoming a M.C. student" give far to much legislative license to a judicial body.

Matters may be brought before the Council at the discretion of the Deans, as well as through other channels. The discretionary clause, as I understand it, is primerialy to protect the very important counseling role of the Dean. It must be recognized, however, that as a result, the Deans have two paradoxical roles: that of counselor and that of prosecutor. This demands that the Deans be persons of very great personal strength and integrity, since they will have to face conflicting pressures internally as well as externally.

After trying to imagine oneself in such a position, one may well decide that it would be more realistic to redefine the job of Dean and to separate these conflicting roles.

One of the most satisfactory points in the newer system is the fact that students are in a majority on the council, giving an increased measure of democratic control in the community. None of the members, faculty or student, has any legal expertise, however, to serve as a guide in reaching decisions which can greatly affect human lives. I fell that as a result, under the current structure, the Judicial Council operates at a "first aid" level of justice. One employs amatuer first aid only in emergencies, when nothing better is available. The Judicial Council may currently be doing an adequate job, but how might it do better? On a practical level, it might be well to give some additional formal description of the procedures to be followed. For example, should testimony be given individually to the council or in the presence of adverse witnesses? Should the right of "cross-questioning" be guaranteed? Should there be any inadmissable evidence?

Finally, it would also be well to reassess the role of the Review Board. At present, it can consider suspension casas only on the question of whether or not there is any new evidence. It may be that the Board was intended to have only the narrow role implied by this restriction, but it might do a great deal to increase the justice of the system if the Review Board could consider cases on the basis of unjust punishment or poor examination of the evidence as well as on the basis of new evidence.

In many features of our lives it is possible to make a mistake or to live with one and to rectify it later. Judicial mistakes are too often irreversible, particularly as they apply to individuals, and any possible means which will increase the justice of our system is worth immediate consideration.

As a postscript to this letter: It seems to me that the editorial pages of a weekly newspaper are often a poor vehicle for carrying on dialogue about significant college issues, simply because of the necessary printing delays. In trying to establish and carry on open discussion about such issues, would it be helpful to establish a bulletin board in some central location such as Pearsons Lobby where open letters of opinion (and replies) could be posted? In some other colleges, such an "opinion board" has served as a very effective initial community-wide forum for discussion.

An Open Letter

TO THE MARYVILLE COLLEGE COMMUNITY:

We are writing to you from the ancient city of Beirut, Lebanon, in order that you might know something about what we are doing, and the places we have visited. The days are very busy as we attempt to absorb the ideas, historical culture, and present reality in these regions.

The flight from New York to Athens was long and tiring for everyone, but we wasted no time in wondering how we could recover. Touring Greece in two days can be intensely frustrating. Our group is not easily discouraged, however, and we moved relentlessly to see the spectacular Acropolis, the ruins of ancient Corinth, the remarkable achievements of King Agamemnon's Mycenae, the archeological museum and the sights, sounds, and streets of modern Athens. We saw as much as could possibly be seen in two days although there is much more to visit in Greece. We have come to Beirut now and find this to be an exciting city also. There are so many specific events to relate when the opportunity is more practical.

There are thirty-two of us in the group, and we get along with a good spirit of compatability. We have fun, but we are starting to realize something which goes far beyond our laughter or even our growing knowledge of past achievements. We are experiencing the sensations of Americanism for we cannot escape it. We find ourselves caught between pride in our American accomplishments and regret over our American failures. People from the United States are unmistakable in these lands. We appear as big-spending, curious persons who project a peculiar sort of arrogance. We have a manner of thinking which convinces us that our way is right, and their way is wrong. This Americanism is unavoidable for us as we travel in our group, take our pictures, and wish for a little of our food. There is a communication gap between ourselves and these people. It is not always so apparent on the surface, but it exists nevertheless on those deeper levels which are so essential for complete understanding. It seems that we Americans have had an unconscious moral deficiency in our ways of arrogance, pride, and wealth.

Perhaps it is unfair to say we are resented, but at least our intentions have been selfish and misunderstood. We wish that we could break away from the barriers of our nationalism so that we could all meet here as brothers of humanity. But we are the victims of our world and must face each other as Greeks, Americans, Israelis, or Lebanese. We will continue to travel, gaining more of the valuable knowledge and wishing to transcend the inadequacies of our nationalism. It is a spectacular trip which one must experience to truly understand. We look forward to seeing all of you again.

Graduation: Scott Style

PHILADELPHIA--Twenty some years from now middle-aged fathers and mothers may be digging out old graduation outfits from dusty attic storage spaces.

With a little pulling-in of the stomach and standing up straighter, chances are the outfits will look just as good then as they do now...even though they are inexpensive disposable "paper" caps and gowns from Scott Paper Co.

The "throw-away" caps and gowns that nobody throws away are fast replacing conventional cloth cap and gown rentals at many of the country's universities, colleges, and high schools, according to Scott Paper.

And, the souvenir aspect of the disposable caps and gowns is only one reason for their growing popularity, according to Thomas W. Klein, Scott vice president and president of the company's Disposable Textiles, Inc. subsidiary.

The cap and gown the student keeps costs no more than the average $5 rental fee for a returnable cloth outfit, Klein claimed, and there is no need for a deposit fee.

More than 2400 University of Cincinnati graduates wore disposable caps and gowns at their June graduation ceremonies, and the University of Massachusetts also used disposable outfits, along with other colleges and high schools, Klein said.

The Scot caps and gowns, marketed through its DTI subsidiary, are available in white, black, blue and red. They match up in looks with the regular outfits because of the tailoring; shirred sleeves, cloth bindings, and pleated front and back. The mortar-boards are complete with a white nylon tassel.

A President Sees The Light

Clinton, N. Y.-(I.P.)--American colleges and universities have been criticized for their failure to retain the interest or meet the expectations of their students.

Newly - inaugurated President John W. Chandler of Hamilton College recently said "...much of what we offer students answers questions which they are not asking and ignores questions which they are asking." He placed a great deal of the blame at the feet of the graduate - schools which, he explained, have become the central preoccupation of the liberal arts colleges.

But another part of the blame he attributed to the undergraduate colleges themselves for ignoring the relationship between a student's intellectual development and "his more general development as a human being."

CIV: A War Correspondent's View

Consciencious, hawkish, knowledgeable, confident of rightness, apologetic--these terms perhaps begin to characterize our CIV guest on November 21. With a somewhat difficult-to-listen-to delivery, Mr. Lucas began by telling us that the Viet Nam war is a real tragedy that has divided our nation more than any event since the Civil War. O.K.

Probably the brightest spot in the message was Mr. Lucas' prediction that a cease-fire is inevitable in the next six months, but he could not venture what might follow that. His reasons behind such an opinion were that both the United States and North Viet Nam have problems now that were nonexistent when the war began. Fine.

Mr. Lucas mentioned the exploitation of men and resources that has gone on for a few years --especially on the part of the North and the Viet Cong--and said that this must end soon because of exhaustion of resources and because neither side wants to fight a war in which no progress is being made. Of course some radical would interject here that there is no use in war period, but write you own article about that.

It seemed important that we realize that South Viet Nam is not a war-devastated country. There are many happy, peaceful areas, and American Marines help to develop needy areas in their spare time. The South Viet Namese are very proud, courageous, and ambitious people, and they want/need (take your pick) us to help them become a modern, sovereign nation. We were assured that none of the people want communism, but it is difficult for them to know quite what they do want, with the problems of isolation and constant war for so many years. Our main problem seems to be to decide if we have the right to help them along what lines and how much.

Mr. Lucas closed in his "maybe - I'm - old - fashioned" (who says this is sinful?) manner by praising our army, chiding communism--but expressing a distant hope of an "understanding with Russia--," and declaring belief in the eventual triumph of good over wrong. In answering a student's question, he regretfully admitted that we have learned no way except war to contain communism (isn't someone going to claim that it is not necessary to contain it?).

In trying to find others' opinions on what especially might be gained from this particular program, I was reminded that there was little that was terribly, excitingly original in Mr. Lucas' speech. But sometimes it helps to have recalled some of the details of a very difficult-to-report war, and after all, what can be new in so many years of no progress.

Griffith The State Department, Viet Nam

Our CIV for Wednesday, November 27, was Mr. Girvan Griffith of the Viet Nam Training Center, Foreign Service Institute, of the Department of State. Talking on Viet Nam in general, and the pacification program in particular, he presented an interesting and very informative presentation.

His major point was that the Viet Nam war, to be comprehended, must be observed through the eyes of the Viet Namese, not through Western eyes. Rice, family, and the traditions and customs of the land constitute the all-important items in their lives, not politics, economics, etc., which Westerners worry about. After all, as Mr. Griffith stated, France ruled Indochina for 100 years, but China ruled it for 1000 years. Because of this, and because of the Viet Namese, that of colonizer to colonial, the latter do not understand Westerners. These "foreigners" have customs and values which seem strange, and they seem to breed corruption and violence wherever they go. Americans, since they are the Westerners most directly involved in Viet Nam, are also the ones who must work the hardest to understand the people of Viet Nam. This confrontation will change certain American values and ideas, says Mr. Griffith, but this, he feels, is definitely good. He emphasised that we must work through the people, and that the going will be slow. But our contributions to the Viet Namese will be new skills, modernization, and new hopes for a better future.

The speaker had two things working against him: He was a "hawk", if by association with the government only, in a congregation which has at least a large minority of liberals who do not exactly consider the war to be the salvation of all man's earthly desires, and he was from the State Department, a department in which you usually don't say what you think and plan to keep your job. In spite of these handicaps, Mr. Griffith aquitted himself very well. Although some people have stated that he did not answer the questions put to him after the formal speech, in reality he answered them, with a little guardedness, but from an approach not expected. When asked whether Marxism or democracy was the most attractive to the peasant in Viet Nam, he did not state that, for example, democracy was. Instead, he took a new tack, stating that whomever controlled the particular area controlled the people's political "lean". Compared to most State Department spokesmen, Mr. Griffith comes through as a very good exception to the normal rule that such men devote paragraphs to say that they would rather not answer the question. And because of his definite feeling for the common people in Viet Nam, he could not be attacked for being a callous warmonger. All in all, I would rate it as a very good CIV.

One note of criticism is in order here. Although both Mr. Lucas and Mr. Griffith gave interesting talks, I for one would like to see the anti-war side presented. There is definitely some question in many peoples' minds about the morality of this war, and many are very confused about what is really "right" in regards to the war. If CIV is to be a true learning experience, it must present all sides to all controversies and let the student learn what he can from the interaction of ideas.

What Nixon Will Do For / To Students

WASHINGTON (CPS)--Richard Nixon says he has learned a lot from campaigning for the Presidency, especially in understanding what's on the minds of young people.

He's been on the receiving end of some pretty pointed messages on signs carried by students. One poster held high at a rally in Burbank, Calif. especially caught his eye. "Talk With Us, Not At Us," the sign said.

The sentiment behind that statement is indicative of what Nixon sees as a gap between generations, a gap he thinks his new political leadership will help to close.

The President-elect feels he has made a sincere effort to talk with students, not at them. He offers a platform that includes ending the draft through an all-volunteer army after the Vietnam war is ended. He has established a Student Coalition to "utilize the talents and energies of the academic community to resolve society's problems."

Nixon also would "devise new ways by which, through long term loans, the federal government can further assist students to gain a higher education." He also says he would encourage private enterprise to expand its participation in student financial aid. Nixon might support the proposal for an "Educational Opportunity Bank" that would loan students the cost of college, with repayment dependent on future income. The GOP Platform, though, contains the old 'dea of tax credits for parents and a new version: tax deductions to encourage savings for college.

Tax advantages would also be given to those who support private schools, the GOP candidate says.

Nixon also supports lowering the voting age. Eighteen-year-olds are old enough to vote not because they are old enough to fight, he says, but because they are smart enough to vote.

Nixon promises students "a piece of the action." Involved in "forging the new direction in America," young people will have a better alternative than taking to the streets in protest, he argues.

All this sounds good to Nixon supporters. Other members of the academic community, however, are scared to death of what might happen to dissent and freedom under a Nixon-Agnew Administration.

Their fear - and Nixon's fear of or distaste for student demonstrators - can be explained as simply a difference in ideological beliefs. To someone on the left, someone on the right seems far right; while conservatives might be able to stomach moderates, liberals seem too radical.

But liberal distaste within the academic community for Nixon can be explained and justified by examining the candidate's remarks and record.

Nixon's the one, Humphrey supporters point out, who voted in 1947 against a $30 million increase in the school lunch program. In 1960 as Vice President, he declined to cast the tie-breaking vote that would have authorized more than $1.1 billion in federal aid for school construction. He sponsored no education legislation while a member of Congress and opposed most federal-aid-to-education measures.

While recently he has been more careful in his choice of words than his running mate Spiro T. Agnew, Nixon clearly opposes overt student rebellion.

Last spring he expressed his views on the Columbia disorder, saying students who close campuses "not only disgrace themselves but harm the cause of education." "More deplorable," he added, "is the conduct of those professors and teachers who condoned, encouraged or excused the lawlessness of their students."

Nixon saw the Columbia rebellion as "the first major skirmish in a revolutionary struggle to seize the universities and transform them into sanctuaries for radicals and vehicles for revolutionary political and social goals."

He warned that "we must not allow the Latin-American university of today to become the prototype of the American university of tomorrow...The way to prevent it is to rid the campus now of any student organization or clique which applauds and uses the type of force employed at Columbia. The place to begin is with the anarchic students."

Talk about talking AT students. Oppressive statements like those make it clear that Nixon is dealing in political doubletalk when he lists only positive plans as "some indication of the importance my administration will be determined to attach to the legitimate demands of young people of America."

Richard Nixon refers to today's young people as the "Great Generation." He says there is "a new road ahead" for all Americans. And to young people he says, "that new and relevant road is your road. You will be part of the new leadership. The challenge of change is your challenge, because this land is your land."

While there are some passable parts, Richard Nixon's "new road" for young people seems paved in doubletalk.

PASS - FAIL

Two modifications in the pass-fail system at the University of Utah have been approved by the Board of Regents.

The pass-fail option has been modified to include the 'D" grade, and the pass-fail option card removed from the advance registration packet and distributed instead with student's completed class schedules.

Under the modified pass-fail system, a student whose performance is at the "C-" level or above will receive a pass ("P"). If his performance is in the "D" range he will receive a "D", and if his performance is failing, he will receive an "E". Both "D" and "E" grades will be averaged with the grade point.

The new system will also allow a student to register and attend a class for two weeks before deciding whether or not to exercise his pass-fail option.

The two changes are aimed at solving the two most troublesome problems which developed during the first year of the program:

1. The tendency of students merely to "get by" on the pass-fail option in required General Education courses, and
2. The desire of many students to change their decision concerning the pass-fail option after they have attended the first one or two meetings of a class.

The first change will amend the Faculty Regulations concerning pass-fail to read:

In courses in which activity or attendance is the controlling factor in the determination of grades, the grade "P" (pass) shall be substituted for the grades "A", "B", "C plus", or "C-". The grade "P" shall carry credit toward graduation but shall not be included in the computing of grade point averages.

Review of pass-fail option was made by an Ad Hoc Committee to Study Withdrawal and Grading Practices.

During his freshman and sophomore years, a student may select a maximum of three lower division courses for which he will receive pass-fail grades.

After achieving junior standing a student who has been accepted in a regularly-established academic major may select a maximum of six courses outside his major department for which he will receive pass-fail grades.

A student may select only one pass-fail option in any one quarter.

Wrestling Opens

The Maryville (Tenn.) College Wrestling Team opened the season on December 7 with a match against the University of Tennessee, at 7:30 p.m., in the Alumni Gymnasium, in Maryville.

SEC Champion of 1967; and Harry Burnette, junior, Chattanooga, Tenn., who showed many moments of greatness last year and is anxious this year to lead the Scots Wrestling Team as its captain.

Other members of the team are Saturo Jo, freshman, Knoxville, Tenn.; Jerald Cooper, freshman, Trenton, N. J.; Henry Hastings, freshman, Ho-ho-kus, N. J.; Robert Evaul, sophomore, Banner Elk, N. Honaker Banquet

A few nights ago I was privileged to attend the annual Honaker Club Football Banquet. Although I can not share the good food with you, I would like to share some inpressions I got from the occasion.

The keynote speaker for the evening was Mr. Jim McDonald, Assistant Athletic Director at U.T. After a few jokes which I can not pass on to you, he got into the message for the evening. Mixed with some of my own thoughts are some of his.

Mr. McDonald feels that there are certain characteristics that make a good athlete. Citizenship is the first that he mentions. A ball player must be acutely aware of the fact that he is part of the leadership of the school. He is representing the school to hundreds of people who are watching the team closely. Sportsmanship is required of every man on the field. A man must learn to knock a man down as hard as he can and turn around to help him up.

Loyalty is an all-important factor for the individual, the team, and the school. One must be loyal to oneself, the team, the coach, and the school, and this must continue no matter what the record is. This year the school has shown a definite trend toward more sincere loyalty.

An athlete must be dependable not only in practice and in the game, but in his everyday work as a representative of the school.

He must show honesty to himself and everyone involved in his life. He must show respect for authority. He must tolerate others no matter how much he may dislike them.

Togetherness is a point which is about the most important of all. The team must work together. The last four games proved to everyone what the result of togetherness can be. But more important, the entire school must be together in an all-out effort to show everyone that this school is great, that no matter what happens the school is behind the team.

It takes initiative to make a ball club move. It takes confidence in the team to give it initiative. It takes courage to get the job done well.

Combine all of these characteristics and one has a personality. A ball player must have this personality, and the school he plays for must have it too. Our men on this year's football squad have done their best to combine all of these things in order to play good ball. Two of these men have been chosen to receive awards for their outstanding achievements this year. They have been chosen because they combined those characteristics and put them to good use. Bob Mitchell received the Most Improved Player award for his overall improvement this year, and John McLaughlin was presented with the Most Valuable Player award for his work both in practice and in competition. We congratulate these men, and hope that those who follow in their footsteps, as well as those who look on, can continue to combine the many fine qualities that are sure to result in victory.

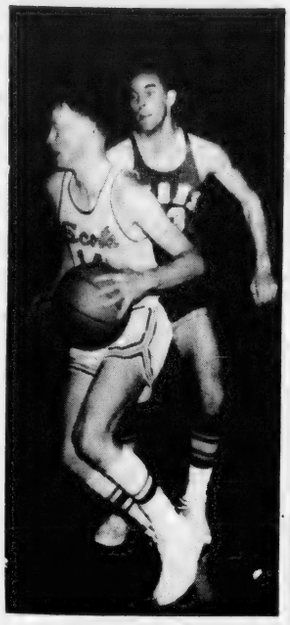
BASKETBALL SEASON OPENS WITH TWO WINS

SCOTS ROMP IN OPENER



Maryville College opened its basketball season here with a 100-66 victory over the Johnson Bible College Preachers.

Taking an early lead the Scots controlled the ball, and were ahead at the half 40-24. The Scots, led by Bill Padgett's 27 points, showed a great team effort in controlling the ball with well-planned offensive tactics. Although the offensive drive looked better in the first half, the Scots drove ahead and scored 60 points in the second half. The Preachers also scored more in the second half, but could only bring their score to within 34 points of the scots.

The Scots have six more games before Christmas vacation. The final two of the six will be played here on the 16th and 17th of December, and the others will be played away on the 3rd, 7th, 13, and 14th. The Scots will return from vacation to play Kentucky Southern, here on January 4th.

The Scots have hopes of continuing where they left off last year (winning, of course!), and it looks like they have started it off right.

The Scots' J. V. Basketball team played their first game of the season against the J. V. squad of Johnson Bible College Saturday before the Varsity game. The Scots triumphed 91-74. John Weston led the scoring with 34 points. The freshmen appear to have a strong back-up squad this year, providing a safe cushion for the varsity team to fall back on if the need arises.

POLL NAMES MC PLAYERS

In a recent News-Sentinel Area College Football poll, three Maryville players were given a team rating and three were given honorable mention. Named for the offensive team were tackel Dennis Shockly and center Joe Dawson (3-way tie). Named on the defensive team was W.N. Osborne, in a 2-way time for a tackle position.

Honorable mention was given to offensive end Brad Beck, defensive end Bob Macy, and defensive back Don Hickman.

Don Hickman

Don Hickman, Maryville College flanker back, has been named to the Honorable Mention List of the 1968 Associated Press' Small College All-American Football Team.

Hickman, a junior, from Kingsport, Tenn., is the 19th Scot player to be on the Associated Press team since its inception 22 years ago.

The tall speedster tried out for the Scot team for the first time this year and helped Maryville both on offense and defense to its best season since 1964.

"Hickman's great speed, reflexes and handling of the ball, plus a year's experience, is counted on heavily to make the Maryville Scots a winner next season," Head Coach Howard H. (Monk) Tomlinson said today.

Don has also lettered in track and basketball at Maryville. He is majoring in sociology at the college. He was Vice-President of his freshman class, is a Student Council Representative, last year and this year, a member of the Circle "K" Club and treasurer of the United Christian Campus Fellowship organization.

Couchell, Office of Student Work, Greek Orthodox Church, New York City; Father Laurence T. Murphy, Roman Catholic International Office, New York City.

Dr. V. Bruce Rigdon, born in Philadelphia, Penn., received his B.A. from Wooster (Ohio) College, going one year abroad to the University of Hong Kong. He received the B.D. degree magna cum laude from Yale Divinity School and won the Julia A. Archibald High Scholarship Prize. Yale University awarded him an M.A. in 1963 and a Ph.D. in 1968 for his studies in the area of church history and historical theology. He has also studied at St. Vladimir's Seminary of the Russian Orthodox Church, N.Y. He served as Chairman of the First National Conference of Orthodox College Students held in June, 1968, at Oberlin College.

Father Laurence T. Murphy served on the faculty of Seton Hall University, teaching mathematics and holding the position of Assistant Dean of Men. He later entered Maryknoll Seminary and was ordained to the priesthood in 1954, having received the degree of M.R.E. and S.T.B. He was assigned further studies at Yale and then assigned to the faculty of Maryknoll (Ill.) College, where he was later named Chairman of the Philosophy Department. Father Murphy completed his Ph.D. at the University of Notre Dame in 1963. He was later assigned to work with the Newman Apostolate, in the U.S. Catholic Conference, where he has headed the Newman International Office, which is concerned with the aspects of international education, including student exchange and foreign student programs.

Local Art Shown

Maryville College is presenting an art exhibit now through January 30 at the Fine Arts Center, featuring works by Mrs. Martha Wright and Mrs. J. M. Slack (Carolyn Ingram-'62).

Mrs. Wright, Art Instructor at Alcoa High School, will have oil and water color paintings on display. She received the B. S. and M.S. degrees in art from the University of Alabama and has also studied art at the Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, New York.

Mrs. Slack, who will exhibit pottery, is currently working with Dale Bunse, Art Instructor at Maryville College, and is doing graduate work at the University of Tennessee. She is teaching part-time at the College during the winter term, in the applied art program.

NYC RACISM QUELLS DURING INTERIM

Dinni Drake and I spent our senior interim as religion majors in New York City studying the role of the church in an urban setting. Dinni worked at Riverside Church in the nursery school department and I did reading and research in the area of institutional racism. We also did a brief study of the East Harlem Protestant Parish in connection with a conference with the pastor of one of the parish churches, Church of the Savior. Both of us participated in Metropolitan Urban Service Training seminars on urban education under the direction of Dr. Nile Harper, professor at New York Theological Seminary. The seminars centered around the New York City teachers' strike.

The teachers' strike was settled the first two days we were in the city; yet, the conflict between the experimental community control school districts and the striking United Federation of Teachers continued. The New York City Board of Education was caught in the middle. The experimental school districts are located in largely Puerto-Rican and black sections of New York City and the UFT is largely Jewish. The strike caused increasing polarization between the Jewish and black communities. The strike and the Board of Education's responses to the striking teachers and their leader, Albert Shanker, and the responses of both the UFT and the Board to the attempts of black and Puerto Rican communities to keep their schools operating during the strike seemed to be living examples of institutional racism. The strike settlement abolished holidays previously scheduled and lengthened school days for those students who attended school during the strike so that teachers could make up for lost pay; Oceanhill-Brownsville experimental school district was placed under a state trusteeship; one Puerto-Rican school principal was ousted on a technicality; Harlem school P.S. 39 was closed after parents refused to let nine union teachers re-enter. All these incidents and more challenge the credibility of the Board of Education's stated support of de-centralization through community control. It seems as if they are not really in favor of community control when it means that blacks and Puerto-Ricans will be running their schools. Throughout this study we met ministers and seminarians who had taken their stands by helping break into schools so that children could go to school during the strike, by helping parents run school offices, do janitorial work, and keep schools open. They were the ones who had dared to be caught in the middle of the struggle between the Jewish and black communities for the control of the school system. They were the church's witnesses in a time of racial conflict. This aspect of the church's meager involvement in the New York City school crisis pointed out that the church's mission in an urban setting is often through secular committees and justice organizations.

The urban minister finds that his role of enabler is to lead his congregation in becoming involved in seeking better housing, human relations, education, business policies for the disenfranchised. Throughout all of this mission there should be constant searching and a constant changing of structures. Even the oldest of the urban missions, the East Harlem Protestant Parish is constantly changing its structure and program as it evaluates its changing environment and the mood of the East Harlem community. Throughout the urban mission there has been an air of paternalism; the move now is away from paternalism into organizations led by leaders indigenous to the community. The church must keep adjusting its forms of ministry to fit modern situations and communities. The church must address itself to the crisis in our nation and to working for freedom and justice for all people. The church is relevant in some areas of urban centers; the church does witness and stand in opposition to the status quo of business exploitation, slumlords, universities, white racist governments, bureaucracies, and even other churches, but the church is also involved in perpetuating inept-

NAUSEA

The Prof! I slurr at this fine hour;
Whose heart hangs heavy, quite like stone.
His wits, like insects fly before
A pestilence to blood and bone.

With mind wide open like a tomb
And conscience pourous much like rock
Hi students willing and concerned
Despite their queries - always mocked.

I'd give both person and estate
To move from plight of underseer
To weigh those balance scales of grade
And for the moment be his pier.

Red Sky of the Morning

Red sky of the morning
You be our warning
For the storm approaches.

Ignored, but not unaware
Apathy ate away our care
And into the maze of misunderstanding we sailed.
Liked less than the Draft of prejudice
Squalls of hate lashed our boat.
Some desired a change of direction
To the sensibility and Peace of the calm.
Others, set in their ways, to fight the storm
As if it was a tangible thing to be overwhelmed
By God damn's and to-hell-with-you's.

The tempest upon us, a meek man counseled
Bonds of understanding to secure the boat,
But this was difficult and unmanly
For the advice came from a bearded peacenik two thousand years old.

Blindly the ship listed on in gloomy waters.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

After attending the CIV program of Dec. 5, it can only become more evident that the lack of communication existing between students and administration is a direct outgrowth of an even greater malaise. A lack of communication between students themselves brings forth a variation of responses reaching degrees of apathy, hostility, unconsciousness and distinct irreverence-attitudes which culminate against one or several targets. These foci, which may include administration, faculty or individual students who stray from the conservative mean are equally threatened by both attention and inattention. It is a little heartening to realize that there is a responsiveness involved in open hostility and sarcasm - it may be negative, but at least an awareness is indicated. The more prevalent reaction, however, is apathy or vapidness which is seen more clearly in the faces of upperclassmen who have managed to transcend hostility. The general attitude here is of complete ignorance - an isolationism that manifests itself even further in group orientations that tend to encompass self and a selected friendship body. The crisis has reached a sad level when students lack the motivation to avail themselves fully of basic modes as a college newspaper, open faculty offices, or discussions in the Lantern. Representation and offices are held by the selected few - do they consciously feel supported by a student body?

The sharp division of thought between factions who simply tend to think differently was clearly illustrated by incidents occurring in the past and the rapidly fading present. But the gap dividing thinkers if further widened by the question of loyalty and involvement - a basic conception of where brotherhood lies. A vital disappointment of Maryville as a progressive, "liberal" arts college is the absence of any dialogue between students concerning prevalent issues within the campus or nation. Education cannot survive in such an environment.

Until Maryville's students begin communicating and a trace of uncertainty is erased, the campus cannot possibly carry the potential on a large scale to speak directly with a faculty and administration.

Dear Editor:

It's time to stop--Hey!

I start this letter with use of several lines from a song by the Buffallo Springfield, "For What It's Worth." These lines ring true - something is happening here, right here at Maryville College - and for some or most, "what it is ain't exactly clear."

As a junior I have experienced two years of change, in myself and in the college as a whole. Gone is the image of "Jesus Tech" and the notion that enrollment in Maryville included joining some self-righteous God-Squad. We no longer produce

Christmas vacation is behind us and we are almost halfway through the school year. For many of us it is the last year at Maryville and it is largely for the seniors and to the faculty, administration, and concerned underclassmen that I write this. It seems not too much to ask that after spending three years and several thousand dollars at Maryville a student would expect to receive instruction from the best faculty his department has to offer. And yet a glance at the Interim schedule will reveal that the vast majority of these faculty members were involved in freshmen or, at best, sophomore-junior level courses. This criticism is not aimed at any department in particular. Unfortunately, is it true of too many of them.

Agreed that it is important to interest the freshmen and get them off to a good start in their college experience; but there are a few other things to consider. Too many of the current crop of freshmen won't graduate from Maryville. Most of them don't know yet what they will major in. No one who is now a freshman will want to graduate from a college where his only exposure to the best of the faculty occurs during his first year. And the Pride of Maryville College, those students who go on to graduate school and give us such a good name, are not going to be as well prepared if they must get their education from second-best faculty members. Granted "a senior should be able to learn for himself" ...to a certain extent. But anyone who wants a self-education could spend better time and far less money in a library.

It is not just during Interim that this happens. I have heard a number of complaints from concerned seniors to the effect that their major professors are just not available to them. There is an interesting fact to be observed about our college as one walks about the campus and glances in faculty and administration offices. The same students are always sitting in those offices chatting. At first one is glad to see that the faculty and administration are so accessible to the students. But then one begins to wonder about the existence of this small group who are THE students to talk to (from an administration and faculty viewpoint), who are somehow appointed to committees and panels, and who have been known to tie up a faculty member's time when the senior majors of that faculty member would have liked to talk with him. Maryville has reversed the problem at most colleges where a student doesn't have any contact with the best of the faculty until his senior year. In doing so we have created a problem of our own...the seniors have lost contact with the faculty. But then who are we...to demand instruction from the best Maryville has to offer...to decide who those "gifted" faculty members are...to pay money for our education and then claim the right to protest that it is invalid!

ness through bureaucratic structures and in building hollow monuments of sanctuaries, office buildings, and sophisticated recreation complexes and calling them churches. Throughout it all there is a deepening sense of frustration and a glimmer of hope that the church might be able to witness and prevent the holocaust.

"ARE YOU EXPERIENCED?"

Oberlin, Ohio - (I.P.)-Approximately 600 Oberlin College students are enrolled this year in a student-organized Experimental College. Student organizers see the experiment as an instrument to effect change in the traditional curriculum.

Oberlin is not the first college where courses outside the curruculum are available, but is among the first to permit students to earn credit for some of them.

Last June the College of Arts and Sciences faculty voted that five Experimental College courses could be designated for credit on a satisfactory/unsatisfactory basis. They limited the number of students receiving credit in any of these courses to 12 and limited students to one such course during their college careers.

The five courses designated by the Senate Educational Plans and Policies Committee as credit courses have full complements of 12 students signed up for credit in Urban Politics, Black Intellectual Thought, Computer Science, and Contemporary Black Life (which the student catalog of courses lists as Are You Experienced?). In addition, these courses have as many as 25 auditors.

"No Protest," Says SDS

Missoula, Mont.-(I.P.)-Former members of the University of Montana chapter of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) have agreed to disassociate themselves from the national SDS organization. At a recent meeting they also agreed not to picket the campus visit of the Central Intelligence Agency representative in charge of CIA recruiting interviews in the UM Graduate Placement Center.

The SDS chapter at UM was little more than five months old before it was disbanded. Denault M. Blouin, a UM English instructor and a faculty adviser to the former SDS chapter on campus, said the chapter won't function any more. "The SDS," he explained, "at this point does not seem to be a feasible form for organizing political activity."

"The reason that SDS is no longer important on this campus," Blouin continued, "is that UM students who were SDS members are no longer interested in protesting. What they are interested in is living their lives freely and they don't think that that can be done in SDS."

See Europe With No Money

The Continental Trailways and the Greyhound Bus Services all over the United States are an inexpensive and quite reliable means of transport. Let me tell you today about a similar organization in Germany and Europe: the Trans-European Bus Service, which links practically all countries of Central Europe and the Middle East. Unlike the Continental Trailways and Greyhound services, however, this service is something created especially for tourists who want to see the old continent without spending too much money. The whole setup is unique because it offers not only travel for your money but also food and drink throughout the day and hotel accomodation in the evening, especially on the long-distance lines, such as the Munich-Teheran or Brussels-Kuwait service.

The European Bus Services network has been established in a joint effort by European railway services to offer their tourist customers travel to and through the most beautiful areas of the continent, and to give them a chance of seeing places at leisure, since the buses do not run as fast as the railways. They offer excellent comfort, such as cozy armchairs, bars, and radio, and there are multilingual stewardesses giving sight seeing tips to the passengers. Travel takes place only during daylight, and the prearranged hotel accomodation for the evening saves the traveller all trouble with his baggage or unpleasant quarrels with hotel clerks who seem to speak all languages except those you know.

The prices for the Trans-European Bus trips are generally lower than those for the railways. A trip from Frankfurt, Germany, to Amsterdam in Holland, for example, costs only 9 dollars. The central European daily services follow a fixed schedule and are not so much for sightseeing but merely offer cheap transport. Other lines combine travel with sightseeing, which does not make them any more expensive, as for example the line between Frankfurt, Germany, and Basel, Switzerland. On this route the "Europa-Bus" does not use the highway along the Rhine but takes you through the Black Forest, not missing even one of the famous spots there. It is a one-day tour and costs only 10 dollars per person.

The international lines are just as cheap, although they generally do not follow the direct route but rather the most beautiful one, which makes every trip a great event. The line from Frankfurt, to Prague, Czechoslovakia, for example, touches Nuremberg, Bayreuth in Bavaria, and Karlovy Vary, a traditional and beautifully situated resort in Czechoslovakia. It goes without saying that Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Austria, Yugoslavia, and other European countries are included in this network for tourism.

The best deals offered by the "European Bus Service" are the so-called round trips of one or more European countries, which include everything from food to hotel accomodations. One of these roundtrips, for example, is the three-day "Storybook-Castle-Tour", visiting all the famous medieval castles along the Rhine, the Mosel River, and the Westerwald Mountains. To make it even more beautiful, the tourists will spend their nights in castles which have been turned into hotels. And what does it cost? 89 dollars per person.

Other classical roundtrips are the two-weeks tour of Yugoslavia for 179 dollars or the seven-day Switzerland tour for 137 dollars.

Great attractions for globe-trotters are the long distance lines between Central Europe and the Middle East. The trip from Munich, Germany, to Teheran in Persia takes exactly 8 days, with one day of rest in Instanbul, Turkey. It costs 93 dollars, including food for the whole time as well as hotel accomodations for seven nights. You are of course free to interrupt your trip wherever and whenever you wish and jump on a bus of the same line one or two days later. If I had the time, I would make this trip: The one from Brussels, Belgium, to the Sheikdon of Kuwait in Arabia, on the Persian Gulf, which takes 10 days and costs 113 dollars, as usual including food and hotel.

Whenever you plan to travel to Europe, you should also consider the services offered by these "Europa-Buses", whose timetables and price lists can be obtained at every travel agency and railroad station.

The Key of CIV: Frustration

CIV is unique in that it is one of the few instruments through which the entire college community can communicate through dialogue. The whole campus can be involved in a search with a single issue permeating college dialogue. It hasn't worked out that way. Many of us are not yet ready for intense confrontation. It's frustrating to be confronted, and this is the key of CIV. The greatest problem confronting the CIV concept is how to permeate the entire college community and stimulate communication and search.

Many students have been turned off, if we are to judge by communications on campus, by a misunderstanding of the attendance policy. Many feel that you have to be here every time whether you are engaged in a search or not. Such is not the case. The CIV attendance requirement is simply that over a period of four years you obtain three credits. A credit is obtained by attending 30 CIV's. And let me stress that this doesn't mean 30 a year; it means 30. If you come to 26 this year, after you have attended 4 next year, you are an official recipient of 1 credit, and nobody can take it away from you. And than you are on your quest for the next 30. So that out of 34 offerings per year you then are asked to attend 90; 34 per year is 136 over the 4-year span, which means 90 out of 136. My mathematics shows this to be 66%. This for an academic credit is quite liberal, because in most academic courses this is assuming 100% retention of knowledge to get a credit. I don't want to be associated with an educational process where compulsion is confused with learning.

CIV plans to present topics in series with as much diversified opinion as possible. The January emphasis on religion and the role of Christianity is followed by a planned five-part series concerned with the accomplishments and role of Black America. Next year it is the desire of the CIV Committee that this format of a series be used much more effectively than has been possible this year.

CIV deals with attitudes and opinions. College communities are accused of being unaware of the many facets of world living and the contemporary scene. CIV does not alleviate this nor does it propose to. But it can offer me the possibility of information and confrontation. The information and confrontation is dependent upon the guests invited and college students, faculty, and administraion and the willingness of each of these to interact. It has succeeded. It has failed--because I have succeeded and I have failed in my personal quest for knowledge.

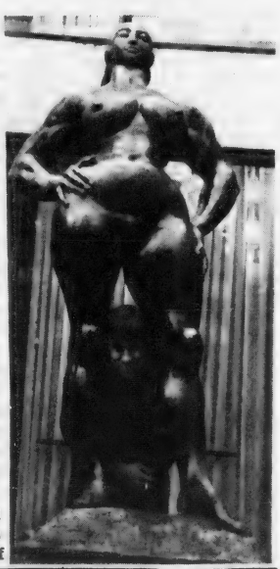
JANUARY MEETINGS

Singing Sisters



The Medical Mission Sisters are a religious community founded in Washington, D.C., in 1925, by Mother Anna Dengel, a young Austrian physician. The community first field of work was northern India. Now numbering over 700, the Medical Mission Sisters work in 14 countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Over 50 of the Sisters are doctors, some Board-qualified specialists. Others are nurses, midwives, pharmacists, medical technologists, administrators, dieticians, etc.

The Medical Mission Sisters care for over 1,000,000 patients a year in their 33 hospitals in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. In most of their hospitals they offer training programs for local people in nursing, midwifery, and other para-medical skills.

Sister Miriam Therese is the leader of the "Singing Sisters," who are all Medical Mission Sisters. She is a guitarist and a composer by hobby. Her folk songs are called from the Bible and are often referred to as "The Bible with a beat." In this year's Popular Awards listing (ASCAP), Sister Miriam Therese joined such outstanding composers and artists as Joan Baez, Judy Collins, and Herb Alpert.

The group's albums include "Joy is Like the Rain" (1966), "I Know the Secret" (1967), "Mass of a Pilgrim People" (1967), and "Knock, Knock." Several of these are available in the Fine Arts Center library. The group will be on campus January 31-February 2.

only teachers, missionaries, and seminarians. Not all our buildings are contemporaries of the Stanley Steamer, and our social activities are not limited to square dancing, a rousing game of touch-oh-so-gently football, and frolicking about the May Pole. Those connotations of Maryville College are dead or mortally wounded. Those who persist in perpetuating this image, or insist that we still dwell in such an antiseptic void are fools.

Maryville has changed. We have acquired many new things which we are able to use for the betterment of our education and the continuing growth of the status of Maryville. In recent years we have acquired a new dean, an All College Council, some new faculty, and maybe most important, a new student body. Those areas that have not been officially changed have been altered as integral parts of the college structure. The sports program is radiating hope, the societies are increasingly functional, the Echo is no longer limited to reiteration of campus gossip and stale announcements from the catacombs of Anderson Hall, the religious life is suffering a drought, and social activities have expanded beyond the limits of the Capitol Theatre and the college woods. This is the time of transition and newness.

We are locked in a period of transition and there is no escape from our position. We have taken a few major steps which are still making their effects felt throughout the college. The new curriculum, the ending of chapel and the institution of CIV, and the yet to be experienced All-College Council, are monumental steps for Maryville. We have repositioned ourselves to such a position that we face only superficial structures, but also involves our attitudes and our status as students, faculty, and administrators. It is change that goes far beyond us and our few years at Maryville College.

The key to our ability to make the most of this change and to create a better system for us the future, lies in being aware. We must be aware -- all of us -- of the world, of Maryville, of the past and the present, and of ourselves. We can no longer afford isolation. For all of us like it or not, our future has roots in Maryville College. Maryville's future has roots in us.

For those who would remain as a cancer, or retreat further into the seemingly comfortable wombs that they have entrapped themselves in, I propose they listen to these words of Bob Dylan:

> You walk into the room like a candle
> And then you frown
> You put your eyes in your pocket
> And your nose on the ground
> There ought to be a law against you coming around
> You should be made to wear earphones.
> 'Cause something is happening here
> And you don't know what it is > Do you, Mr. Jones?

For those who are willing to be aware, to make confrontations, and to be real, I offer the comforting words of A.C. Powell: Keep the Faith, baby.

NEW SKIRTS!

Some of you basketball fans may have noticed the new additions to the cheerleading squad. The girls are wearing a new outfit--basically orange with a garnet pleated skirt. They look good, girls!

Also, we have seen signs of a pep band at the last two games. Against Clinch Valley a group of men played, and a group of women, "The Better Half," as they call themselves, played at the Mars Hill game. Dining Hall appearances were also made by the bands. It is good we see this kind of support each week. Let's keep up the good work, gang!

Nye Pins Man

The Scots' wrestling team has had a rough start, and their recent loss to Milligan does not help morale much. Ray Nye, our star on the mat, was the only one to win in this meet. He pinned his man in 3 minutes. (Nye also pinned his opponent in the U.T. match.) Unfortunately, his teammates did not do the same, and five were pinned, four lost to points. The final score was 5-37, a crushing blow to the Scots.

We can only hope that they will do better in the future. We'll be right behind them all the way. Go get 'em, Scots!

Scots Look Good

The Scots, returning to M.C. after vacation with a 4-3 record, have played four more games, bringing their record to 5-6, with their loss to Mars Hill.

Opening the new year with a heart-breaking loss by one point to Kentucky Southern, the Scots have played hard and well. The biggest margin they have lost by is five points.

Returning after a win over Clinch Valley College, the Scots lost another close one to Mars Hill. In that game, the Scots seemed to have difficulty controlling the ball during the first half. Some coaching strategy which did not work too well added to the problems. They led by only small margins during the first half, and Mars Hill dominated the rest of the game.

Shooting for at least a 50-50 season, the Scots seem to be doing fine. They are definitely doing better than last year. Such men as Mike Barrows, Dave Maxwell, Bill Padgett and Warren Morgan are setting the pace, and the rest of the team is following. In the Mars Hill game, Morgan showed his talent for rebounds, Barrows scored two points for every minute he played, and Padgett scored well. Against Bryan College, Maxwell showed excellent leadership.

Overall, the Scots are looking good, and we can look for a good remainder of the season.

G STRINGS IN TUNE

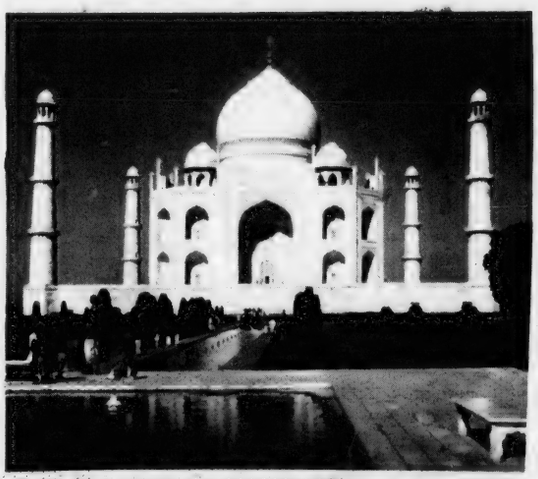
BLAIR STRING QUARTET TO APPEAR

The Blair String Quartet will present a concert in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center at 8:15 p.m., Friday, February 14.

Second in a series of three concerts offered in the department's Friends of Music program, the Blair Quartet will feature numbers by Boccherini, Bartok and Beethoven.

The School of Music of George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, established the Blair Quartet, the first faculty string quartet in its history, in 1967. Outstanding artist-teachers, the members of the quartet teach at Blair Academy of Music, as well as in the School of Music, and supervise a chamber music program at the Academy. They are Stephen Clapp and Doris Allen, violins; Lee Kull, viola; and David Vanderkooi, cello.

Stephen Clapp received his musical training at the Oberlin Conservatory, the Juilliard School of Music, and the Mozarteum Akademie fuer Musik in Salzburg, Austria. He was the winner of the Walter W. Naumburg First Chamber Music Award with the Beaux-Arts String Quartet and has performed extensively with this quartet in Europe and North America. While in New York, he was on the faculty of the Juilliard Preparatory Division for four years. Mr. Clapp has also been an active recitalist in the Lincoln Center Program of concerts for students, and has participated in several international tours, both solo and chamber music.



Doris Allen attended the Juilliard School of Music, received her B.A. degree from Sarah Lawrence College and her M.A. degree from the University of Iowa. She was granted a Fulbright Scholarship for two years and studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London. At an early age she was soloist with the New York Philharmonic in Carnegie Hall in its Young People's Concert series and has given frequent solo recitals since. Miss Allen has had extensive experience in the performance of chamber music. She was violinist of Columbia University's Group for Contemporary Music, a member of the Camerata String Quartet in New York, the Nash Chamber Ensemble in London, and most recently the Center for New Music, a Rockefeller-sponsored chamber group at the University of Iowa.

Lee Kull holds a Bachelor of Music degree in composition from the University of Texas and a Master of Music degree in viola from the University of Houston. While still an undergraduate, he taught violin, viola, theory, and conducted the orchestra as a teaching fellow in the String Project. He also performed in the University of Texas Viola Ensemble which toured the South and East giving numerous concerts, including a performance in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Kull has studied with Albert Gillis, Willian Primrose, Paul Doktor, and William Kroll.

David Vanderkooi holds both the B.M., M.M., and performer's certificate from the Eastman School of Music. A member of the Lyric String Quartet from 1956 until his departure for Nashville, he has been principal cellist with the Oklahoma City Symphony since 1955 and was a member of the faculties of the University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma City University. He has given solo recitals in Carnegie Hall (1961) and Town Hall (1964 and 1966).

HOPE FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING:

KEIM'S REFLECTIONS ON INDIA

There will be a poetry reading by Al Keim in the Lantern on Friday, February 7, at 9:15 p.m. immediately following the band concert. The reading, sponsored by the committee on Hope for International Understanding, will be poetry of India.

Al spent the summer of 1967, along with Jim Reynolds, working at a hospital in Ferozepore, India, in the Punjab. The trip was sponsored by the Hope for International Understanding Fund. From his experiences in India Al wrote the poetry with which he hopes to give his impression, that of a sojourner, of the land so strangely different from our own. Some of the poems that will be read have been published previously in the Echo.

For a personal glimpse of India, come to the Lantern at 9:15 p.m. on Friday, February 7.

Wilmore Leads Black Man Series

The Rev. Gayraud Wilmore, Executive Director of the Commission on Religion and Race of the UPUSA church, will be the kick-off speaker for a series of concentrated CIV programs dealing with the Black man's search for identity. This in depth study is scheduled to include four CIV programs during February and early March, and is structured to elicit community involvement through discussion of different facets of the black man.

Wednesday, February 12, is set for the opening program in the series, led by Dr. Wilmore. This will be followed two weeks later by a program led by Sharon Matti and Linda Laubach entitled, "The Black Man's Search for Identity." March 5 will be the date for the third in this group and will be entitled, "Negro Art and History." Jim DeLoache is scheduled to lead this CIV. The last program in this series, and a very interesting one to many, will be headed by Ralph Boston, a former gold medal Olympic long jumper, whose program will be entitled, "The Black Athlete." This last discussion in the series is scheduled for March 11.

Dr. Wilmore, who lives in Princeton, New Jersey, holds his A.B. degree from Lincoln University, his B.D. from Lincoln Seminary, and an S.T.M. degree from Temple University School of Theology. In 1967 he was awarded a D.D. degree from Tusculum College.

Now holding the office of Executive Director of the Commission on Religion and Race, Dr. Wilmore is the editor of the Westminster Press series "Christian Perspectives on Social Problems." He is also a frequent contributor of articles to secular and religious periodicals. He served pastorates in Presbyterian Churches in West Chester and York, Pennsylvania, and later was secretary of the Student Christian Movement, Middle Atlantic Region.

Human Concern Protested

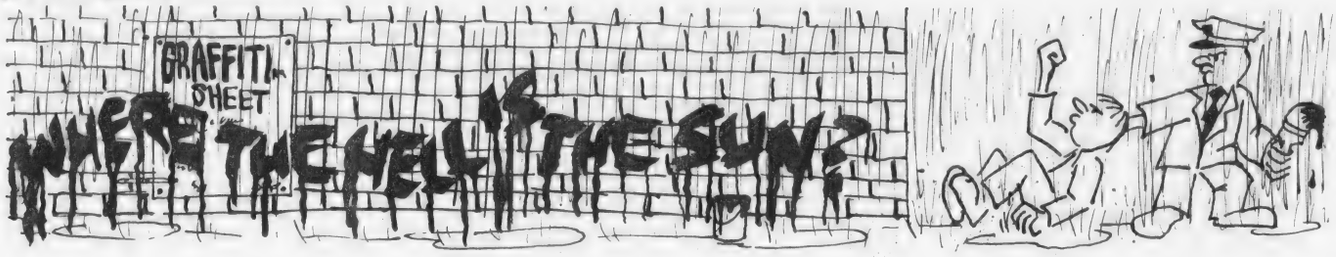
On Tuesday, January 22, several people who took part in the Inauguration Vigil on Monday, January 21, received New Testament quotations in their mailboxes. The quotes came from Matthew 6: 5-6. The messages were typed and doubled spaced. None of them were signed so the sender or senders remain unknown. The message dealt with the open display of prayer.

It has been noted by a number of people on campus that this is not unusual for the Maryville College Community to hear of condemnations through indirect sources or through anonymous notes. It has been suggested that the anonymous condemnation or threat is a Maryville tradition.

As one person put it, as a person interested in theology and Biblical studies: "The person who sent these notes must feel that he can see what is the truth according to the New Testament. Then he must of course take to heart 1 Corinthians where Paul commands that all men who can interpret and prophesies the true state must make themselves known. Therefore, the person who typed the notes must have just forgotten to sign them."

Lewis To Receive Ph.D.

Wallace L. Lewis, Assistant Professor of History at Maryville College, will receive his Ph.D. degree from the University of Iowa in February.



Mr. Lewis, who joined the Maryville College faculty in 1962 as an instructor in History, was appointed Assistant Professor in 1965. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Akron (Ohio) in 1957 and his M.A. degree from the University of Iowa in 1960. While attending the University of Iowa, he worked as a graduate assistant, teaching "Western Civilization."

Mr. Lewis will be the first member of the Maryville College faculty to receive the Ph.D. degree under the Title Three Program since its inception in 1965.

In the summer of 1967, Mr. Lewis did research in Washington, D.C. in the Naval Archives - Naval History, on captured German documents in order to complete his dissertation entitled "The Survival of the German Navy: Officers, Sailors and Politics - 1917 to 1920."

Mr. Lewis is a member of the Student Help and Scholarship Committee at the College as well as the College Stores Committee and is advisor for Pi Gamma Mu. He has also been a member of the Faculty Club Committee.

Mr. Lewis is married to the former Marilyn Massie. They have three children - Harold age 9, Andrew age 7, and Beth age 5. The family resides at 1524 Linda Lane, Maryville.

EDITORIAL

"The program for the future is either a permanent dialogue or the solemn and significant putting to death of any who have experienced dialogue." (From "Resistance, Rebellion, and Death" by Albert Camus)

I was reminded of this thought one day last week when I had a short conversation with a man and our publisher Mrs. Mangrum at the ENTERPRISE office. Mrs. Mangrum was explaining our enlightened All College Council system to the gentleman and said that students and faculty and administrators sat together and "ran" the college functions. I explained very briefly that it was rather a concept that the entire community took responsibility for insuring that the community was open because the ties of communication were at least potentially secure or were about to be. At this point the man looked at me and asked if there were going to be any riots this year. I answered that there were not.

I had time to think about the conversation then and wondered why I was able to answer the man so quickly. I feel that I was able to because I really believe that communication can really be met NOW in OUR community. Why? Really there are or have been times that I doubted it.

The All College Council has met two times now and after each meeting, like two days later, the entire minutes have been published and posted. That is, on almost every bulletin board on campus. Just check. I think also that there is no objection for anyone to sit in on a council meeting. Some of them are very interesting.

The entire community is included in the management of the college. There are places for possibly 250 people on the major committees. Those are committees like Interim, Independant Studies, Publications (gulp!), etc.

I really believe that there is a vehicle to work out all of our ideas and a place to open up all of our disagreements. Now there is no reason for anonymous condemnations and closed criticism. Let's all be open. My staff and I would like to state again that this newspaper is also open to all people of the community. I do not censor any material and the only editing that is done is for gramatical or mechanical reasons only. (Rest assured, however, that I am not the person that makes the gramatical corrections. Somebody goes over my writing too. Woe to the editor who can't spell.)

I don't know if this is a college that ever needed a riot or if this is a college that ever had one or almost had one. But I do know that the campuses that did have riots are ones that the students or others felt that they did not have any voice in how to operate what is an important part of their lives. Maybe our attempt to communicate with each other will fail. But maybe it won't. But I do know that we have to be honest and to be honest we have to be active and OPEN. If we don't maybe our college won't last much longer and so we must have ". . . a permanent dialogue or the solemn and significant putting to death of any who have experienced dialogue."

NUDE!

ROCHESTER, Mich. (CPS) -- An Oakland University senior, departing to spend the rest of his life in a Shavite Monastary in India, has left a legacy which may live to haunt administrators of this small state college for years to come.

Lee Elbinger, a world-traveler, mystic, disrupter and embellisher of the Oakland University community for the last 4 years, made his parting shot at the world of academia last month by giving a lecture on "Yeats' conception of freedom" to an audience of 40-50 people, with only his bare skin between his soul and his audience.

The lecture was given as part of a class project which included readings, music and mystic vision in an evening devoted to Yeats in Oakland University's Barn Theatre. Elbinger's unrobing climaxed the evening.

Standing nonchalantly eating an apple before the students and faculty in attendance (the production, although not well publicized, was open to the public), Elbinger discussed the hang-ups societies have had about sex and the body "ever since the propagation of the Adam and Eve myth. The body is a thing of beauty, and people should free themselves of notions which cause them to be ashamed of what they should delight in," he said.

Elbinger said the reason he understood Yeats' conception of freedom (Yeats had written little about it), was because he was W. B. Yeats reincarnated. "Since I am Yeats, and since I am standing before you naked eating an apple, you now know what Yeats' conception of freedom is. That's all."

A dish of candy in hand, Elbinger walked into the audience giving gifts and engaging in conver-

Idle Words

If you have been in the Office of the Director of Development lately, you have probably not noticed that one wall of the office is devoted to a machine that looks remarkably like a wall, but is really a computor in disguise. IBM was fortunate to be able to sell this ~~wall~~ computor to Maryville College, because during its stay at IBM it did nothing but make mistakes.

And Maryville was fortunate to be able to buy this ~~computor~~ wall from IBM, if for no other reason than it was cheap for the price. But there are other reasons. Consider the following true story:

The President of the Senior Class, knowing not what to suggest to have his class give the College for the traditional graduation present, approached the Office of the Director of Development with his problem. Speculating what followed, imagine the Director (ever conscious of the future of the College), feeding pertinant facts into the ~~wall~~ computor. For example--"We need something to further the academic atmosphere of the College; we need something to promote spirit; something that will enhance the total image of the College; and something that future classes can benefit from."

Now any of us, given such facts, would guess that the computor would suggest something like a donation to the library, or the establishing of a fund for better (i.e., student-chosen) speakers. But the ~~computor~~ wall, which, face it, has seen a lot more of what goes on than we have, immediately decided that what was needed to fill the above requirments, and a lot more besides, was a College Flagpole and Flag to plant in front of the Chapel, and perhaps a College Mace to lead any forthcoming processions.

As a rule, I do not argue with computors, but this one has left itself wide open, and as it cannot defend itself unless it is programmed to read my arguments (something which I would never do!), I feel safe to dissent.

Of what use is a flag? It does not represent the spirit of the class of '69. It does not aid in the furthering of the goals of the school. In fact, it does nothing except sit there and cost $500. With that much money, imagine what the class could donate besides a flag--new books, new speaker funds, maybe even a new computor fund.

Or maybe I am just being unreasonable and looking at only one aspect of the idea. With a Flag, we would be justified in paying someone to compose a pledge of allegience to it; from there, we could adapt a special salute to be used when passing by the Flag; our Highland Band could prepare a call to the flag; we could open a new student help job (paying, say, $500 a year) for someone to raise and lower the flag; a color gaurd could be organized to escort the Flag in parades; and special uniforms could be issued to the student body, who could then follow along behind the Flag in orderly ranks and files. What a glorious spectacle it would be for returning alumni to view!

No, I was wrong to question the computor of the Director of Development. The College needs a Flag, and it needs one now!

COMMENT

Man must function within society. That is not new, it is not earth-shaking, but it seems to be an enigma in this day and age for many men who are called upon to act and react by a system that excludes them. These men are denied the right of interact by virtue of their skin color. This inhuman practice raises a major question, how can this discrepancy be alleviated?

Some have postulated theories, others have urged active resistance, and many have decided not to do anything. The answer to this major question is vague and hidden for these people. The people who are making positive advances, however, are functioning with our society with social betterment as a goal and are getting positive results.

Some today are not functioning due to a lethargic apathy for what society has apparently done to and for them. They should take stock of their situations and compare their plight with the condition of others in the world. Their attitude of pessimism is not representative of the nation, or society, only a fragment of it. There is a cry for much needed social justice. This cry is being heeded, but Big Brother cannot do everything. The non-functioning man feels disoriented by what has not been accomplished on the domestic scene. His reaction to these stimuli is negative and he wishes others to cope with them because they are foreign to his value system. Contrary to his understanding, steps are being taken to change things and his aid is important to their success.

Many today function, but their function is not conducive to social harmony. Their reasons are varied and personally valid for each of them, but they are not contributing. Their efforts are far from benevolent and their machinations are hardly beneficial. They look to their role as that of a fuse, a spark used to start a magnificent chain reaction that will supposedly result in an harmonious, glorious utopia for all to live in. In observing harvests of their designs, it is easy to see that they are more of a deterrant than a catalyst to social change. Some defend these activists by saying that what they desire is social betterment and sane political policy at home and abroad, but it goes deeper than that.

Those today who are functioning within the limits set by society are making positive strides toward social betterment, toward financial security for all, and toward a better society. They are doing so by working to change man's mind and this is slowly being accomplished. The rub to many in this age of speed is that the accomplishment is not fast enough. Remember that man cannot be coerced, but must be convinced; man cannot be programmed, but must be persuaded. The desire of the functioning man is not to say "it was my doing," but to be able to say "I was a part of what was done by all."

Focus: CHATTANOOGA

The Maryville College Communications Service, producers of "Focus: Maryville College" announced today that WDEF-TV, Channel 12, Chattanooga, Tenn., will begin a thirteen week series of this program beginning Monday, January 27, and continuing through Sunday, March 2. The program will be aired Monday through Friday at 6:30 to 7:00 a.m. and on Sunday at 8:30 to 9:00 a.m.

RICHMOND, VA. (Special) -- Brian Childs of Maryville College has been named to the College Board of the next volume of the "Going-to-College Handbook," annually published here for students in and looking forward to college.

Nominated by college or national youth officials, members of the College Board serve as advisors to the editors in planning and developing the book.

At the present time the College Board is being polled to discover attitudes on a number of lively campus problems.

Scheduled for publication next August in time for home town going-to-college functions, the Handbook will be used during the remainder of the year by students looking forward to college.

Swartzy Reviewed

Ray Swartzback---Captain Cool ---Preacher --- Cheerleader--- Prophet---a man who had quite diverse effects on may people.

CIV, January 17---How can one tactfully (he probably can't) question the use of hymns in these things? Like very few people pay attention---much less sing --- to them IN CHURCH SERVICES! A bunch of kids who have no plan of gathering to worship are going or make even less (!) use of them, right? Enough said.

Getting back to Swartzback, it seemed that nearly everybody listened to him . . . but I got the impression that few supported him, and that they reacted against what he said because they reacted against him. Me too. But I thought, "Why not give the guy a second chance, since I'm free Saturday night, and since I have to write an article about him and don't understand him." So I cut my way through the fog to the House in the Woods, and as happened last year with the chaplain from USC, a discussion was much more impressive than a speech. We talked about his particular and very unique church situation, which is not in our Judeo-Christian educated concept of the word church. Oh yes, the question was brought up several times as to what we could and maybe should do with a Maryville College "church." I won't give any details here, but ask someone who went. Quite a few did go. Dr. Swartzback's main challenge to us was to "structure a confrontation" with the larger community of Maryville. It seems that we should use any means possible to force a head-on meeting with those whom we live with geographically.

About the church in general, Dr. Swartzback that in its present over-all state, it is "in a peck of trouble." We agree, of course, but this statement along with most of the other content gave the impression that he was trying very hard to say things that would sound good to us. Now the question is, does he deserve credit for trying, or is it better to say your bit in sweet oblivion? Dr. Swartzback expressed a magnificent optimism about the future of the church and the potential it occasionally demonstrates, mostly among young people; we learned of some of these Saturday night. (But the best part was when some of us reacted -- yes, it really happened on this campus -- to him and to each other. Maybe this is why the discussions are so much better.) Why can't I stay on the subject?

Throughout the CIV and the Saturday discussion (What happened Friday at the lantern?), I missed one idea that is usually prominent when there is talk of working with and for other people. I am referring to the importance of love, the accepted prerequisite in all successful relationships, Christian or no. Then Sunday I think I found the answer. The sermon "The Importance of Self," was not quite what was expected. Dr. Swartzback claimed that one must love and respect himself BEFORE he can love his neighbor and God. Swartzback really loves himself -- that's why he is so brash, so excited, so exciting! And that's why he didn't dwell on the use of love in working with others -- because it comes so naturally to him! Maybe his self-love is extreme, but so are most of his traits. Progress is made through extremism. Ask Swartzy. In a town smaller and more conservative (?) than Maryville, he has a "church" that is three-fifths townies---including many blacks (I said I wasn't going to tell you). Others react to extremism. Ask the students on the Session in Swartzy's church. Ask the activists at Wooster. Ask the listeners at Maryville.

Interim Procedure for 1969

Interim 1969 offers a unique opportunity to next years upperclassmen. Sophomores, Juniors, and Seniors may now formulate off-campus Interim programs to be carried out on an individual basis.

The off-campus program is structured to give the individual student freedom in planning and conducting a personal learning experience. All projects must be proposed in conjunction with the student's major advisor and deal with an off-campus agency. Contact with the agency is to be made by a faculty member and the agency is to be responsible for maintaining a watchful eye on the student and his project. A written record is expected of students undertaking an individual venture and the student is expected to return to campus following the completion of his work to share his findings with others.

Juniors and Seniors are permitted to engage in programs that take them away from the campus as June Rostan and Dinni Drake did this past Interim. Their experience was in the ghettos of New York and their impressions were shared with the readers of this paper in the last issue. Sophomores are limited to arranging programs that allow them to reside on-campus. This type of a project was tackled by Bev Yates who worked in the Home Avenue area in conjunction with New Providence Presbyterian Church. Her project was designed to illuminate the role of the church in poverty areas.

The cry for more freedom has been met by the Interim Committee and all that remains now is for the interested student to begin planning his project. Proposed programs must be submitted to major advisors and in turn registered with the Interim Committee by May 1, 1969 in order to be considered for next year's Interim.

sation. The atmosphere was friendly and most people in attendance were charmed. Bottles of wine appeared (alcohol is illegal on state property) as Yeats strolled among the crowd, pausing to sit and enjoy the wine and conversation.

Acting on an anonymous tip, the press had a field day. Administrators went wild. In an official response to the lecture, University Provost Donald O'Dowd stated: "Although it is consistent with academic practice to encourage creativity and freedom of expression, it is not the desire of the University to deliberately affront the moral sensibilities of students, faculty members, or the public." He added that the matter was being referred to the University Senate "to determine what action should be taken."

Unfortunately for the university, almost any action would be too late. Two days later Elbinger was recommended for graduation Cum laude; buy that time he had taken a one-way flight to India after giving away all his worldly possessions.

WINTER CONCERT

On Friday, February 7, at 8:15 in the college chapel, the Maryville College Concert Band will present the first in its series of formal concerts to be presented this year. Since football season the band has retired indoors and prepared music, some of which will be presented on the program, and some of which will be used as part of the 1969 tour repertoire.

Selections on the program will range from Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso" to Weinberger's "Polka and Fugue from 'Schwanda'." Featured on the program will be brass choirs from Maryville and Everett High Schools, combining with the band on Kalinnikov's "Symphony No. 3", and the trumpeters from all three schools playing the Norwegian march "Valdres." Admission to students and faculty of the college is their ID: All others is $1.00.

HONAKER HONORED

On February 13, 1969, the Tennessee Sports Hall of Fame will honor leading sports figures from the state, among them Maryville coach for 38 years, the late Lombe Honaker.

Honaker compiled an impressive record while at Maryville, winning a total of 924 football, basketball, and baseball games, losing only 604, with 31 ties. In addition to his record, his list of national honors is noteworthy. Among them is the "Citation of Honor" from the Football writers Association, and a plaque for 25 years of college coaching from the Baseball Association.

One of his more unique honors came in 1951, when over 200 of his former players gave him a banquet, at which time they presented him with a new car, and a check for $1,000--after he had just lost the season, nine straight games, for the first time in his history.

Others to be honored at the Nashville convention are: the late Larry Gilbert, Dale Alexander, Bob Woodruff, Scrappy Moore, the late Bob Wilson, Dr. C.C. (Sonny) Humphreys, Wallace Wade, and Bill Terry.

The widow of the late coach, Mrs. Lombe Honaker, and son, Scott Honaker, Dean at East Tennessee State University, will be special guests at the Hall of Fame banquet.

WASPS STING SCOTS

The Scots, matched against Emory & Henry, were unable to come out on top, and the Wasps won the game 109-83. Bill Padgett, scoring heavily from the floor, and hitting six-for-six from the free throw line, racked up a strong 30 points, and center Warren Morgan added his 17 points to the scoreboard. Morgan, incidentally, was up against E&H center Sonny Wade, who many of us saw in action against the Scots' football squad. Wade scored 14 points for the Wasps in Saturday night's game.

The Emory & Henry game brings the Scots' season record to 7-7, exactly the minimum percentage that the team hoped for this year. The record has waivered on the 50% mark throughout this season. Against Johnson Bible College the Scots won, 91-63, with Bill Padgett and Mike Barrows leading the scoring. Against Tusculum, the Scots won, 93-70, and in that game Barrows, Morgan and Lynn Raby hit double figures on the boards.

Against Emory & Henry, the Scots' J.V. team came up with a win, 98-86. Four men were in the double figures--Wright (28), McKinstry (18), Scarlett (15), and Weston (15) -- which accounted for almost 80% of the score. These men are important to watch in future varsity play. Scarlett and Wright play forward positions, while McKinstry plays guard and Weston, center.

With 12 games remaining, the Scots stand an excellent chance of ending their season with a great record. Considering last year's wind-up, the chances are better than excellent.

Go get 'em, Scots!

Grapplers Come Through

The Scot grapplers checked their loss to the University of Georgia Friday evening with a victory over Southwestern Louisiana University Saturday night, with a final score of 23-21.

Rye Nye, S.E.C. champ, proved his ability once more as he won by pins both nights. Action continued Saturday as the Scots achieved three consecutive pins. It began with John Klein's pinning his opponent in the second period in the 152 lb. weight class. Following, in the 160 lb. class, was Paul Grice's pin in the third period. To finish the three-pin streak, in a superbly executed bit of wrestling, was captain Harry Burnett, 167 lbs., with a pin in only 1 minute, 12 seconds. The final and winning score was Bob Mitchell's in the 177 lb. class, whose win clinched the match with a team score of 23 points. The U.S.L. team could only come up with 21 points.

In an overall look, our wrestlers now have the taste of victory and through the leadership within the team, the experience of the coaches and letterman, and the ever-present will to win, they are psyched and ready to go.

The Scots will be away for the remainder of their season, winding it up in the tournament at Auburn. Good luck, men!

GO, GIRLS!

Every Monday and Thursday afternoon the intramural gym is the site for the women's basketball competition. Sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association, and under the direction of Physical Education instructor Mrs. Carl Davis, six teams are involved in the weekly games.

The women play according to special rules set down for them. They play on half a court and for four six-minute quarters. The scoring is the same as in regular ball. Officiating is done mostly by physical education majors, but other qualified girls fill the position.

Scoring is low in these games, but action is far from lacking. There have been ten games so far, played by two Theta Epsilon teams, two Chi Beta teams, an independent team, and a team of town students.

Plans are being made by the Women's Athletic Association for a badminton tournament and a swimming meet, to be held some time this term. So, sports fans, if you're are looking for where the action is, don't neglect the female side of the sports world. Drop in some time and watch the girls in action. You might learn something you did not know about the "weaker" sex!

MUSICAL - DRAMA "THE CONSUL"

The story takes place in a small satellite country which is under a larger power. The scenes alternate between the shabby flat of a workman and the reception room of the consulate, obviously that of a free country. The main characters of the production (John and Magda Sorel) are shown to be fighting against unnamed sinister forces. The cast, listed below, is composed of experienced and well-known members of the community, College faculty and students.

Magda Sorel - Karen Roewade, Maryville College's Affiliate Artist.

Concertmaster -- Clinton I. Brown, Instructor in Music.

Accompanist - Sallie W. Schoen, Assistant Professor of Music.

The first opera-workshop presentation to appear on the Maryville College campus was in 1949, two years after the Elizabeth R. Voorhees Chapel was destroyed by fire. The production "Hansel and Gretal" was given in the Alumni Gymnasium at that time.

KEIM REVIEWED

Making no pretension to any seat of poetic criticism, I will not attempt any serious review of Al Keim's India Poetry Reading in the Lantern. Rather I will try to verbalize a few thoughts about that reading. Listening to Al was similar to listening to the Great Society, and I refer not to LBJ but to an almost-forgotten rock group, or to a jam session.

It was a fascinating amalgam of mediocrity and brilliance. There were the phrases that hung in the mind, images that suddenly clarified everything. There was the mood that suddenly and completely overwhelmed in poems like Dust Storm. There were the places where Al lost his audience, where it was suddenly too much India, too much Al, and too little for anyone else to grab on to. Lines grated now and then, images failed, poems dragged a bit, and we were left gaping at India on a travelogue. But it didn't happen often, and the beauty did. There were enough times that

OUTSTANDING SENIOR IN CHEMISTRY

Terry Dorsett, a senior from Ashland, Ky., has been chosen as the outstanding senior chemistry major at Maryville College. This honor was announced recently by the East Tennessee Section of the American Chemical Society.

Outstanding seniors from area colleges are honored each year by this group. As recognition of their achievements, they are awarded a free one year's membership in the American Chemical Society plus a one year's subscription to the Chemistry Journal of their choice.

Mr. Dorsett is a member of Circle K, and American Chemical Society - Student Affiliate. During his sophomore year, he was Secretary-Treasurer of Men's Student Government and a member of the Student Council during his junior year. He was also a member of the Student Council Academic Committee during his sophomore and junior years.

Terry was the recipient of the Kind Memorial Scholarship dur-

PRESIDENT OF PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE UNION . . DR. COPELAND

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, President of Maryville College, was elected President of the Presbyterian College Union at its annual meeting in Pittsburgh, January 13, having served as Vice President in 1968, and as a member of its executive board, the Nexus Committee, for a number of years.

The Presbyterian College Union is composed of 46 colleges related to the United Presbyterian Church through its Board of Christian Education. All are institutions fully credited by their regional and state agencies, and this is one of the requirements for membership. They have a total enrollment of more than 58,000 students, including nearly 800 foreign students and more than 5,000 graduate and special students. Faculty members number more than 4,000.

Tennessee Williams' "Summer and Smoke" at Maryville

"Summer and Smoke," which will be presented by the Maryville College Playhouse on March 7-8 in the College Theatre, at 8:15 p.m., is said to be one of the most haunting dramas to come from the pen of America's foremost dramatist Tennessee Williams.

Though this drama is complete in itself, it might be said to form the third item in a notable triangle by Tennessee Williams, of which his previous successes, the Pulitzer Prize-winning "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "The Glass Menagerie" are its other components.

Although the heroines of the three plays are different, they are alike in that they are pictured in each case as a woman struggling to overcome a desperate predicament.

Alma Winemiller, in "Summer and Smoke," like Blanche du Bois in "A Streetcar Named Desire," is a Southern spinster, younger than Blanche, but no less frustrated. Alma is also as painfully lonely as the pathetic Laura who collected glass animals in "The Glass Menagerie."

The play pictures Alma Winemiller to be a vocal-teaching daughter of an Episcopal minister and a half-demented mother, living in a small Mississippi town, and growing up into a painfully self-conscious young woman, excessively proper, and prematurely spinsterish.

The play sets out to show how from childhood Alma has loved the boy next door who continually taunts her about her speech and her prissy ways.

The boy has gone off to medical school and upon returning Alma again makes a bid for his affections but is doomed to failure, for apparently the boy is not through sewing his "wild oats." The play takes you through a brooding summer and winter in this little Mississippi town with Alma muddling through awkward coquetry and needless bloodshed, which ultimately brings about her great tragedy as this causes her childhool sweetheart to give up his "wild oats" and settle down to adult responsibilities and become engaged to a girl who once had been a vocal-pupil of Alma's.

According to one New York drama critic, writing of "Summer and Smoke" upon its Broadway opening, "Tennessee Williams has never been more successful in creating a mood than in this play. He has cast over his story of a pathetic young woman's bid for happiness," according to this critic, "so rich an atmosphere of life in a small Southern town that audiences feel as if they had been living in Tennessee Williams' Glorious Hill, Mississippi, by the end of the evening."

Summer Vacation in Hawaii?

Dr. Robert E. Cralle, Executive Director, The Adler University Study Tour to Hawaii, has announced that reservations are now being accepted for the 1969 Study Tour to the University of Hawaii Summer Session.

Special rates for students and teachers for the 43-day program to Honolulu begin from as low as $499. Prices include round-trip Pan American jet air travel from the West Coast, accommodations in campus dormitories, deluxe Waikiki Beach hotels or apartments, plus a full schedule of 22 social and sightseeing activities. Exciting Island trips, tours, cruises, dinner dances and beach parties make up the extracurricular program available to members.

Both students and teachers attending the 6-week University of Hawaii Summer Session can earn extra credits from a distinguished faculty who offer an unusual range of subjects. Credits earned by students are normally transferable to most Mainland colleges. Teachers, in addition to gaining progress toward salary increases and sabbatical leave, may usually qualify for tax deductions on the Program when their activity is related to professional advancement.

Dates for jet air departure to Hawaii are June 14 with return by July 26, 1969. Ad added feature of this year's program is the offering of an extension trip from Honolulu to the Orient or Tahiti after completion of Summer Session.

A 1969 Application Form and 16-page color Bulletin are available by writing to Dr. Robert E. Cralle, Executive Director,

EDITORIAL

It has been brought to my attention that there is a definite need for a few people who are spectators at our games to stop using vulgar language in place of cheers. This applies mainly to some of the terms used to express disagreement with the referees. It is now always the case, but the game against Milligan proved to be the worst display of poor sportsmanship I have seen at this college. It is true that the referees left something to be desired. The record shows Milligan with 35 for 41 attempts at the foul line, while Maryville went with 8 for 14. The referees seemed a little inconsistant in calling fouls for one team and not for the other. The Scots outscored Milligan in field goals by 20 points, yet lost the game by seven. It does not seem fair, but there is nothing that can be done after the referee has called a foul. Booing and swearing will not change the call, and enough name-calling is bound to bring on a technical foul against the team.

Ever since I began writing for the Echo I have stressed by desire to see all of you out there cheering for the team, no matter what happens. I still stress this desire. But I also stress that if you can only come up with four-lettered cheers, we DON'T need you out there cheering, for you are only hurting the team.

There are ways of displaying your dismay with the refs, and there are ways of investigating his authority and eligibility, but the use of vulgarity is not one of those ways. So please, keep coming to the games, but think twice before you open your mouth. Thank you.

U. N. M. HAS IT . . . LET M. C. BE NEXT!

Albuquerque, N.M.-(I.P.)-Working with faculty, after a year and a half of planning, student goverment representatives at the University of New Mexico have drafted a satisfactory faculty evaluation program.

The new project was given a scientific emphasis with the help of Prof. Ralph Norman of the psychology department, and administrative consultation through Dr. Harold Lavender, vice-president for student affairs.

There are several purposes for the evaluation. It is hoped that a bank of information will be formed which can be used as one factor in determining faculty tenure, salary, and promotion. Another idea behind the plan is to provide feedback for the professor which will help him in improving teaching methods.

Louis Leurig, director of the Data Processing Center, estimates the cost of the program at between $6500 and $7700 a year for his department. This figure could rise or fall as new problems arise or more workable methods are devised. All information obtained will go into a file cabinet at the center. Classroom procedures are featured in the plan. Techniques, pace, goals, and student participation are some factors to be judged.

REPORT

OUR MAN IN BERLIN

Jan. 31 -- Daily events at West Berlin's sprawling Freie Universitat appear routine as students sip beer and eat Eintopf in the Mensa, sidewalk rhetoric fills the air, and thousands of mimeorographed leaflets are distributed. Even the patrolling policemen are by now a familiar surrounding. Today, however, there is a permeating urgency-- classrooms are barracaded with furniture, graffiti blares from every wall and window, and the police have increased ten-fold, now camping around their water cannon and makeshift kitchens. Since Jan. 15th most University faculties have been on strike. As the school teeters on the brink of closure, the Berliners again find themselves at the forefront of world-wide protest, simultaneously confronting their unique local dissatisfactions with the caste system labeled education.

The situation here revolves basically around three themes: (1) traditional inequalities inherent in German education allowing no dialogue or share of power between students, faculty and administration, specifically emphasizing unnecessary bureaucracy found in Zwischenprupungen (intermediary exams) and various departmental oddities; (2) the refusal of Dr. Harndt, the F.U. Rektor, to permit the institution to take firm stands in areas of social concern, and his imposing of Hausordnung or rules designed to squelch protest, keeping the "house in order"; (3) the city government of Klaus Schutz and his SPD party which claims the right to influence administration of the F.U., and supports a questionable judicial system. Technically, the city is still under a state of military occupation with the allies (usually the U.S.) having final authority, and this latter situation further underlines the screwed Berlin political scene, already in turmoil over conflicting interests of the SPD, CDV, and NPD (so-called "Neo-Nazi") parties.

Events become more complicated since German students, unlike their French counterparts, don't enjoy solid support from the working class, except perhaps in the matter of the judicial system. The Berlin population, as a whole, is terribly conservative, an understandable trait considering the Nazi period, the annihilation of Germany, and the booming recovery. The students, however, weren't around during these times and can more easily realize the Old Germany has been destroyed by the ideologies and powers of East and West. It makes more sense to them to stop seeking the isolation and long term destruction of the socialist world, and accept it as a responsible partner in the hope that such recognition would make something better of both systems. Vaguely, there now exist two contrasting poles of opinion, with the younger generation maintaining the end of World War II absolutely crushed the Old Europe and swiftly inaugurated another, and their elders refusing to concede that in some ways it may have. In any event, from the student perspective, the U.S. and Russia don't seem overly anxious to relinquish their present powerful strangle-holds. As Soviet forces guard Wenceslas Square in Prague, Dick Nixon presides over an armed forces prayer breakfast invoking God's blessing on U.S. efforts to slay another commie in the cause of world freedom. Such an intertwining kaleidoscope of events makes it impossible to categorize student reform efforts in the traditional cause and effect manner. Hence, solutions are not so easily effected, especially in light of Berlin's strategic importance in the East-West conflict.

East Berlin is a prime example of the asinities inherent in this East-West battle to the death. She is not the ludicrous society pictured by western propaganda--people aren't starving on their doorsteps and neither are platoons of peasant women conducting army maneuvers through the streets. Last week, as I led three U.S. students studying in Bonn through the eastern sector, I was continually frustrated by their first efforts to contrast the cruel, sly easterner with the brave westerner in his fight for freedom (perhaps because I remember my own vain attempts to do the same.) Point of consideration: who is maintaining an armed garrison in the middle of whose country, and for what reasons? I'm certainly not condoning the East German regime (it's no bed of roses), but neither will I support highly questionable "free" world policies in the West--six of one, half-dozen of the other. An interesting fact is that the economy of East Berlin will soon outdistance that of the West-- a situation which hits most capitalists where it hurts.

Unfortunately, though largely united on these theoretical issues, F.U. students are sadly divided on strategical application. Efforts range from conversing with the man in the street to smashing windows and looting business districts. This latter faction is a decided minority, but it sometimes leads to police action against students in general, and those students being clubbed over the head aren't apt to consider the policeman's side of the story at that particular instant. The question, when does idealism turn to personal selfishness, is an ever present one.

Following a recent Vollversammlung in the main auditorium of the F.U., a group of students entered the Rektor's office, destroying furnishings and burning files. After a confrontation with police, those not hustled off in wagons returned to the auditorium, and then, quite sincerely, pondered the question: "Why did we do that?" Any thinking, concerned person will do well to confront himself with the same question. There are no black and whites, and neither brute force nor stacks of welfare and education legislation produce that nebulously longed-for social change. This is an age of revolution and emotion, as Hannah Arendt adeptly outlines (("On Revolution"), and he who clings to former strategies and world orders is lost.

This report, of necessity, is horribly sketchy and lacking much information. For those who desire background material on the Berlin scene, beginning with the Rudi Dutschke era, I recommend two articles by Keith Chamberlain, my former adviser here, found in the November '67 issue of "Motive," and one of the January '68 issues of "Commonweal." "A New Europe?" edited by Stephen Graubard from the Daedalus Library provides a general view of the European situation. Also, these observations have been just that--personal impressions. Although living, studying and communicating daily with Germans, I'm still a "foreigner" in the sense I can never really experience past events (the war years, construction of the wall, etc.) which inject nuances into the present. Even the influences I can easily perceive--i.e. the horrendous impact of American big business--are difficult to explain to one not experiencing them.

As students all over the continent struggle under the merciless bureaucracy and inhumanness that smother them, the U.S. Army tears up acres of southern German countryside in war games near the Czech border, while Russians prepare similar strategy, and Franco and deGaullist troops move to liquidate certain University elements. Granted student tactics aren't always in the best "taste," but could you sit back and watch?

Outdoor Education

An Elementary Education major's senior comprehensive project has been found useful to citizens studying environmental education. It has proven so helpful that the entire work consisting of 81 pages has been duplicated for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park Library as well as for their regional library. Mr. Lloyd Foster, Environmental Education Specialist at the park, in a letter to Dr. Margaret Sherer of the Education Department wrote: Thank you for the loan of Miss Jenny Roseborough's paper, OUTDOOR EDUCATION. My collegues and I have found it a most useful compendium of up to date thought on the subject.

We have made copies for the park library and for our Regional Office. We are, of course, pleased to have Miss Roseborough's work available for reference; and we hope that his represents only the beginning of her interest in this exciting field.

Judy Young

JUNIOR RECITAL

Miss Judith Young will present her Junior Recital, assisted by the Maryville College Woodwind Quintet, on Thursday, February 27, at 7:00 P.M. in the Fine Arts Center music hall. Miss Young is a junior music major from Lower Burrell, Pennsylvania, studying piano under Mr. Robert Bonham. Her program will consist of works by Scarlatti, Beethoven, and Debussy.

Members of the Woodwind Quintet are Sandra Hynd, bassoon, Diane McKenzie, french horn, Carl Peters, oboe, Ann Prewitt, flute, and Paul Reiter, clarinet. For their premier performance, the Quintet will play works by Haydn, Colomer, and Ravel.

CHOIR FLIES NORTH FOR SPRING BREAK

The Maryville College Choir's annual spring tour itinerary has been established, and plans are being completed for 43 vocally talented students to take a chartered bus trip to some major cities of the northern United States and Canada from Friday, March 14, to Tuesday, March 25.

The Choir, under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter since 1947, will sing before concert audiences and church congregations in Lexington and Lebanon, Kentucky; Detroit, Michigan and Chatham, Ontario, Canada; Orchard Park and Albion, New York; Pittsburgh, Houston, and Kittanning, Pennsylvania; Youngstown, Girard, and Cleveland Heights, Ohio; and Charleston, West Virginia.

This will be the Choir's first appearance in cities in western New York State. The Choir has not appeared in Canada since 1954.

A pre-tour Choir Concert will be given in the Second Presbyterian Church, Knoxville, Tennessee, on Sunday evening, March 9, at 7:30 p.m.

The Home Concert has been scheduled in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville College campus Sunday evening, March 30, at 8:30 p.m.

A year ago the Choir toured the major cities through Florida and Georgia. In 1967 the itinerary took it through the northeastern states climaxed by a Carnegie Hall concert in New York City. Wherever the Maryville College Choir goes it has a reputation for winning the high praise of critics. Most concerts are in churches, but a number are in schools and auditoriums.

The choir has traveled over 40,000 miles in the past 20 years to appear in well over 100 cities east of the Mississippi River.

Members of the Choir are chosen by rigid auditions each fall as the College year begins, and in late winter the director chooses the touring group from the more than 60 voices in the full Choir. Choir members use the College spring vacation period to make the tour.

Next Year's CIV Being Planned

A sub-committee has been working on the agenda for next year's Community Issues and Values (1969-70). The outline for the issues of the CIVs has been set around the topics of the Sesquicentennial Meetings under the theme "Man's Search for Patterns." A steering committee under each issue will coordinate the CIV planning committees. Chairman of these steering committees are as follows: Mr. Puroff ("Education"), Dr. Wiley ("Urban Living"), Dr. Collins ("World Order"), Dr. Cambell ("Worship"), Dr. Shields ("Man and His Environment"), Dr. Bloy ("Fine Arts"), Dr. Young ("Patterns of the Future"). If you have particular interest in one of these issues please contact the respective chairmen before the end of February. Any constructive criticism of past CIVs (presentation, content, variety, etc.) or ideas for next years programs are welcome. Please contact David Rugh, Box 2755.

Remember Biafra?

Two unintelligent Christian students carrying on a conversation in the student center:

Are you kidding me? You mean you're going to miss three meals for some people ya don't even know?

Why not? It's for a good cause and the cause is all that matters; besides, I'm a Christian and I don't mind giving to help other people.

Are these over-seas-people Christians?

Ah, come on...that doesn't matter. All that matters is the fact that they are people-and starving, and I mean really starving?

Let's reverse the situation: How would you feel if your immediate family was really starving; who would you expect help from, if you had relatives who were in debt to you, but sent foreign aid over-seas?

My relatives of course. But let's be real...

I am being real. We Americans claim to be Christians out to help conquer the evils of the world, like poverty and crime, while poverty in the U.S. is one thing that's causing crime. We say that we have the money, so why not help the Christians in America first and then worry about the others?

I'm a Christian and I see America as a very rich and young country. Take note, I said "young country". In other words, we didn't get rich over centuries of hard labor; God made us rich - free of charge. For some reason God didn't create this world equal; He put more gold, silver, precious stones, and rich soil in America than any other place on this earth. Maybe he's testing man in a game with Satan-if God wins then the whole world will be equally rich, in the end. I hope you understand what I'm saying. I bel . . .

But what about America "now"? We can't wait until all of the riches are equally distributed. The poor people in America are rioting "now"!

Though this country will suffer severely for all of its sins, we must wait! But don't worry, God will not let his world be destroyed until he has won his game-until we are all equal.

But if Americans do not understand or accept this, then we'll destroy each other, and Satan will win.

You got to have faith in God's strength. After all, he threw Satan in hell and not vice versa.

I'm wondering, how did we get from a small subject like missing three sad meals at MC to the economy of the U.S. and God?

You brought it up, remember; And don't call the meals sad when many can't even afford that. Have you learned anything from the conversation?

Yeah.

What?

I'm used to it by now.

Boy! You naturalized Americans will never be real Christians.

SPORTS

Basketball Team Drops Three

With a record of 8-8 the Scots went into a three game series, dropping all of them to their opponents. On the 3rd Milligan won, on the 6th Clinch Valley defeated the Scots in an away game, and Centre College beat the Scots here on the 8th. The three game losing streak set the Scots back to an 8-11 record, dampening hopes for an even record for the season. Only seven games remain, and they promise to be rough.

Clinch Valley came from behind to win in a close game in Wise, Virginia, with a score of 87-82. The Scots were leading by two at the half, but were unable to maintain the lead, despite Padgett's 27 points holding them together. Again, Mike Barrows and Warren Morgan followed in scoring with 19 and 15 points apiece.

Centre College romped to a 92-77 victory on the Scot's home court. The score was tied at the half with 31 points for each team, but the Centre team outscored the Scots 61-46 in the second half. Padgett repeated his performance of two nights before with 27 points, Morgan totalled 14, and Dave Maxwell got 10.

The Scot's season is not over yet, so we can look forward to the Scot's redoubled efforts to maintain and even record and achieve the minimum goal set for them at the beginning of the season. Meanwhile, as the basketball season draws to a close, the track and baseball teams are organizing and warming up for practice which will get into full swing soon.

Let's see a lot of support for the Scots as the basketball season ends--stay with them 'til the finish!

Grapplers Out Classed

Our Scot wrestlers travelled on the road this past weekend and met two very experienced teams. Friday they confronted Auburn University and Saturday the University of Alabama. Unfortunately we were defeated in both encounters.

We were handed an agonizing defeat against Alabama with a final score of 31-0. However, against Auburn we were able to score 3 points with a win by Harry Burnette in the 160lb weight class. This made the final score 29-3.

Just as in all sports, a team has its off season, and this year seems to be Maryville's. However, we do have four matches and a tournament remaining, so hope is not lost. Our grapplers have not given up, so let's keep up the spirit and support our team! Pin 'em Scots!!

FACULTY RECITAL

DR. BLOY

A Faculty Recital of the organ music of Bach and two 20th Century composers, Schroeder and Micheelsen, will be played by James Bloy on Friday, February 28, at 8:15 p.m.

Using the Holtkamp organ in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center, Dr. Bloy will play four chorale preludes from the Leipzig manuscript of J. S. Bach, and Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C major.

Concluding the program will be Hermann Schroeder's Marian Antiphons and H. F. Micheelsen's Organ Concerto on the song "Es sungen drei Engel."

James Bloy is Associate Professor of Music at Maryville College, Organist-Choirmaster at Church of the Ascension, Knoxville, and Dean of the Knoxville American Guild of Organists.

YOUTH FARES IN TROUBLE

Washington, DC. - The United States National Student Association (NSA) will fight the recommendations of a Civil Aeronautics Board (CAB) examiner calling for the abolition of youth fares as "unjustly discriminatory," and has retained legal counsel to prepare briefs and oral arguments for presentation before the CAB. The announcement of NSA's action came from Services Division director Alan C. Handell, who noted that at present the Association is the only group representing student users of the airline youth fare which will make arguments before the Federal board.

Abolition of youth fares is being sought by a number of bus companies. NSA will argue that in view of the educational, social, economic, and cultural benefits afforded by the youth fares and young adult fares, the fares should not be cancelled.

Written arguments will be presented to the CAB by February 26. Oral arguments will be made at a later date. NSA is being represented by the Washington law firm of Koteen and Burt, who are experts in air fare matters.

Handell urged that students interested in retaining youth fares contact him at USNSA, 2115 S. Street, N.W., Washington, D. C. 20008.

NSA is a national confederation of nearly 400 student government associations. It is the oldest national grouping of American student governments, founded in 1947.

HIGHLAND ECHO

In line with the communication emphasis in the college community, the Echo now has a new format. Our old ten-day deadline has been cut in half; this means that we can now cover current events more thoroughly and efficiently--but only with your help.

We need people willing to write feature articles, which can encompass anything from a report on an overnight hike to an interview to poetry. We also need reporters to cover specific areas of campus life, such as recitals at the FAC or activities of the societies.

Whatever your interests, chances are someone else on campus would like to read about them. This is our opportunity to make our paper a vital means of campus communication. It can succeed only if we all are willing to contribute a little bit of time.

If you would like to write or have information you want incorporated into an article, please contact a staff member.

EDITORIAL

The Highland Echo now enters into a new developmental stage with its new physical format. This is an experiment in which we are giving up some of our newspaper look for a bigger chance to have the true newspaper quality: current and vital news. As explained in the paper our deadline is now Monday and the paper will be distributed on the following Thursday. It will be up to the community as a whole to see that their bit of news and announcements will be printed by contacting a member of our staff. All news articles and letters to the editor should be typed and double spaced. No anonymous articles will be considered for publication.

The entire community is at a critical stage in its 150 years of life. Small colleges are being pushed out by the state universities and therefore for one to survive the concept of mass education it has to be top notch and unique. Maryville has that chance with its new and progressive mode of operation. We are behind in curriculum already, but it is not too late to get back to a new study and catch up. Maybe that should be done every ten years or less anyway. But as far as government is concerned we have potential. The All-College Council as we have seen has not solved all of our problems overnight. It has potential. Nobody wants it to turn into another mockery like the old Executive Council was, so bug the chairman and co-chairman and all of the members. It could be quite easy for the members of the council to meet every week for an hour and a half and just talk; it has that potential too. The community has to pressure the members. Remember, they depend upon you for your vote. Let them know that too.

The people of this community have certain rights coming to them yet. And the best salesmen for our college are the real people themselves and no Madison Avenue sales pitch. So if the people here are happy in their rights they will sell the college. But to have rights one must be free. I disagree with those that say you must fight for your rights. That is the wrong approach. I think that you must work constantly for your freedom. When you are free you have all the rights. So get pissed off if that is what it takes but do something and see that the All-College Council doesn't turn into a boring committee and then a forgotten committee. Your degree may depend on it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, Miss Penny Proffitt, and Members of the All-College Council:

Since the All-College Council is barely a month old, I am sure that the members are still experimenting with various procedures and practices. I am also sure that you receive numerous complaints and suggestions of what you are doing wrong and how you could correct it. I would like to offer this suggestion with the hope that it be studied seriously.

I am concerned about the manner of selection of the members for the three coordinating committees under the Council. At the CIV in which the Council was discussed and again just after the election in January the members of the college community were urged to take an active interest in these committees. If we wanted to serve on them we were to contact one of the co-Chairmen or a class representative and we would be considered.

It appears, however, that it made little difference whether or not we expressed an interest, since names which were seemingly suggested regardless of any expressed interest were pulled out of the air at a meeting of the All-College Council and appointed to the committees. If these people accepted, fine. If not they were replaced with others from the original arbitrary list.

While I cannot and do not wish to argue about the appointment of any person to any committee, I do want to object to the manner in which these appointments were made and to offer an alternate suggestion.

I would like to suggest that in the future questionnaires be distributed to the faculty, administration, and students immediately after the election of the new Council. Those persons who wish to serve on a committee will take the trouble to fill them out and return them. A selection of committee members can then be made from the group of returned questionnaires. This will not preclude a few arbitrary appointments, but it will lend truth to your assertion that those interested will be considered.

A system such as this has several advantages over the one employed by this first Council. It assures that everyone in the college community who registers an interest will be heard. It opens the eyes of the Council members to vital potential leadership and ideas which otherwise will remain hidden. It helps prevent the possibility of the Council becoming involved in power politics and choosing committee members from among a small clique. Most important, it gives the members of the community faith in the Council, which is imperative if the Council is to succeed. I do not want the Council to destroy itself because it does not expand itself sufficiently, and I believe this will happen if it follows practices such as this in the future.

I strongly believe in the concept of the All-College Council in theory. I want to believe in it in actuality.

Sincerely,
Sue Fershee

A VIEW ON DRUGS

Chicago, Ill.-(I.P.)-Society's reaction to student drug use is "a little hysterical," according to Dr. Richard H. Moy, the Health Service Director and Assistant Professor of Medicine at the University of Chicago.

"Our reaction to the expanding use of drugs by students has fallen into predictable and somewhat sterile patterns: passing laws and promoting programs of education."

Elaborating, he said that "while laws and education with their concomitants of intimidation and fear have a role to play, they are not sufficient and are likely to miss the significance of what is really going on. While students worry about the law it is clear that in the case of marijuana that many are willing to risk even severe penalties.

"And in regard to education some students have long been more sophisticated about these drugs than those who now seek to teach them. It is entirely possible that by the time society has passed all its laws and launched all its programs of education, students may have gone on to something else such as mysticism, not because of what their elders have said and done about drugs, but because the students themselves have found that this is not the answer."

Dr. Moy said that students who take hallucinogenic drugs often are in revolt against anonymity of modern society. Noting the pervasiveness of scientific technology in our culture and its contribution toward depersonalization, he suggested that student drug-users often are seeking "the antithesis of scientism----affect, feeling, sensation, subjectivity."

"This is what Leary and Alpert have sold," he commented, referring to psychologists Timothy Leary and Richard Alpert who were among the first to advocate general use of LSD.

The trouble with such drug use, Dr. Moy continued, is that it causes such a deluge of sensory input that the perceptions can be neither adapted nor organized. The person is left with a distinct feeling that something important has happened, but he may be quite unable to integrate it into anything meaningful.

"Another problem," the physician said, "is the id monsters that may creep out."

On every college campus, Dr. Moy said, there are those who will take drugs despite possible penalty, those who will not take drugs under any condition, and a third group that might be influenced in either direction.

Students who do take drugs often argue in favor of legalizing use of marijuana on the ground that it is no more of a problem than alcohol. Dr. Moy's answer is that, with approximately 5,000,000 alcoholics in this country, "another 5,000,000, on marijuana, we don't need."

It is his opinion that most students who try marijuana do so only once or twice to "get off the chicken list."

The posture of universities and colleges toward use of drugs, he continued, usually has fallen into one of three categories, the first being the firm stance, with the college acting as guardian of social mores.

A second is that a student who takes drugs must be mentally ill. "I believe in treatment by competent medical personnel," Dr. Moy said, "but this is not necessarily in the realm of mental illness."

The third posture cited was that of avoidance, in which college officials hope that students will not be overt in their behavior. "This doesn't work out," Dr. Moy remarked.

Calling is "a question of balance," he recommended that universities and colleges make a point of keeping abreast of student views so that "at least we have an idea where we're going, so that we may be able to discuss the underlying questions with them and not just the overt manifestations of those questions."

SIGS WIN GOLD MEDAL

(Special--to the Highland Echo):

The second floor of Memorial Hall was the scene recently of the annual "olympic games" which make up the first part of the Alpha Sigma initiation. Spirits were high as the eager pledges gathered to hear the opening invocation, and the running in of the torch signified the opening of the games.

The football game was the first event, and what an exciting show it was. Yes, football played in the halls of Memorial with a medicine ball is a sight to behold--from a distance, that is. The playing was rough, but it sure separated the men from the boys, and proved that Sig is made of men.

The "bat race" was next on the agenda, and it was quite a race. Have you ever seen a man dance around a bat ten times with the bat held with his forehead? Well, if you haven't, you haven't lived. A man could go batty doing things like that!

Rolling an orange with one's head can be fun, but nobody (and I mean no-o-o-body) can roll an orange like a Sig man can--at least that's what they tell me. The fun comes, however, when the orange breaks and the juice gets in your eyes...

Last in the olympic schedule was the marathon run to the Medical Arts building and back. It wasn't so bad, though, because they all got a shower when they got back.

The evening's activities ended with a tour of the girls' dorms, where the lucky lasses were treated with songs like they have never heard before. And as the last strain--and they were really straining--of music (or whatever that racket was supposed to be) faded into the night, the annual olympic games came to an end, to be stored in our memories as one of the all-time great sporting events ever to take place in Memorial Hall.

MANN HONORED

Margaret C. Mann, a 1968 Maryville College graduate doing additional work in applied voice, was one of four area students who won places in the regional finals of the Metropolitan auditions in Memphis on Sunday, March 2.

DRUG COOPERATION

Burlington, Vt. - (I. P.) - The University of Vermont's Dean of Students, Roland Patzer, has praise for law enforcement officials who have cooperated in and given endorsement to the drug study being carried out on this campus.

Dean Patzer said most colleges and universities are addressing themselves to discussion of the topic in an effort to communicate as effectively as possible with students, parents, and the public generally. He said this is not because it is believed college students are "taking drugs en masse," but college leaders, parents, and the public have a higher regard than that for student intelligence." (The current UV drug study is being conducted in a way to preserve anonymity of students participating who say they are or have been drug users. The study does not involve use or distribution of drugs.)

FERSHEE HONORED

Susan J. Fershee, Maryville College senior from Carlisle, Ohio, has been named to the Honorable Mention list of the 1969-70 Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. Miss Fershee is the 12th Maryville College student honored by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation in the last 12 years.

which 11,704 candidates were nominated last October represented 349 colleges. All those receiving designation by the Foundation were interviewed by panels of college professors and academic administrators.

The list of Designates which has been sent to all graduate school deans in the United States and Canada included a recommendation that the graduate schools make fellowship awards to these students. The graduate deans also received a list of 1,111 persons who were interviewed and received Honorable Mention classification.

BASKETBALL

With an 8-11 record for the season the Scots entered the final stretch of seven games to finish the '68-'69 schedule. In the last five games the Scots have lost three and won two, bringing their record to 10-14. The Scots, who were trying to end the season with an even record will not have that chance, since only two games remain to be played.

Bryan College dumped the Scots for a loss and left the Scots with a four-game losing streak to contend with. The score of that game was 100-75. Undaunted, the Scots came back to win the next two games against Emory & Henry and Milligan. The E & H game was really a thriller. The Scots battled through a very close game, and at the end of regulation time the score was tied at 88. In a fantastic display of basketball the Scots used the overtime to outscore E & H 18-5, winning the game with a score of 106-93. In that game Warren Morgan racked up 42 points, while Bill Padgett followed with 34. That game will not be forgotten for awhile!

In another close game the Scots defeated Milligan 73-72. The score at the half of that game put the Scots Ahead 38-37, and they battled well to keep that one point lead that gave them the game.

Mars Hill managed to outscore the Scots significantly in the second half, but were unable to control the Mars Hill offense during the final half.

The Scots were handed their biggest loss against Asheville-Biltmore. They lost 109-69. In that game Warren Morgan and Mike Barrows led the scoring, while Padgett was only able to come up with seven points. This leaves the record at 10-13.

The Scots have two games remaining on the schedule--one against Asheville-Biltmore and the other against Lee College. The Lee College game has been postponed until March 3rd, and will be the final game of the season. Both games are scheduled to be played here. Good luck Scots!

WRESTLING

In the last three matches the Scots have been unable to come up with a win. All three were against stiff competition and were away meets.

Against Western Carolina University only two of our men were able to come up with points--Bob Evaul and Ed Hawley got pins. But a penalty cost the Scots a point and they lost the meet 34-9.

The next day the Scots met Appalachian State University and were handed a 41-0 defeat. In an exhibition match, however, Ken Wood came up with a win with points.

Returning to the mat after a two week open period the Scots met Milligan College, but once again the competition was too much, and they went down in defeat 42-0. Burt Cremer, in an exhibition match, came up with a win for the Scots with points.

Following the Milligan match the Scots have one match against the University of Tennessee, and they wrap up the season with the SEWIA Tournament at Auburn on the 28-1.

WHAT'S HAPPENING TO SOUL?

Talk about a CIV that makes you think! You, man, are terrifying. "The Black Man's Search for Identity." That's what they called it. Maybe they were also slapping us in the face with--are you ready?--"The white man's search for the black man's identity." Why can't we whities figure out who the black man is? Or what he wants? Is it because some of us can't figure out who we are? Because there are so many different kinds of black? Or white? Or South? Or North?? We have to keep our identity. Don't we?

Why is the whole situation so touchy? So that I fear being unjustly labelled for expressing any opinion in a newspaper? Who makes it that way? Should it or should it not be so? Is somebody getting a bum deal?

Do Blacks have a history devoid of real heroism? Does (white) America really have a glorious, lily-white, virtuous heritage? "Let America be America again!"

Are we to--can we--abandon history? The few genuine revolutions have never resulted in freedom and equality. But what kind of revolution are we hoping for? One in which ten per cent of the population is fighting without the previous support of the other eighty percent of the slums--that eighty per cent which is now unqualified because it is not black? Or will it be an over-night revolution of American attitude? Come now!

America has worked itself into a dilemna. Those who want progress follow the radical leaders, right? Leaders for change have to be radical. And change is life. But then the radicals take on the status quo attitudes of superiority. Maybe they like being on top. So good. Everybody should be sometime, but not to the point of intoxication. What happens to fraternity? After a while reaction sets in. Then what? Radicals on both sides. Nobody giving way any more. Moderation was too slow once. Now it is unreachable.

Did you hear Roy Wilkins predict that ten years from now, Blacks will have numerically fewer professional members of society--because the increasing number of black students today are failing to follow educational paths that lead to such futures?

We have to wonder about the future. Is it supposed to be separate but equal? Or is it supposed to be all children of God and of America? Or is it going to be every man hating and kicking more and more? Or merely ignoring? Where do I fit in? I don't know.

This article isn't coherent. It isn't what they said in CIV. But it's relevant. You think about it. You have something to say. And ya gotta admit, Phyllis looks good in a miniskirt.

EAT YOUR HEART OUT, ANTIOCH

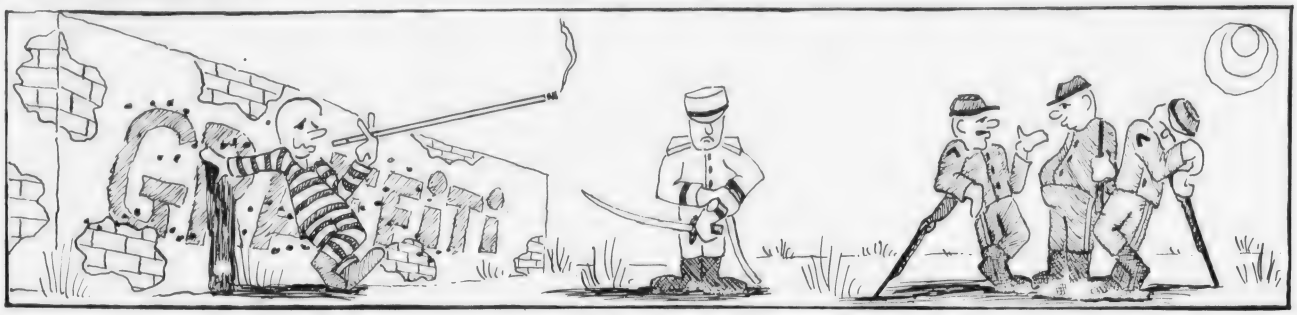
Yellow Springs, Ohio-(I.P.)-Antioch College's top governing body under the board of trustees recently gave veto power over its decisions to the students and faculty who elected it.

The college's Administrative Council of five faculty, three students, president and dean of faculty were responding to pressure here as on campuses throughout the country, from those who wish to control, rather than be controlled by, their governments.

It also met head on what Antioch Pres. James P. Dixon called "one of the principal evils in our culture and in our own community--the evil of mistrust." Dr. Dixon said new referendum procedures adopted "should help us here to be more sensitive to human needs of people and to allow us to continue to be a small experiment on behalf of larger problems" abroad in the country.

Antioch set a precedent a quarter-century ago when it acted to elect students to Administrative Council, which deals with such matters as tenure and budget.

The council acted after several heavily attended meetings, during which some students and teachers, questioned the council's representativeness and challenged its right to make decisions that a significant minority might oppose.



Opponents were concerned about such recent specific issues as curtailment of the Antioch experimental elementary education program and a proposal to start a field study center in Columbia, Md.

Under new procedures adopted, the Antioch community can in the future force reconsideration and even withdrawal of council action through a system of petition and full debate, followed by a referendum.

NEXT WEEK:
WINTER SPORTS WRAP-UP

COMMENT

"Smoking is permitted in students' rooms and certain other specified areas in the dormitories...The only area where smoking is permitted on campus outside the residence halls is in the Student Center."
Maryville College Student Handbook p. 20.

Funny! They don't mention Pearsons' steps, or the walks on campus, or any of the other places on campus where the cigarette-butt drifts are really deep. Or, could it be that maybe in these other places you aren't supposed to smoke? Nonsense! Students do it every day in these places. Or could it be that the people who are supposed to enforce the rules don't want the rules enforced? That seems evident.

In truth, this whole question of smoking raises two questions. The first is whether the rule should exist. Smoking is a personal choice and can not be legislated out of existence too readily. Smoking is also a dirty habit, not only for the individual who does it, but also to those who must smell the air and look at the cigarette butts lying everywhere.

The second question is more fundamental: Who should enforce this, or any other rule, on this campus? The campus community is supposedly made up of thinking, conscientious members, student and otherwise. Police cannot be everywhere. You have to have individual conscience to make any form of government work, and that conscience must accept some, hopefully most, of the laws of that society. And since this is now, theoretically, a participatory democracy, with all members of the society having voice in their government, the old cry, "I didn't make the laws, so I don't need to obey them" just doesn't hold smoke.

I guess it all comes down to these facts: if you don't like this law, or any law, change it! If you can't, obey it. And if there is a law on the books, it should be enforced, for non-enforcement of one law breeds contempt for all. And if a person cannot control his passion for cigarettes long enough to go to classes and dinner, I'd hate to tempt him with anything greater.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Response to Sue Fershee:
Dear Sue,

The All-College Council is still an infant, but it is obvious from your letter that she will not grow up unobserved by the MC community. Your letter is the first real positive sign that I have seen that gives me hope for the "actuality" of the ACC rather than the "theory."

I think your constructive criticism is a valid one, and I, for one, am a bit red-faced that we have let such an opportunity slip by. Perhaps my only excuse is that my eyes were set toward a wide student-faculty - administration involvement in the committee structure as it eventually evolves and not in the Coordinating Councils. The structuring of the committees is the first task of the Coordinating Councils. Then it is our plan to initiate a campus-wide solicitation along the lines you suggested (but only after the three Coordinating Councils and the ACC have settled on a committee structure). How can we ask for expressions of interest in particular committees until we know what committees will exist? Unfortunately, we are tied up until that structure is fixed. No doubt we need to move faster in this matter than we have to date. I hope our Coordinating Councils will be imaginative enough to come up with some interesting new ideas on committee organization.

But if I may, I would like to raise you one on the method you proposed. How can we awaken interest in the area of committee service? What can we do to go beyond a questionnaire asking for interest? To be sure we should use this method as you have suggested, but can we not devise a way to get people like Vera Va Voom and Charlie Butterfingers interested in throwing some of their ideas, time and thought into the arena of our daily life? One way I have suggested is for the members of the ACC to think up 5 or 6 names of "solid" but perhaps "quiet" persons to seek out and talk with about committee work. Maybe this will help--maybe it won't. Somehow I don't think the questionnaire by itself will be enough. In any event we are wide open for creative suggestions such as yours Sue. Thank you.

By the way, where are you Vera and Charlie?

Sincerely yours,
David P. Young

Dear Editor:

Maryville College has a tendency to become isolated from the world and the bewildering complexity of its problems. We are rather inclined to be caught up in the pursuit of intellectualism for the sake of intellectual abstraction. There are occasions, however, when the world is brought to us and we must confront its unsettling reality. Dr. Gayraud Wilmore brought a little of that reality to our campus and it was perhaps uncomfortable for us. He was the first speaker in a new CIV series entitled "The Black Man's Search for Identity."

Dr. Wilmore (the Executive Director of the Commission on Religion and Race of the United Presbyterian Church of the U.S.A.) is an articulate black man who explained how people of his race look at people who are white. He talks with a sort of deliberate logic about the nature of a racist white power structure which has tried to choke black people throughout the history of this country to the present time. He is sympathetic to what many white people would call militant black demands but his speech is not filled with the intolerant radicalism which sometimes characterizes extremists. He is an objective man who has recognized the evils of racism which have permeated much of our society.

Dr. Wilmore talked to our almost completely white college community about things we cannot understand. Undoubtedly there were many of us who could not relate to the fears of a black people who are convinced that they have been colonized by white oppression. Our white community could not really understand the resentment of a man rejected by racist attitudes and institutions. It was hard to grasp the full meaning of this man's deep commitment to a Christian faith which is based on love for God and fellow man instead of middle class community structures. It was confusing to hear about people who would rather destroy themselves or even their nation than be denied the right to be real human beings.

Dr. Wilmore has gone away now so that we can resume our intellectual pursuits. Many of us have forgotten about him or dismissed this latest intrusion with our inevitable "I'm tired of hearing about these same old things." The world which is black and white and cruel and oppressive and very far removed from Christianity came to us and we cannot understand it. The man who tried to tell us about that world might recommend that we attempt to understand it with more black students, some black faculty, or even courses about black history. But it is all rather unsettling and much easier to go on looking for intellectual abstractions in our ivory towers.

TEACHER [illegible]
VETOED

De Kalb, Ill.-(I.P.)-The Committee on Teacher Evaluation at Northern Illinois University recently decided not to use the information gathered from students who evaluated instructors last spring.

"We feel that the questions were, in some instances, irrelevant (such as the one dealing with laboratory facilities) and that others were either vague or imprecise," declared Delphine Landeros, committee chairman.

At an October meeting of the committee, members decided to use a system of teacher evaluation which is going into its third year at the University of Southern California. The system was launched by Dr. Craig Walton, assistant professor of philosophy at NIU and advisor to the committee.

"The Southern California system has more objective questions than we used before," Miss Landeros explained. "There is a chance for students to give a free response for an over-all evaluation. Also, students pass out the questionnaires without professors present. We will adopt questions from the USC system and divide our evaluation into the different colleges in the university." The end-of-the-semester evaluation will result in a pamphlet on instructors this spring.

"Well I'm certainly glad to see they've reached some kind of agreement with the student demonstrators!"

CLASSROOMS ABROAD

Nine groups, each containing twenty to thirty selected American college students, will form seminars in various European cities next summer to study the language, culture and civilization of these countries during a nine-week stay. Designed for the serious student who does not plan to see all of Europe in a short summer, Classrooms Abroad tries to give him a more profound experience through a summer of living in one of the following cities: Berlin or Tubingen in Germany; Vienna in Austria; Vichy, Grenoble or Rouen in France; Neuchatel in Switzerland; Barcelona in Spain, and Florence, Italy.

Graded classes in small sections of six to ten students, each under the supervision of American and native professors, will deal with the reading of classical and modern texts, the daily press, contemporary problems, conversation and composition, pronunciation, and grammar. Students will also hear lectures on history and literature and meet with outstanding personalities. They will have full auditing privileges at the university in each of the selected towns and cities and will participate in all academic and social activities with German, Austrian, French, Swiss, Spanish and Italian students.

Members of Classrooms Abroad will live with private families in each city, eat many of their meals with their hosts and share the activities of their sons and daughters. They will have ample opportunities to meet young people from student, religious, and political organizations. Regular attendance at theaters, concerts, and movies as well as visits to museums, libraries, factories, youth organizations and other points of interest are included in the program. Each group will follow its seven-week stay in a city or town with an optional two-week tour of German, French, Spanish or Italian areas. Since most programs end in mid-August, participants have a chance to remain in Europe for private travel after the program.

"We have found through many years of experience that it is quite possible, even if you don't know a word of the language, to learn more than a year's worth of college German, French, Spanish or Italian in the course of a summer", says Dr. Hirschbach, Director of Classrooms Abroad, "provided that we get serious and mature students who are willing to mix business with pleasure." Dr. Hirschbach, who also heads the German-language groups, teaches at the University of Minnesota. The French groups will be directed by Dr. John K. Simon, Professor of French and English at the University of Illinois, and the Spanish and Italian groups will be led by Dr. Charles Affron of New York University.

Classrooms Abroad, now in its thirteenth year, has grown from eleven students in 1956 to an anticipated two hundred in 1969. Its fifteen-hundred former students represent some two hundred American colleges.

Full information can be obtained by writing to Classrooms Abroad, Box 4171 University Station, Minneapolis, Minnesota 55414.

UP FROM SILENCE

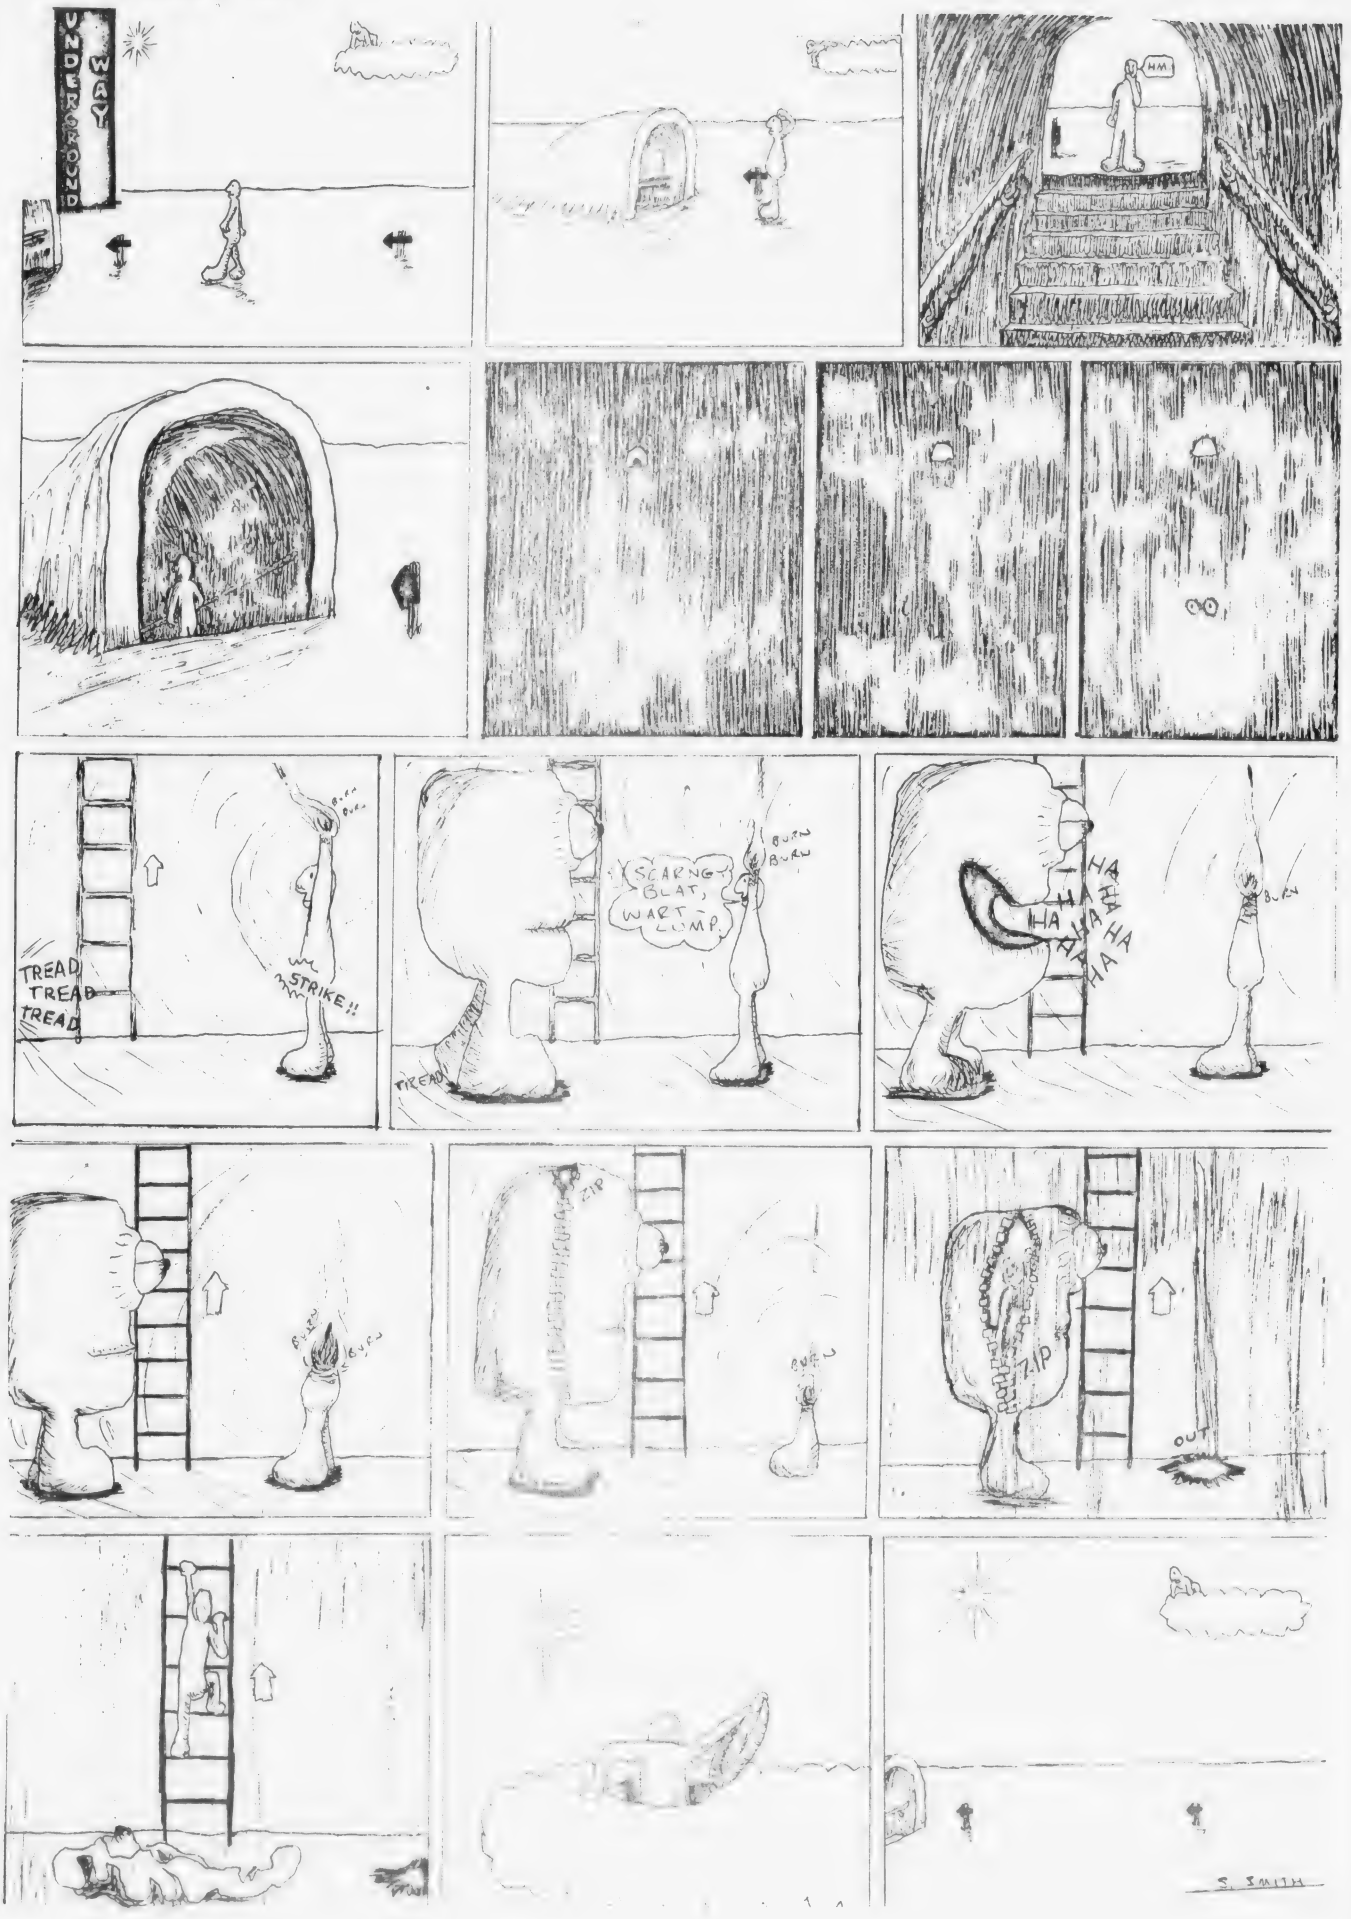
New York...The "Silent Generation" has disappeared from the college campus and Susan Brownmiller, Cornell, class of '56, explains why in March Esquire.

The tag "Silent Generation" was attached to college students of the Fifties. There were lots of magazine articles about the void on college campuses throughout the country and some thought the silence represented a kind of self-satisfied maturity. Others wondered if it might have been apathy. "Very few were willing to call it fear," asserts Esquire.

In the Fall of 1952 a person thought twice before joining a protest organization. "University life was an idyllic existence: classes, football, fraternal orders, knitting and bridge. It was marred by too much drinking, too many pranks and an undue concern for souped-up sports cars, but nobody thought that especially troubling. They called it 'letting off steam' and 'the college experience,'" recalls Miss Brownmiller.

Cornell students of the Fifties, as well as students throughout the country, were greatly affected by the Joe McCarthy episode of their time. Richard Schechner, editor of New York University's Drama Review, a former classmate of Miss Brownmiller's, recalls being very conscious of McCarthy. "That's what I learned at Cornell--you don't get involved in a political organization. I didn't want it on my record. It took me quite a bit of time to overcome those feelings."

There was no student voice in the Fifties, but it was equally true that the faculty voice was barely above a whisper. There was little interaction between faculty and students. "Only two professors at Cornell in those days took open political stands outside their classrooms. Politically we were immobilized, we were unhappy children of the Fifties. Intellectually, we were stultified. The literary scene at Cornell during the Eisenhower years was as timid, perhaps non-existent is the better word, as the political scene. 'Egghead' was the common synonym for intellectual. The popular catchphrase was 'Don't make a value judgement.' It was not a time when poets and writers could thrive on a college campus," says Miss Brownmiller.



Vietnam has affected the American college campus the way the 1929 Depression affected the nation. Students and faculty members who had always been comfortable within "The System" saw for the first time the "cold mashed potatoes" they were being offered as answers and they began to seek their own solutions, states Esquire.

Like morality, "brotherhood" was a bird of a different feather in the Fifties. Cornell's fraternal orders, rigidly separated along religious lines flatly barred Negroes from membership. "There were never more than four or five Negroes on the Cornell campus at any time during the Fifties," reflects Miss Brownmiller. However, the roughly 160 black students on campus in the Spring of 1968 bear witness to the change brought about by time.

The freedom and courage to take a couple of years out of one's life and strike out in new directions is a Sixties' phenomenon. Young people today seem to have no fear of getting or losing jobs, a particular Fifties worry.

College students today are worried about what will happen to them as "movement people" when they leave the college campus and begin to face the real tests of life. Miss Brownmiller does not claim to know the answer, but after her recent observations of the Cornell campus she does believe that "as individuals in Society they will outstrip us all."

The Highland Echo

Vol. 54 | MARYVILLE COLLEGE, Maryville, Tennessee, March 13, 1969 | No. 15

DIALOGUE:

More Soul

It is with more hesitation than willful desire that I am writing you this letter, Mr. Editor. In my attempt here to inform you and your gentle readers on "What's Happening With Soul" I hope I am able to inspire more "concerned" persons to help the Black man find his true identity in light of our American experiences.

The author of the article that appeared in last week's Echo dealing with "What's Happening To Soul?" showed signs of interest in this American dilemma; but I'm not sure that he helped me as a Black man in my search for the answer to the question, "Who am I?" Of course I realize that it is easy for a white man to be confused and frustrated in his attempt to understand a Black man's expression of resentment toward racist institutions and attitudes that tend to perpetuate the black-white polarized nature of the world. Like these sayings were written: "If the truth hurts, it ought to"; and "If one is not part of the solution, one is part of the problem."

As a Black man in search of my identity I feel it is neither my task to mitigate whites, nor to provide the experiences necessary for whites to know where they stand on black-white issues, because there are too many severe situations that confront my people--black people--with which I have to become contemporary. To delay the demands for justice for all Black in America while I help "Mr. Charlie" get his back yard in order first, is for me an absurdity and a misdemeanor. My first allegiance is toward the greater dignity of Black people in America. I have neither hostility nor affection for a man of another race; but I am going to do my own thing first. Reactions or so-called backlashes that may occur as a result of my actions are welcomed as long as these grievances are not aired in my back yard. (I choose to discuss things such as justice and equity with you, Mr. Editor, in black-white terms because when one confronts the realities of American society--"that's where it's at"--in black and white only!)

Allow me to suggest that those who are truly concerned and interested in the cruel nature of our society begin to understand this problem with more black students, A black faculty member, and A course which is relevant to the Black man's problem in America. I only suggest these options, Mr. Editor, because there are too few Blacks here at M.C. for us to make a valid demand for this approach to America's dilemma.

Oh yes! Mr. Editor, I agree with Doug Barber that Phyllis does look good in a miniskirt--SO WHAT!!

Area Art

On display in the colonnade of Wilson Chapel at Maryville College is a senior art exhibit featuring work by Karen Schwartzwalter, senior, from New Providence, N.J., and Ann Reynolds, senior, from Clearwater, Fla.

The exhibit is set up to show the development of children's abilities in art from pre-school age through high school. Groups of students from various schools in the area are used as examples.

Misses Schwartzwalter and Reynolds are both senior art majors, specializing in art education, and plan to teach art upon graduation from Maryville College.

UCM Acts

UCM will conduct a workshop on the Kerner Commission Report and institutional racism on Saturday, March 29th. The morning session from 10 a.m.--12 p.m. will open with panel presentations on institutional racism and the Kerner Commission Report, followed by several films. The afternoon session from 2 p.m.--4 p.m. will consist of workshops on specific issues, such as urban education (led by Mr. Puroff), housing, legal aid services, organizing poor whites, history of the civil rights movement.

Students and faculty are encouraged to purchase copies of the Kerner Commission Report on sale for $1.25 in the bookstore and read part or all of it over spring vacation.

Interested?

The Highland Echo staff will hold its election earlier this year so that the person elected as next year's editor can work on this year's Echo for the remainder of the year as an assistant editor. During this period the editor-elect will work with the entire staff so that he or she will have full knowledge of the newspaper's operation.

Any upperclassman interested in running for election should contact the editor both in writing and in person so that a trial paper can be scheduled.

"Summertree" Tryouts

One of America's most successful "in" dramas by one of America's most successful young playwrights (22 years old) will be presented in the spring by the Maryville College Theatre. Ron Cowen's "Summertree" is that play to be presented May 2 and 3.

The action centers actually and symbolically around a great tree in a typical middle-class American family's backyard, in which an unnamed young man swings backward and forward in reveries of his childhood, young manhood, and death in battle in a war which he feels he has no concern.

Tryouts for this play are on March 25th at 7:30 p.m. in the college theatre. There are three men and two women in the cast. All interested persons are encouraged to try out.

EDITORIAL

When I was a freshman here it was illegal to smoke in student rooms. If the unfortunate student who did smoke in his room was caught he had a letter of information sent to his parents and if the infraction was repeated a number of times the student was suspended from school. Well that bit of puritanical harassment is a thing of the past but there are still some things lingering on and I think that we students of the college along with the administration and faculty had better do something about it. If we are to be an enlightened community that our All-College Council indicates that we could have we are going to have to ask for the trust and integrity that is due to each member of the community. Let me tell you of one insult that someone in this college is giving the student body.

It seems that this past Christmas vacation two men in the student body came back early by two days. The college dorms were still closed so they had to find a place to live until they opened. Where else should they go but to a motel. And that is where these two men went. They went to the Holiday Inn across from the airport and asked for a room. The desk clerk at the motel asked where they were from and they responded that they were Maryville College students, thinking that information would do them no harm. Alas, they were refused a room at the inn. The desk clerk explained that "the college" had requested that the Holiday Inn not rent a room to any Maryville College student.

Wanting to verify this story for myself I asked for a room at that same motel and was also turned down. I even have a credit card for Holiday Inns. Whatsa matter "college" ain't my credit card good enough? And what business is it of yours anyway!?

We cannot allow ourselves to talk of mutual trust and community if this attitude persists any longer. So I suggest that we do something about it as soon as possible. The first thing that comes to mind is to use our All-College Council. If I am not mistaken this problem would fall under the Social, Cultural, and Recreational coordinating council, the co-chairmen are Mrs. Largen and Barbara Grinstead. I think that we all should request that this situation be looked into and the breach of trust be remedied. This should be done now.

I do hope that we all can take care of this problem soon, but I suppose that it won't be done as soon as spring vacation. Oh well, I'm going to Chicago for the vacation and I may want to stay in a Holiday Inn...but now I won't carry the name of Maryville College with me, pity isn't it but there is no telling how many motels "the college" has requested that we students not be treated as responsible.

COFFIN

University, Ala.-(I.P.)-Addressing an American Studies class on the campus of the University of Alabama, via telephonic communication recently, William Sloan Coffin, Yale University Chaplain, outlined progress of the trial in which he and Dr. Spock are involved with three other men.

He said the case will probably go to the U. S. Supreme Court in the fall of 1969. He told the class he doesn't expect to win.

The controversial theologian believes part of the American problem in Vietnam and worldwide is a pre-occupation with communism and that "we are scared to death by it" instead of being "scared to life by it."

On the topic of Black Power, he said we shouldn't take a counter-revolutionary stance toward the rhetoric of men like Cleaver and others.

Questioned about his not being allowed to speak at the University, Coffin said students here should realize that Dr. Rose (University President Frank A. Rose) is working under difficulties such as pressure from the legislature and public opinion. However, he went on to say the students should apply a little counter-pressure. "He's got a tough job," Coffin said of Dr. Rose, "and he needs help from you people."

REVIEW:

Summer and Smoke

Tennessee Williams' play Summer and Smoke is as delicate and evanescent as its name implies. Its art depends not on a stiff dramatic spine of action but on the evocation of a mood as subtle as the blend of scents that pervades Glorious Hill with the rising of the gulf wind. If that atmosphere is not realized, the play--since there is little else to sustain it--must fall as flat as a poetry reading at the Winemiller rectory. That those involved in this production strained to achieve the essential mood was evident in the repeated use of music. It hardly seems necessary to state, however, that if what happens on stage does not make the play take wing, neither will an offstage record player. A Spanish atmosphere is not created by twenty bars of someone's scratchy record of Bolero.

Much of the mood depends upon the audience's sensitive response to the play's symbolism, particularly to the stone angel in the center of the stage (the doppelganger of Glorious Hill itself?) Its significance is as unspecified as smoke, but that it is significant cannot be denied. The power of its brooding presence was virtually annihilated by the omission of the play's opening scene, a meeting between John and Alma, the protagonists, as children who exchange views on life and death at its base, under the image of Eternity, as the legend on the statue defines itself. Why not also omit John's statements about the anatomy chart on his office wall and render irrelevant both of the play's primary symbols? Incidentally, the anatomy chart seemed curiously unphysical. This is a play about the conflict and coming together of body and soul; the poster represents the body in all its complex corporeality, not a neat and tidy euphemism for the human figure.

But to talk about the play, it is necessary to confront its characters, Alma and John, the frustrated, soulful spinster and the freeliving, lecherous doctor who ultimately outgrow their stereotypes. They must come alive, and the subtleties of their ever-changing relationship must touch the audience; or the play becomes merely a matter of waiting to see whether or not he "makes it" with her. Sadly, it was on this level of interpretation that Saturday's audience viewed the play. It is crucial to the play's credibility that John, portrayed by Fred Callies' not appear a simple "waster" if he is to become a man of service at the end. As Tennessee Williams' stage directions indicate, on John's first appearance, despite his dissipation he "has the fresh and shining look of an epic hero." In the present production, however, he resembled, in an ill-fitting white suit, not so much an epic hero as the ice cream man for whom the mad Mrs. Winemiller whines. The actor must strive to appear not merely sensual or merely cynical; his own doppelganger (the being inside each of us that wants release) must at times show through. Nowhere is this complexity more essential than in his relations with Alma. She is the soul and as such both attracts and repels him, for he is as conscious of her insidious power as she is of his more obvious potency. Unfortunately in their early scenes, he gave the impression of no deeper response than boredom. That what is happening between them is a much more involving experience is underscored by the symbolic use of fireworks, images of sexual excitement each feels in the other's presence, climaxing in his invitation that she go for a drive.

John cares for Alma with the deep ambivalence we feel for that which might enslave us; for him, she is never a silly piece of female flesh. If he is allowed to appear to regard her in this way, the audience will take it as their cue to regard her similarly. And the deep tragedy of the play becomes farce. An actress in Alma's role has quite a job to begin with; she cannot succeed without the dramatic support of John's apparent appreciation. Without it, the actress is as alone and frustrated on stage as Alma was in the arid atmosphere of Glorious Hill. There is nothing more difficult than presenting a character whose keynote is affectation without giving the appearance of affectation in the presentation itself. Geraldine Page can do it; Sandy Dennis tries; at times, Kathleen Smith carried it off magnificently, yet her characterization would have touched us more if she had expressed a greater variety of emotions. Her sustained hysteria occasionally became as monotonous as his callous apathy.

The attitude Williams hopes to conjure from the audience with regard to Alma is one of compassion tinged with distaste. The reaction he least wants is amused superiority. As the program notes indicate, the play shows that "Nothing is much more humbling and in this instance terrifying than a clairvoyant glimpse into the heart of another person." It is nice that the audience could carry home the "moral" written down for them since they seemed unable to see it for themselves in the play. No one in Saturday night's audience was humbled or terrified; they were too busy laughing at the play and at each other's laughter. They had as much fun finding sexual innuendos in every line as a group of traveling salesmen stopped to sample the wares of Glorious Hill. We humans are, by and large, a tawdry bunch--we strive mightily to submerge the doppelganger that would render us defenseless against the magic of poetry or passion, as the play informed those who listened between the laughs.

Several minor roles were handled superbly. Robert Hutchens as John's father was particularly fine; as in Marat/Sade he proved himself capable of creating real dramatic presence. It is no coincidence that the scenes between him and Alma were those where our affection for her was most fully realized. He created the warmth in which her characterization could blossom. Equal in excellence but opposite in function was Julie Laubach's depiction of Mrs. Bassett, the small town gossip whose pseudo-piety and sublimated sexuality mingled in every line. Praise must also go to Ann White whose characterization of Nellie Ewell, a young girl coming of age, was full of the ebullient simplicity of the favored creature who never has to contend with a doppelganger. In her natural transformation from girl to woman, she was a foil to Alma's agonizing metamorphosis. Of Winifred Welling's presentation of Rosa, there is no criticism, but was it necessary to create for her a costume and make up job that was downright hideous? Rosa represents the pleasures of the flesh; are we too puritanical to let those pleasures appear attractive? With regard to Carol Fisher's depiction of Alma's demented mother, it is difficult to criticize anything that makes interesting a static dramatic situation, but one cannot conceive of Tennessee Williams ever finding madness a source of humor. Alma is terrified by the image in her mother of what she might become. When she cries in unconscious mimickry "the pieces don't fit," a chill should settle on our hearts--if we are among those who participate in drama with our hearts.

Still, the production had its moments. Miss Smith's characterization of Alma, particularly in the deeply soulful reading of "Love's Secret," will not be easily forgotten. The entire scene of the intellectual gathering at the rectory had the pace of real dramatic interplay, and many minor roles, such as that of Phil Der-Pilbosian, approached full dramatic realization. The play, like those of Chekov, is difficult, demanding, and lacking in the sensationalism and humor that make for easy success. Everyone involved except the audience deserves some degree of congratulation.

WOMEN'S ALL-STAR GAME

Alumni Gym was the setting for the 1969 Womens' All-Star Game held March 5 and 6. For the first time in the history of the All-Star Game, there were three teams, Theta Epsilon and Chi Beta welcomed the Independents, and the Independents walked off with the title.

The first night brought together Theta Epsilon and the Independents. The Independents won 29-22 in a well fought battle. High scorers were Penny Blackwood for the Independents with 10 and Carol Martin with 8. For Theta it was Sue Schwaiger with 10 points.

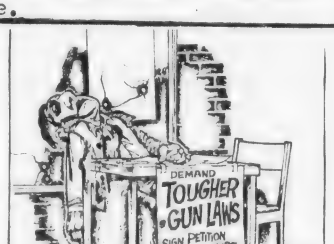
The second night the Independents, still hot from their victory the night before, came back to beat Chi Beta 28-26. Alice Weber led a third quarter charge that proved fatal to Chi Beta, last year's champions. High scorers for this game were Weber with 10 and Carol Martin with 7 for the Independents and for Chi Beta were Beth Kell with 10 and Ellen Mehaffy with 6.

Rounding out regular season play the Independents won eight games, followed by Chi Beta II with 6, Chi Beta I with five, Town 4, Theta II 2, and Theta I 0. It was a good season. We all had fun and got rid of a lot of frustration.

COMMENT

A report called "One Year Later" was issued recently. It deals with what has been done in America to cure the problems set forth by the Kerner Commission Report one year ago. Its conclusion: very little at all has been done. America still believes that "everything's going to be o.k.," and that change is coming slowly, but surely. But everything is not o.k. and change won't happen unless someone makes it, unless someone cuts out the cancer that is eating away at America. The Kerner Commission Report calls it white racism instead of cancer. And, as Gay Wilmore made us realize, it is a white problem, not a black problem.

Ten thousand times I've heard or I've asked, "But what can I do? I want to help." That question has worn itself out, particularly since it is usually followed by absolutely no action. The road to a perpetually racist society or college is paved with good intentions that are never followed by any concrete or constructive action.



One year later--and I haven't even finished reading the Kerner Report. One year later--and Maryville College has a grand total of 7 black students. One year later--and I know who Harriet Tubman was (in addition to knowing that George Washington Carver invented peanut butter), but how about all those other black men like W. E. DuBois, Marcus Garvey, Malcolm X? One year later--and the federal government is still having to force Southern public school systems to integrate. One year later--black students are having to confront university administrations so that they will admit more black students, hire more black faculty, and institute black studies courses. One year later--and Maryville College has only one course that even acknowledges the existence of minority cultures, particularly black culture, and that course probably won't be offered after this year. One year later--and we still have a lily-white faculty. One year later--and the cancer has not been removed. In fact, the operation hasn't even begun. One year later --the cancer is still spreading.

We are all so confused and inert that we never know where to begin to stop the spread of that cancerous white racism. We fail to realize that what is important is that we begin. This is why UCM is sponsoring a workshop on white racism on Saturday, March 29th. We hope that it will be only a beginning. Perhaps we are dreaming to think that some things will change at M.C. and in the community of Maryville-Alcoa as a result. Perhaps we are dreaming to think that there are white people who do care --enough to do something. Perhaps we'll title the workshop "Grasping in the Emptiness of our Inadequacies and Inertia."

May we be bold enough to recommend The Kerner Commission Report (on sale in the bookstore for $1.25) as spring vacation reading? Maybe while you are on a sandy shore up against a beach towel, trying to darken your skin, it will cause you to think of your black brother who is constantly up against the wall, precisely because he was born with his skin darker.

Bethlehem, Pa.-(I.P.)-A revolutionary new educational policy has been adopted at Lehigh University which gives the faculty greater flexibility than ever before in maintaining a curriculum that is relevant to a rapicly changing society.

In announcing the innovative educational move, which is effective with the beginning of the current Spring Semester, Dr. Glenn J. Christensen, provost and vice president, called it one of the most exciting advances in his long experience at the University.

The faculty of any instructional department at Lehigh now has the blanket authority to incorporate new courses into the curriculum in as little as a few months' time in response to student or faculty interest in areas of vital concern in today's world.

Dr. Christensen said that he knows of no other educational institution where a similar policy enables such quick response to requests for "social concern" courses.

He added, "Whereas inclusion of a new course in the curriculum normally requires almost a year, the Lehigh faculty can now present a course while it is still relevant to contemporary society."

Such courses, to be known as high immediate relevance (HIR) courses, may be offered at all undergraduate levels and in all instructional departments of the University. HIR courses will be those having immediate, though perhaps temporary, relevance to society, as opposed to Lehigh's permanent courses, which have been maintained to include relevance.

In order that HIR courses will be available to a maximum number of students, prerequisites will be cut to a minimum, as will administrative constraints. Taken by students on a pass-fail basis, the courses, after having been offered for two consecutive semesters, may be made a permanent part of the University curriculum if deemed to be of more enduring relevance.

The first HIR course offered during the current spring semester is Introduction to Urban Systems. Offered on an experimental basis during the fall semester, it is now a regular course building a unified interdisciplinary perspective for urban studies, through consideration of economic, social, political, and physical structure of cities.

Taught by an interdisciplinary team of instructors, the urban study courses are further distinguished by the fact that they employ the problem approach and attempt to involve students in the community, both as direct observers and participants, to a far greater degree than do other courses.

Also adopted were courses in urban research, urban economics, urban design, urban history, and Negro history, and graduate-level seminars in urban and Negro history. These will be incorporated into the curriculum during the 1969-70 academic year.

WRAP-UP:

Basketball

The nets are hanging still once again, and the scoreboard is dark for another year. The cheers of victory and the pangs of defeat are lost to posterity, but the memories of this year's basketball season will stay with us for a while.

The season began with three straight wins, but hopes were crushed with three straight losses. The season was sporadic, with a win or two here, and a loss or more there. We had our close games--we beat Milligan by one point, and lost to Kentucky Southern by one point. We had our exciting games--we beat Emory and Henry in overtime 106-93, and we had our heartbreaking games--we lost to Asheville-Biltmore 109-69. The season ended with a 10-16 record, a disappointment, since the team hoped for a 50/50 finish.

Two seniors ended their careers in collegiate basketball this year: Bill Padgett and Dave Maxwell. Padgett brought his total points to over the 2,000 mark by scoring 578 points. He led the scoring. Maxwell was fifth in scoring, and both men had very good percentages from the free-throw line.

Together five men--Padgett, Barrows, Morgan, Mize, and Maxwell--netted over 77% of the score, but without the rest of the team behind them it is meaningless. Each man added to the team and worked well to provide the group effort we saw on the court all season.

Two men who we look forward to seeing on the team next year--Mike Barrows, a sophomore, and Warren Morgan, a freshman--played a great season, racking up over 1/3 of the total points. Barrows was second in scoring, hitting almost 50% of the time in field goals. Morgan was tops on rebounds with 270, and Barrows was second with 150. Don Hickman was close behind the top five in scoring and was third in rebounds for the season with 113. He provided a strong support for the team, playing in all 26 games.

The J.V. team played five games and won all but one of them. They defeated Johnson Bible and Knoxville College once, and Emory and Henry twice, and were defeated by Lee College. The J.V. games gave the back-up team a chance to improve and keep in readiness in case they were needed in Varsity play. With a 4-1 record the J.V. team shows promise for future Varsity games.

Wrestling Wrap-Up

The wrestling team just could not come out on top this year. The final record was one win and thirteen defeats--outscored 435-128. The score stands as a mute testimony for this year's wrestling season.

Individual records stand out this year. Ray Nye, who left the team before the end of the season, had the best record with 6 pins. Captain Harry Burnett had a respectable record of 3 pins and 4 wins with points. Other members, such as Bob Evaul, Bob Mitchell, and Ed Hawkey did well individually, helping the team as best they could.

The Scots had a rough season--they were up against some of the strongest wrestling schools in the South. It is evident that the competition was too strong. We can only look back at the individual triumphs and hope that next year these individual talents can be strengthened to make the team into a winning one.

YELLOW PRESS HITS MC

MARYVILLE PICKED AS PILOT SCHOOL

Uniformed sources in high circles last week indicated that Maryville College would be named first choice for the organization's revised planning, soon to get underway. Merton S. Fleggle, SLKRE administrator and spokesman, in an unofficial statement hinted that a full report would be forthcoming.

As yet, no confirmation or refutation of the rumor has been issued from Dr. Copeland's office, although little opposition to the proposal is expected from that corner.

The basic changes which the program, if adopted, would involve, affect both the social-political and the academic life of the college. As Associate Aveley Zugneist said, "We think our implimentation of the empirically-derived formulations of this theory augment the inter-related operational mechanizations formerly regarded as substantially intuitive and self-reflective, as shown." When asked how specific areas of concern and interest are expected to be affected, Zugneist said that he felt they would, "beyond a shadow of a doubt."

Granting that this is yet a rumor, nevertheless the outstanding implications are such that no satisfactory reappraisal may be usefully continued until certain other facets become known, which seems likely. Indeed, the entire staff stands ready with full use of such computorized and other electronic aids as may be employed without the loss of any aspect of the program, no matter what the reaction might be, as many feel is inevitable.

The experimental nature overshadowing the program becomes clear as already thirteen families have sought relocation. Many others are turning in vain to the larger universities for precedents, but student leaders and discontents there expressed verbal lack of faith and large groups locally joined in unanymous cynicism. One student leader from Maryville was asked why such attitudes prevailed, and answered something hardly intellible about not needing a weather map to know which way the wind was blowing.

SLKRE Administrators announced that they would welcome opinions sent in a self-addressed stamped envelop about their proposed program, but regretfully admitted that personal replies to any of these letters would be impossible. ECHO staff members have been appointed to handle this, however, and would welcome any comments sent c/o The Editor.

first annual dubious Achievement AWARDS

EDITORIAL

This is our first annual dubious achievers issue. I hope that it will become one more of the many beloved Maryville College traditions (tongue in cheek...very deeply). It is not a bad idea to laugh at ourselves once in a while and really all of the awards that have been given are in a good spirit of fun. None of the awards have been given with any malicious intent.

I do think that there are some things going on here that are too important to laugh at right now. Maybe someday. The most important of these things is the great need of dialogue on campus. I have mentioned that before. If there is no dialogue there is no community. I hope that some day there will be a time when people on this campus will speak face to face with others that don't necessarily share the same viewpoint. How many times must certain individuals on this campus crucify dialogue and therefore crucify our community. Let us not hear this conversation again:

"Boy, somebody really thinks that your ideas are bad and you don't know what you are talking about!"

"Who was it?"

"Oh, they don't want their name to be known."

Too many times we have heard that simple ritual.

So laugh on the whole world's just a banana and it's sticking in all of our ears.

Will America Back to the Indians

(This appeared in an Orlando, Fla. newspaper some time ago and was sent to us as part of the campaign headed by Jonathan Winters. We think they're serious! Eds.)

A few months ago Harry Haylock, 4601 Eighth St. N., whose great-great-grandmother was a Mayan Indian, had an inspiration - why not give the country back to the Indians?

Now some people, when he mentioned it to them, said this would be a pretty dirty trick to play on the unsuspecting redmen.

But Haylock and his wife Jeanette gave the idea some serious thought and figured it was the least they could do to make up for this nation's treatment of the original tenants. They said:

"We have made a will for the purpose of returning our real property...to be sold, with the proceeds to help finance the building of a library (for the Seminoles.)"

The Haylocks, who have a dandy bumper sticker that reads, "Will America Back To The Indians," hope the idea will catch on nationwide.

If enough people began leaving everything to the nearest Indians, in another few generations the noble redman would have America back. A good bit the worse for wear, of course.

But the uneasy thought arises - what if they treated us the way we've treated them?

This is why some critics of the plan say it would be better if the Haylocks just gave the Indians back the $24 we paid for Manhattan to start with.

Actually, Harry Haylock hopes to recapture the American dream, as cited recently by some unknown philosopher with the East St. Louis Kiwanis Club:

"Once upon a time all Americans were happy enjoying life and making an easy living with plenty of time for sports, dancing and big dinners. Then the white man landed."

The Times reported yesterday that in Los Angeles, the 45,000-member American Indian community is organizing an all-tribes American Indian Association. It will emphasize self-help.

If the association is smart, the first thing it will do is to figure out some legal dodge whereby the white man cannot stick them with the country. A simple little clause could do it:

"No damaged goods accepted."

NEW RADICAL PLAN REVEALED

Greg Gottstein of Northeastern Illinois State College has the ultimate plan for college radicals. Here it is:

"Our radical groups have done most of the ordinary things like messing up the president's office, chaining themselves to the information booth, livening up ordinarily dull classes and the like," he says.

"However...they have not hit either the students or faculty where it really hurts. I believe my plan will strike at the very hearts of the entire college community.

"This is my plan. If you stop to figure it out, there can't be more than 80-90 toilets in the entire building. Now, if a dedicated group of men and women were to make sure those toilets were in constant use for an entire day, you can imagine the reaction of both students and faculty!"

"Remember my radical friends there are toilets in both the A and B wings, in front of the cafeteria, in the administration building, in the gym, and here and there in the basement."

"The only real problems that I could think of are all relatively minor.

"First, this kind of sit-in could be rather boring, but then again, they tell me it's a great place to study.

"Secondly, the men at the urinals, whom I prefer to call the Number one Team, would be on their feet all day. Perhaps this could be solved thru the use of shifts.

"Finally, don't expect too much television coverage."

"Hey man, do you think maybe it's —— BAD BREATH?"

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Hope For International Understanding Committee has always been interested in communication. About seven weeks ago we decided to initiate a project which would allow campus dialogue to come to the surface. We asked for contributions of thoughts, poetry and art. The results of our request were outstanding in quantity and content. It pleased the committee very much to find that the communication expressed was more than campus comment. The thoughts shared were universal! Given the opportunity, Maryville College students, faculty and alumni showed us that dialogue between people was not as dead as some of us had been led to believe.

To further this demonstration of a desire for the sharing of thoughts and ideas, The Hope For International Understanding Committee has published a collection of the poetry which was submitted and is making it available to the entire college community.

In the next few days, a representative will be around to your rooms to speak with you about Hope For International Understanding; its wish for dialogue on a world level, the goals it wants to achieve on campus, and our needs for realizing these possible dreams. We hope you will share with us in our search for world understanding in the form of a contribution for our collection, your collection, of thoughts.

Lynn Andrea Gillespie, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Frederick S. Gillespie, 635 Belgrove Drive, Kearny, New Jersey, has been selected by The Experiment in International Living to live abroad with a family in France this summer. She is currently a sophomore at Maryville.

The Experiment has been engaged in international educational Exchange since its founder, Dr. Donald B. Watt, first introduced a group of American youths to their French and German-speaking counterparts in Switzerland in 1932.

It is now the most well-established program of its type in the world with representatives in more than 60 countries involved in the annual exchange of some 5,000 young men and women between the United States and 100 nations around the globe. The private, nonprofit organization maintains its U.S. headquarters in Putney, Vt. The Experiment's southern regional office is located in Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Before Lynn arrives in her homestay community abroad, she will join ten other members of her Experiment group for intensive preparation for the adventure ahead. The group, with the assistance of an experienced leader, will discuss the customs and culture of France and prepare to meet its people on their own terms.

For one month Lynn and her fellow Experimenters will live with individual families in France. This firsthand opportunity to develop friendships, to learn the customs and traditions, and to participate in the activities of the host country from the vantage point of a family environment, is the heart of the Experiment program.

During her last three weeks in France Lynn and her group will invite members of their host families to join them for an extensive travel period throughout France. Seeing the host nation through the eyes of its nationals is a special feature of Experiment programs.

The American Red Cross has scheduled a mandatory ten hour retraining course for all current water safety instructors. This retraining program is to be accomplished by December 31, 1969. The program will be offered at the college pool on April 8, 9, 10, 11 from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Registration is required. A sign-up sheet will be posted at Mrs. Largen's office in Bartlett Hall.

Let's ... Good Computers

When you think about your future, do you think in terms of technological living, its conveniences, its responsibilities, its opportunities, its hazards? Do you envision a time when computers carry on the work of living and men are freed for creative leisure? Or does some vague fear of a "big brother" threat cause you to avoid facing the reality of technology? What is the reality of technology?

On April 23rd, the Community Issues and Values series presents a program entitled "Computer: Myth or Fact?" under the direction of Dr. Norman Love of the Maryville College Physics Department. In the first part of this program the college community will view a film entitled "The Year 1999 AD" which depicts daily living with computers in the future. After the film, a panel of computer experts consisting of Charlie Williams, Manager of ALCOA Computer Center, and Bruce Alcorn of the Computer Project of the Southern Regional Education Board in Atlanta, will answer questions about computer living, today and in the future.

If you are interested in learning about this vital aspect of your life, take the time to write out some of your questions and give them to Dr. Love (Box 2830, or Sutton Science Center, Room 206) who will present the most pertinent of those questions he receives to the panel of experts. Take this opportunity to learn about your future in terms of technology.

Return to God's Country

Archaeologists in the southeastern area of the United Empire have recently released information concerning their investigation of what was once a college which was destroyed approximately one thousand years ago, apparently by the Wrath of God. Scientists claim this discovery may shed further light on the cataclysms which rocked the area in the mid-Twentieth Century. Authorities theorize that god, always a fickle fellow, destroyed this institution as it was celebrating its 150 years of service to him. God caused a fit of madness to take the residents of the college while they were in the midst of their devotions. Workers on the site claim to have found such academic trivia as a log cabin and an academic mace amid the ruins, both apparently used in the worship of god. It is also rumored that large numbers of skeletons have been found piled in front of a number of doorways on campus. These doors were evidently closed at the time of the disaster and these people died in an attempt to pass through. One building, tentatively identified as Anderson Hall and chief temple on campus, had half of each pair of double doors locked. It is possible however that these doors had solidified and become, in effect, walls after years of disuse. Critics of those who blame god for this phenomenon point out that another set of doors leading to what served as a cafeteria, seem to have been unlocked at the time of the disaster and here as in Anderson Hall a large number of bodies were found, most with abnormally large grease deposits on their bones. Workmen at the site have been heard to repeat the meaningless phrase "Is it a boy or is it a girl?" but no explanation has as yet been offered although outside sources point out that this was a popular catchphrase of the era. As further proof of the Mass-Madness Theory, the archaeologists point to a large but unfinished building on campus and evidences that a large number of dormitory rooms were unoccupied. Furthermore the discovery of several oddly-preserved issues of the college newspaper show an abundance of pointless material. Resurrecting another phrase of the era, a reliable source has quipped that there was enough good material to make one worthwhile album. That source has offered no further comment. Several titles on plaques have been found but none yield useful material as yet. One of these reads "Dean of ..." but there is little evidence that any Dean ever did anything to deserve his name on a plaque, although this too may have been little more than formal ritual. Another plaque shows more promise. It reads "Committee on Traditions" and fragmentary evidence seems to show that this committee was in charge of creating as well as preserving traditions. Scientists are now busy trying to determine what sort of animal a tradition was and how it was related to the college. A few more radical scientists have postulated that the tradition was an animal sacred to god and that god in one of his insane frenzies destroyed the college charged with preserving that creature. They go on to say that this attack may well have been what started the War with God wherein the huge military machine of the Twentieth Century overthrew god and all his cohorts. There seems to be no proof for the persistent rumor that the ghost of the Director of Development has been seen walking the grounds mumbling "Students? Were there students here?"

Africa:

Embryo of an Empire

The Africa that was Johnny Weissmueller and Safari documentaries on Sunday afternoons has changed, is changing, and will be changing more dynamically than anything since the industrial revolution.

The worlds of both Blacks and whites, not to mention the great majority of other peoples, have been drifting here and there on pious White axioms. What the world is seeing today, in movements like Black Power, is the realization of so many, who, as Pascal put it, "follow in their fathers' footsteps, solely because they have all been brought up to believe that this is the best course.

We are on the verge of a revolution, in every sense of the word; but it will be from the streets of South Africa, not Detroit, that the first shots to be heard 'round the world will ring.

As torchbearers in a primarily synecdochetic uprising, South African Blacks will be the catalysts for what historians may well term the Third World War.

As sympathy from the psudo-hip among whites dies with the realization of the reality of the violence involved in their mock-politics, a confusion ab ovo usque ad mala will exist to the possible extreme of a nonmedicable shock as a result of an extensive security resulting from the work of a long palimpest news medium.

Subliminal synchronism of the Blacks and sincere Whites all over the world is inevitable, in light of the standardized white social pressure upon every living individual on Earth.

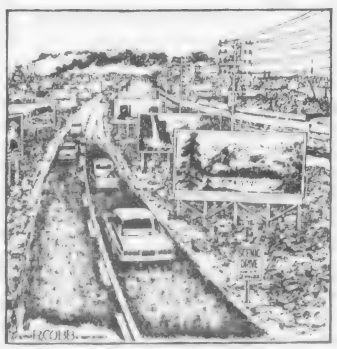
The question yet to be answered is this; will the Black revolution be, as all previous revolutions in history, a war followed by minor social changes resulting in a society with as many flaws as the last with only the placement of these flaws differentiating old from new? Will an African Empire ensue, embodying all the prejudices of the old White aristocracy, with the exception of the victims of the prejudices?

When one has lived for quite a long time, and there is further difficulty of the greater and lesser optimism (without being able to form an estimate from which to judge the future), anyone who follows from this status and differs from the knowledge and capacity forces control on human needs.

The two trends function as wealth to make a communal distribution, indeed: their annihilation.

Steve Smith

The deadline for all nominations for Editor of the Highland Echo is April 9. All nominations must be submitted in writing and in person so that a trial paper can be scheduled.



Comment

Things are going along rather quietly at MC. No riots, no occupying of Anderson Hall--nothing but the ACC talking quietly about all our problems. Then Dr. Stanton Leggett, a noted educational consultant, gave voice to an idea which may force us to change our whole way of thinking and to get in the protest mood! "Show me a quiet, orderly school...and I'll show you an academic flop. You can usually spot the good schools by their well-organized disorganization." His assumption is reinforced by Bob Nesbit, vice-pres. of Youth Dynamics, who claims that "Ten years ago prospective students would have avoided campuses where there were demonstrations and disorder. Today, those are the places where they want to be."

As we all know, something is keeping students from flocking to MC in droves. Maybe we should look around. Could our lack of signs, protest buttons, sit-ins, and organizations known only by their initial letters be relegating us to the collegiate "has-been" heap? Maybe an acronymic organization would put us in the limelight again. Last week I heard about S.W.I.N.E. (Students Wildly Indignant About Nearly Everything). Maybe we could get up a local chapter. However, if we want something unique to old Maryville, why not S.W.E.A.T. (Students Willing and Eager to Attack Trouble-Spots)? As a beginning it might have as its goal getting a new (or different) social center on campus. If you think about it, there are a few things we could protest quietly about, giving us an aura of well-organized disorganization!

S.W.E.A.T., anyone?

Lucy H. Proffitt

M.C. to have "College Bowl" type team.

During the next three days an intensive talent hunt will be underway on the M.C. campus, having as its objective the organization of a group of ten students to participate in a program called "Instant Answers," planned later in the spring for local TV production. Similar in design to the Sunday afternoon "College Bowl" program, "Instant Answers" will require rapid recall and a wide range of knowledge.

Mrs. Robert D. Proffitt will coach the team and Mr. Arthur Dees will co-ordinate program planning and scheduling. Students who are interested in participating should contact Mrs. Proffitt either in her office on the second floor of the Chapel or by leaving a message in Box 2896. First broadcast is scheduled for May 6.

Our Creative Activities

Are you hunting for something to do? Maybe the answer is participation in the Creative Activity Program. If you are interested in some group not in the schedule contact Mrs. Davis in Bartlett Hall. The following schedule is underway for this term.

All interested in bicycling will meet Friday, April 4th at 3:45 in Science Center 113. Local rides as well as the Cades Cove loop are being planned.

Hikes are planned for each week end. Sign up in Dr. Shields office the Wed. before. Fee of 75¢ for transportation.

The handicraft group will be sewing this term on Tuesdays at four in family room of Dorm I. Beginners, intermediates and advanced seamstresses are welcome.

Physicist to Speak on M.C. Campus

Professor Kenneth Rubin of the Department of Physics at City College of New York, New York will serve as a visiting lecturer at Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee, Tuesday, April 8.

He will visit under the auspices of the American Association of Physics Teachers and the American Insitute of Physics as part of a broad, nationwide program to stimulate interest in physics. The program is now in its twelfth year and is supported by the National Science Foundation.

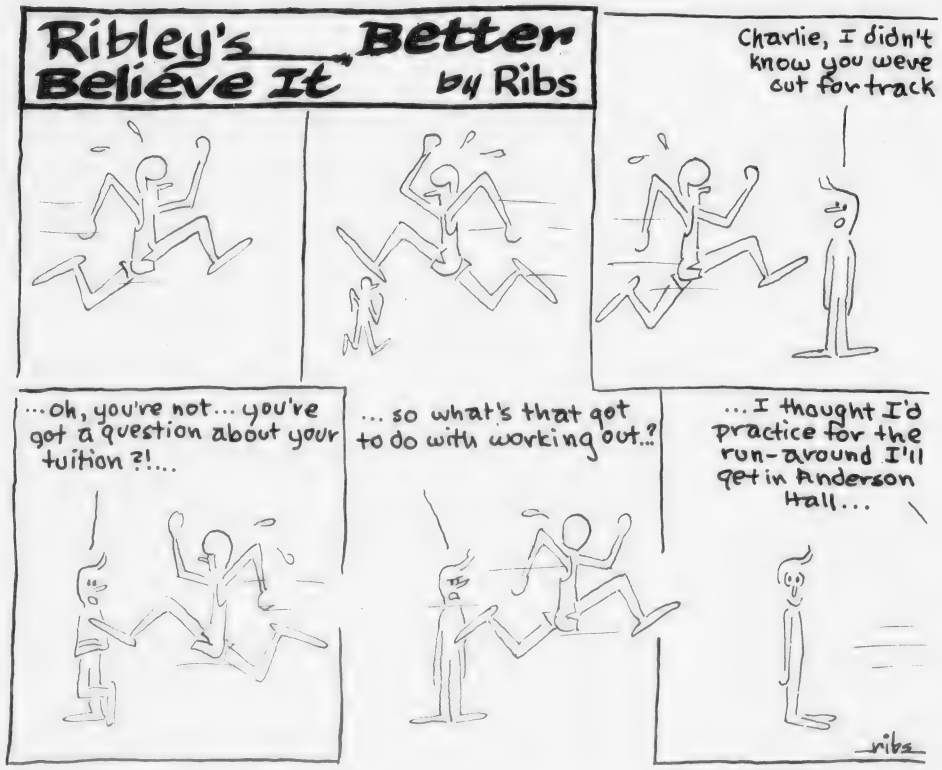
The American Association of Physics Teachers is one of the seven member societies of the American Institute of Physics. Other member societies are: The American Physical Society, Optical Society of America, Acoustical Society of America, The Society of Rheology, American Crystallographic Association, and the American Astronomical Society.

Lectures, informal discussion, assistance to faculty members concerning curriculum and research problems in physics, and talks with students will feature Professor Rubin's visit. Professor Norman D. Love of Maryville College's Department of Physics and Mathematics is in charge of arrangements for Professor Rubin's visit.

Kenneth Rubin was born in New York City; received the B.S., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in 1950, 1952, and 1957 respectively, from New York University.

He began his teaching career at N.Y.U. as an Instructor from 1955 to 1959 at which time he was made Assistant Professor. In 1964, he left N.Y.U. to join the staff of City College of New York as an Assistant Professor. He is currently Associate Professor there.

From 1952-53 he was a Research Assistant on a panel on electron tubes; from 1953-54 he was Research Assistant at Columbia Radiation Laboratory, Columbia University; and in 1954, he was Associate Research Scientist in the Atomic Beam Laboratory at New York University.



Dr. Rubin is a member of The American Physical Society, Sigma Ci, and Sigma Pi Sigma. His field of special interest has been in Atomic and Molecular beam experiments. He has had many papers published in the professional physics journals.

UNTITLED PROTEST

Red and swollen tears tumble from her eyes
While cold silver birds who came to cruise the skies
Send Death down to bend and twist her tiny hands
And they procced to Target B in keeping with their plans.
Khaki priests of Christendom, Interpreters of Love
Ride a stone leviathan across a sea of blood
And pound their feet into the sand of shores they've never seen Delegates from the Western Land to join the Death Machine.
And we send cards and letters.

The oxen lie beside the road their bodies baked in mud
And fat flies chew out their eyes, then bathe themselves in blood
And super heroes fill the skies, tally sheets in hand
Yes, keeping score in times of war takes a Superman.
The junk crawls past hidden death, its cargo shakes inside
And soldier-children hold their breath, and kill them as they hide
And those who took so long to learn the subtle ways of death
Lie and bleed in paddy mud with questions on their breath.
And we send prayers and praises.

PEABODY MADRIGALIANS TO APPEAR APRIL 11

The Madrigalians, from George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn., will present the final program in the "Friends of Music Series" in the Maryville College Music hall of the Fine Arts Center, Friday, April 11, at 8:15 p.m.

Admission to this concert will be by ticket only. Complimentary tickets were distributed last December for this three part "Friends of Music Series" of programs. However, tickets for this performance are available and may be obtained by calling the Fine Arts Center Office at 982-6960.

This program will be an Honors Concert giving recognition to the newly elected members of Tau Kappa Chi, honorary music society. The student nominees are as follows: Douglas Barber, sophomore, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mary Lois Brugler, junior, Belle Center, Ohio; Sandra Hynd, senior, Guilford, Conn.; Susan Kehrli, sophomore, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Margaret Mann, senior, Union W. Va.; and Ann White, senior, Huntsville, Ala.

The Peabody Madrigalians, under the direction of Dr. Charles H. Ball this year in the absence of the groups regular director Dr. Robert Bays, head of the School of Music, was formed in 1940 by Dr. Irving Wolfe. The madrigalians have been chiefly interested in the performance of Renaissance vocal music, choral music of contemporary composers, and the folk music of the United States, particularly the music of the Southern Highlands. The group has toured extensively in Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and Korea, under the sponsorship of the United States Department of State.

The group spent the spring of 1964 in the Far East, sharing the music which is part of America's heritage with the people of four countries. They were one of seven university music groups sent overseas during the 1963-64 academic year by the U. S. Department of State under its Cultural Presentations Program, the students represented the United States in song and spirit on campuses, in concert halls, industrial plants, homes for the aged, radio and television stations and hospitals.

The Madrigalians sang for approximately 85,000 people in concerts and for many more in workshops held for university professional and industrial choral groups as well as at innumerable programs for Peabody alumni and overseas dignitaries.

The members of The Madrigalians are chosen for their ability as singers and for their musicianship. The group is composed of both undergraduate and graduate students and the faculty director.

The group is composed of the following: Emily Bane, senior music major from Atlanta, Ga.; Mary Ann Bialek, a graduate student attend-

HIU CRIES "HELP!"

A Tibetan Refugee School in the Himalayas is crying out for help, and the cry is directed to Maryville College through the committee of "Hope For International Understanding." This refugee school was first organized as the exiles from Communist China began to congregate in the north Indian hill country. Tibetans are a peaceful and quiet people, but they are proud, and they wanted their children to be educated so that some day this new generation could return to rule their homeland. Many people were immediately sympathetic with the Tibetan cause and through contributians the school was started. But after the initial inspiration, much of the critical support was withdrawn, and as prices rose, the financial backing sank. No longer are the administrators of that school able to afford as much as an egg or a piece of fruit even once a month for the destitute orphans.

Last year our donation of $700 was able to provide resources for continuing the vital educational and health facilities at the school. Two great problems face the school this year. First is the kindergarten program and second is the Homes dispensary.

The Tibetan Homes Foundation offers a most challenging and rewarding direction for Maryville College's efforts in International Understanding.

The Free U. — Beatles to Women's Liberation

During the past week or so you may have noticed posters around the campus proclaiming the existence of a "free university" associated with UT. You may have passed over these signs as mere foolishness; or, you may have wished you could go but you were without time or transportation; or, like a small group of MC students, you may have gone ahead and tried a couple of the courses, just to see what was happening. If you happen to be in the first category, you're missing out on one of the best things around. The Free U. has a lot to offer--courses in everything from science fiction to women's liberation, from the Beatles to racism in America. Classes are completely open, without cost, without credit and non-compulsory. Dialogue is the primary goal of the Free U.--dialogue between black and white, man and woman, you and me.

Now, if you don't have transportation to Knoxville, then there's hope. Steve Horton has room for a limited number of people, going to classes on Wednesday and Thursday nights and Saturday mornings. Others are of course encouraged to take their own cars if possible to accommodate more students. For more information on when and where classes meet, contact Ron Jameson or Steve Horton.

The Free University is dedicated to all Students of Life, regardless of age, color, sex, creed or national origin--try it. It's a gas.

EDITORIAL

It appears that this country is preparing for war. If there is a war it will be one that nobody can win. I must agree with Senator Gore that it looks like our present administration is going to build a massive missile system and then it is looking somewhere to use it. The proposed ABM missile system is an overt arms escalation. Our enemies, real and not so real, have enough nuclear weaponry to return the entire world into ashes. The threat is real, all too real. Remember what some of us saw in the movie "The War Games" that was shown in a CIV last year. We all saw the horror and misery of the actors in the movie. If you can use your imagination, it may not take too much, in the place of those actors put your friends and family. The thought makes me tremble. All of our human pride is not worth the cost of one single human life. Is it not clear that we and our brothers around the world cannot afford another "World War"? Then why do we allow ourselves to build and ready more nuclear weapons. I cannot call an Anti-ballistic Missile system a defense system. It is an offensive system to counter another offensive system yielding the compounded misery and death of men and children.

It is time that we talked with our world opponents. It is time that we saw that our country's leaders used all of their energies to enact world dialogue. Could we trust our enemies at the diplomats table if they brought a club with them first? Are we to watch the sacrifice of Socrates happen again and then prepare for the sacrifice of the world's population. For what?

We must see that our elected leaders act accordingly to the basic foundations of our great country. We must also insure that they are well informed. Secretary of Defense Laird did not even know if the missiles could be disarmed once they were fired. He "thought" that they could. He was later corrected by the pentagon. They can not! During Senatorial questioning of Mr. Laird the most able Senator Gore asked him where and what button fired our arsenal. Senator Fullbright in disgust quiped that it was the panic button. That comment may stand as a testamonial of our present world situation.

In the name of humanity we must see that it can live in peace. For Christ's sake please stop it. Love and Christ have not died. Just look in your heart. "Blessed are the peaceable for they shall find peace."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

It is with gratitude that I accept the Charles Atlas Award. However, because of personal convictions, I must refuse the honor if Brian Childs supplies the "after" picture.

Dear Editor:

I, at least, am happy to accept my award even though it may appear strange to some that persuading people to apply at Yale should be considered a dubious achievement. I sincerely hope that such endeavors and recognitions will continue on the Maryville campus. Not only is it good for us to have our balloons gently pricked from time to time, but such journalism is bound to attract readers. After all, Esquire Magazine has been doing this well for years. The common format of the Echo and Esquire must be due to coincidence, do you not think?

It is unfortunate that some of the awards which were well-written and humorous (and therefore helpful) were overshadowed by others which can be seen only as a flight into juvenile petulance and maliciousness. I submit that a responsible newspaper has no business to make sly innuendoes about the private lives of its readers and contributors, nor does it have the license to hold its constituents up to personal ridicule, if it wishes to hold their loyalty.

It is ironic that the editorial in the same issue of the Echo spoke out for open and responsible dialogue in our community which badly needs the same. At the same time, the paper printed an unsigned editorial comment upon members of the community. It is tragic that a fine editorial which calls for a healing of the community was negated by a document which was in obvious places designed to wound.

Of course it is true beyond doubt that a community which cannot laugh at itself is a sick community. However, laughter which is designed to wield power over others and to hurt has no place in a true community. We need open laughter, the source of which is known, and which is designed to heal, not to rend.

It may be of academic interest at least to the anonymous contributors of the awards that professors, students, student officers, editors and their fiancees bleed when cut. When there is a good joke on most of us, we laugh. When someone takes a razor to us, the humor seems to escape us. As a result, the divisions in our community are widened.

I nominate the contributors of the awards for the Senator Joseph McCarthy Fair Play award.

There may still be those who after reading my plea will doubt my sincerity when I say that I found the reference to my pride in Harvard truly humorous and that I am not writing out of personal petulance. Taking my clue from the apostle Paul in I Cor. 5:1-6, I say to hell with you.

Dear Editor:

I have said to myself many times when I have picked up the Highland Echo that I must write a letter and defend some principals and ideas that have been brutally attacked by this "Yellow" paper. I now read that I have been awarded the Kill-A-Commie-For-Christ Award for Christian Brotherhood. Well, isn't that nice! This is apparently based on my support of the Viet Nam War. Since I do not claim to be able to express my ideas very well on paper, I would like to quote a man who can express them in a much better form.

On January 21, 1961, President John F. Kennedy said: "Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and the success of liberty. This much we pledge--and more."

In order to make good on this pledge, the United States Government has participated in the conflict in Viet Nam. It also found it necessary to enter into conflict in Laos. About this conflict in Laos President Kennedy said in a news conference held in Washington D.C. on March 23, 1961: "I want to make it clear to the American people and to all of the world that all we want in Laos is peace and not war, a truly neutral Government and not a cold war pawn, a settlement concluded at the conference table and not on the battlefield... But I know that every American will want his country to honor its obligations to the point that freedom and security of the Free world ourselves may be achieved."

And this is the situation that the American people now face in Viet Nam. I too want peace, and I would rather see it come at the conference table. But if we cannot negotiate an honorable peace, I would support ending the war with force--the same force that achieved peace on that fateful day of August 6, 1945.

And finally, I would like to know if the Highland Echo is going to present Dwight D. Eisenhower, Winston Churchill, General de Gaulle, and the millions of men who fought in and supported the Second World War with the Kill-A-Nazi-For-Christ Award.

If today's peacenicks of Berkeley and Columbia had enjoyed significant influence a quarter of a century ago, would Americans now be shouting "Heil Hitler"?

Cordially,
Bob Eickelberg

Dear Editor,

Each year Popular Photography magazine publishes an annual of photographs that have been chosen as some of the best of the year. Also each year a group at our college put together a collection of photographs which in the past has been a beautiful illustration of just the opposite extreme. I'd like to examine why our yearbooks have had so much trouble following Popular Photography's lead.

Look at a person with a great vocabulary. If this person proceeded to write a novel and this novel turned out to be bad, would it be any surprise, seeing that this person had little knowledge of how to group words into sentences, could not express hiw thoughts clearly, or worst of all, never really cared much about writing novels and had no idea what a novel was?

What it amounts to is this: If books are written by people who know words and how to use them, why shouldn't photographic annuals be produced by a person who knows photography like the inside of his darkroom? And then there is the matter of many wasted dollars to be explained. Above the cost of publishing a yearbook, anywhere from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars and more is spent each year to have pictures taken by "professionals," including the two bucks a head each person must pay if he wants the privilege of having his picture considered for publication. The way to plug this bottomless pit is simple: By investing two to three thousand dollars in cameras and darkroom equipment the cost of taking every picture in the yearbook would be no more than two hundred dollars at the most. This investment would pay for itself in two years and would show profits thereafter. Photography isn't difficult or expensive, the pros just like you to think it is.

Things are complicated, however, by a few useless traditions, one being the practice of selecting the yearbook editor from the upcoming junior class. To require the editor to be a junior makes little sense, but to choose the best qualified individual with the fair and square democratic process is a farce beyond belief. Editing is Photography, Period. To look through piles of pictures, to delegate 3 pages to football and 1 to tennis, and never dirty one's hands with developer and hypo is as far from creativity as one can get. Let's scrap this

Spring Et Al

Well, Spring is here again, threatening me with turning of fancy. It always happens. Trying to ignore instincts doesn't help because they have the upper hand. Such a miserable business. In the first place, WHO'S GOT TIME FOR THAT SORT OF THING, and anyway, one thing the world has enough of is babies. But my point is that, after millions of years of young amoebas', young slimes', young fish's, young lizards', young early mammals', young apes', and finally young men's fancies turning to thoughts of love (etc.), it all gets a little boring.

Sometimes I yearn for my youth when my hormones didn't care, and I knew from nothing; but those days vanished along with my Roy Rogers ukelele. I remember the first girl ...godwotamess. She was about a half a year older. The latter situation at that age, equivalent to interracial marriage in our society. (But I certainly would have let my daughter marry her.) It was nice. I constantly felt like I was walking around in tennis shoes with 8" soles. I didn't even mind when the kid in my Botany class threw water all over me. (I think if that happened today I'd passively resist.) Then, just when everything was going good, she moved, got married, and had a kid; (in that order) in a matter of about a year and a half. At the time, it upset me, but now I think it's funny: in a sadistic sort of way.

But back to the business of Spring et al. With the advent of warm days, cool breezes, THAT smell in the air, and feeling like walks after supper, the mortality rate of pinned, engaged (or even worse) couples is really going to climb. I see guys walking around with stars in their eyes, saying, "At first I wanted to be free, BUT NOW, I've found HER!!"...myself included, of course. Everytime I get into it, I think everything's going to be O.K., and everytime I come out of it, my mind is a continuum of four-letter words and "I'll never do THAT again." ha ha. It always happens, and I can never stay on the wagon long enough for anything to sink in.

BUT THIS SPRING IT WILL BE DIFFERENT!!! People will be dropping like flies all around me, but I will refuse to succumb! I must... Idonnowhy...it just seems the most logical thing for a true pacifist to do. (you know what else all is fair in along with love, don't you?) This year, my English notebook will NOT be covered with big psychedelic letters spelling "Marilyn" or someone. I WON'T sit in the girls' dorm watching The Beverly Hillbillies until eleven o'clock just so I can be with her.

Nope, Not gonna do anything like that this year. I'm just gonna wander around feeling like the last soul on earth, gazing pensively at beautiful sunsets, but I'm NOT going to sit and wish someone would find me. I'm just going to wish there were some middle ground between being all tied down and being lonely. Maybe pingpong or golf.

Hell. Catch a falling star, and you either get burned up or squished, depending upon how big it is.

is this you?

I am opposed to the Viet Nam War (and any such war that is not based upon defense of our country). hit but usually miss system of literary committees and classes committees and get back to photography. A picture is worth ten thousand words; anything more is redundant and anything less shouldn't be in a yearbook in the first place. A yearbook staff should be one thing: photographers (and those who wish to learn the art of photography). Organization men should be out forming a local chapter of Rho Rho Rho or campaigning for fewer beans in the chili, not playing with a multi-thousand dollar yearbook.

The yearbook, as it is run now, generates so little interest that few people ever want to work on it for more than one year. This strange lack of enthusiasm is really hard to understand. The excitement derived from looking through stacks of pictures and selecting a few can only be compared to a fun-filled afternoon of watching the grass grow.

Things don't have to be this way next year! This matter need not be studied for months or years to determine a need, either. The research has been going on for years and the sad conclusion has been conscientiously published in the form of annuals (making no reference to any yearbook yet unpublished). If the All-College Council were to act now the small group of photographers and interested individuals (a handful is all that really puts together a yearbook now) could break ground immediately and start preparing for next year. Is it worth the trouble to start a system that would be creative and self-perpetuating to replace one that has shown itself to be wasteful and artless in the past?

It has been said that the yearbook is the junior class's present to the senior class; if so, let's stop this long list of booby prizes.

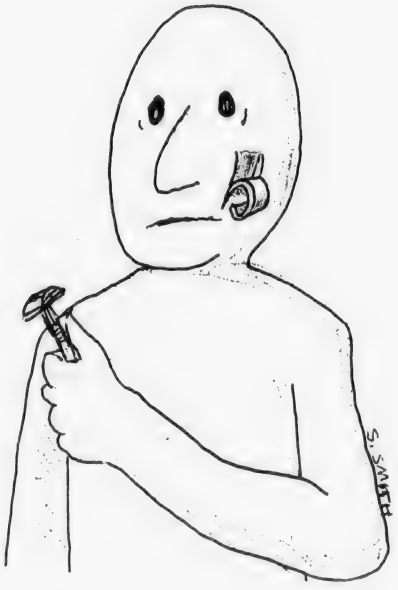
JAZZ CONCERT — Review

Maryville College had its first concert by the newly formed Stage Band, under the direction of Mr. Stallings, and, on the whole, it was a good, hardhitting sound which gave the audience an enjoyable evening. For a first concert, it was surprisingly good. Along with the band played the Warren Gaughan Trio, composed of Warren (piano), Ron "Beef" Black (drums), and Dan Rhone (Bass). To say the least, it was very good.

The band had many things going for it. The selection of music was mostly of the "jazz-rock" style, mainly by Neal Hefti. It has a smooth, hard-hitting jazz style with a rock and jazz beat, and it's the kind of music which would (and did) appeal to today's audience. The tempos and interpretation which go with the music were well done, and the musicians knew their charts well. The band had very good improvisation on the whole, although there wasn't too much of it. Mack Bettis did a real fine job on the trombone in two songs, and Jim Buxton, in the small parts he had by himself, did a real good job. Warren Gaughan had some also, but we'll consider him later.



The band's biggest problem was that they couldn't stay together. This was partially due to the fact that the band played in sections rather than as a whole, but this will come with time. The biggest reason for the untogetherness was the band's stage arrangement. I realize that the fact that the trio had to play by itself in part dictated the arrangement, but, it would have been an easy matter to arrange them all to one side, since the entire trio is classed as "percussion" and would be together naturally. As it was, the saxes couldn't hear the brass, the bass trombone, bari sax, and string bass, which should be grouped together since they carry the bass, were instead spread all over the stage. The staging created other problems, too. The trumpets couldn't be heard because the louder, most often too loud, trombones were stuck right in front of them, thus blocking out the trumpets to a degree. The sax section was not distinct enough, and I could never pick out the tenors because they were stuck behind the altos and bari, though when I really heard the saxes, they sounded pretty good! If a non-professional musician can give advice to this stage band on staging, I would say put them in three rows, saxes, trombones, trumpets, percussion to the side, bari sax, bass trombone and bass fiddle near each other, and see what happens.

The strongest sections were trombone and percussion. The former was too loud for the band, and, ideally, this means the band should play louder. In this case, though, I don't think the band can play much louder yet, so the trombones better cool it. No one can criticize the percussion section, and this brings us to the trio.

It was great! Warren Gaughan stole the show with his improvisations, with Ron Black a very close second. This is not to slight the bassist either. Although Dan Rhone didn't improvise, he laid down a good, solid bass line, at times lost in the other two lines, but there all the time. Warren did a masterful job on all the songs, so you can't pick out one and say that was his best. I think "Take Five" was probably the best of the lot, for not only did Warren shine, but Ron put in the best of his solos, and the bass was in there all the way. Warren isn't a Bassie in style (no white band or man could be), but he has a definite style, and it's good. I don't know enough drummers to put down what Ron's style was, but I liked it.

All in all, I would say that if you missed this concert, that's your tough luck! It was good to say the least, excellent for a first time. I hope the outfit gets all the support it needs, especially financial, since it could use many more charts, mutes for the horns, and a vibraphone, which adds much to any band but especially a jazz band. My hat is off to the band, the trio, the members therin, and Mr. Stallings, it was a good job. Do it again!

Collins Chosen for Crossroads

Terry L. Collins, sophomore, will spend the summer in Africa as part of Operation Crossroads Africa. His support is one of three projects of Hope For International Understanding.

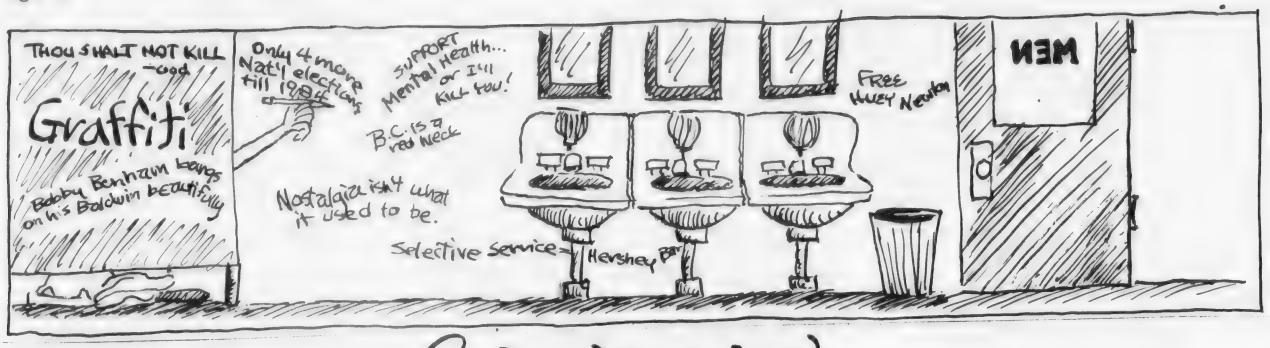
Terry, an art major from Chattanooga, hoping to share and learn culture, said, "I hope to absorb a lot about African art while I'm working in Africa and to give my art experience in exchange for another. Most of all, I want to understand how and why I express myself as a Black American artist."

He will have a five-day orientation session at Rutgers University in New Jersey, and will leave New York for Sierra Leone, West Africa, June 27, returning to the states August 30.

Several of his paintings were recently displayed at the Hunter Gallery of Art in Chattanooga, Tennessee, along with an exhibit of paintings by three members of the faculty of Fisk University.

Other participants from MC have been Diana Lynn Drake, now a senior, who went last summer, and John Noel and Carol Pusey the summer before last.

Operation Crossroads Africa was started in 1958 by Dr. James H. Robinson, from Knoxville, to expose American college students to Africa. Since then, nearly 2000 men and women have participated in 28 countries.



Interview

Facing a decision regarding your vocation? Dr. Carl Cox from Library Services at the University of Tennessee will be in Thaw Hall 209, May 1, 10 a.m.-4 p.m. to interview or provide information. The library profession often has been misunderstood to be an ivory tower but has changed its image almost as drastically as the world has changed. Libraries include not just books, but recordings, tapes, films, maps, pamphlets, newspapers, journals and magazines. The profession offers jobs as administrators, catalogers, public service agents, reference and research personnel, subject specialists, and many others. Librarians may choose school, public, college, university, or special--commerce business, law, medicine, or government libraries.

Recent figures state 10,000 to 20,000 trained librarians are needed now, and the shortage will increase. An estimated twelve positions are available for every graduate.

The basic requirement is a bachelor's degree and one year in an accredited library school leading to a master's degree. A broad, general background is valuable, and many positions also specify a subject specialist. A doctor's degree is especially helpful in the area of college and university teaching or as director of libraries.

The pay scale is not lucrative; however, salaries compare favorably with those in allied professions, such as teaching and social service.

Editorial

Few people realize the far-reaching consequences of pulling out of Viet Nam. Fewer, it seems, understand which is the threat of staying in. Many who look at the problem of war look at it with the eyes of ready-made morality, be they hawks or doves. But let's put aside for an important minute our own human fears, wants, and even morals, in the interest of humanity.

People fear death, so we fear killing, so, socially, we make a moral standard "killing is wrong." But, I suggest, everyone still dies, so let's concern ourselves not with how people die but with how they live, which is not very well in war. The charges to "stop killing" and "killing is wrong" are common expressions of love, but also of understandable human fear of death and as such have little to do with the real case for leaving Viet Nam.

I suggest the real case for leaving is that in Viet Nam the "free" world may be cutting off its nose to spite its face. Our biggest theoretical difference with Communism is its militarism and its stereotyping of men into khaki green statues. The longer we are at war, the closer we come to this same militarism.

Military government is much more inviting than it first sounds. It would seem to make men equal, feed the poor, make the Black man equal. These were the claims of the Bolsheviks; these are the claims of the Beaurocrat in today's ray of the labor-military block. But this "Heil Herman, do your job, and don't ask questions," would hardly be the free America of 1776 that many of today's so-called patriots give lip service to. Regiment or republic, that's the real question of Viet Nam.

How would military government work in modern international war? Probably like a football team with no back and no line. Each team gets in a truck and two opposing teams cram each other head on, and the one in the biggest truck wins ...if anyone lives to keep score.

We should not underestimate the ills of leaving Viet Nam, or the responsibilities involved with such a move. A free people would be given over to military takeover. Moving out would give a shot in the arm to Peking, which has often shown intentions of spreading its own militarism to other parts of the world, a government founded on rebellion and patriotic anonymity. All Asia would for many years be in danger of military takeover. Leaving would mean serious morale problems in this country and the free world.

Most of all, pulling out of the Nam would have to mean change. Jobs would have to change, training would have to change, attitudes would have to change. To pull out of Nam without making changes would be not only dangerous for the world, but useless, as we would soon be in war again, this time a defeatable country.

So here is the mottley crew of pacifists, many looking for arguments and "facts" with which to wrap their wants and fears, many with honest gripes, such as low economic groups, men of draft age, all raising their disunited voices for change, Change that strikes fear into the heart of every honest man.

Maybe the country would not take the change. Maybe man must kill or be killed. But who will ever know unless someone makes a real try.

More than likely, a military stereotyping government in 1984, or on the other hand a falling apart of the country would be only one more wave in the ocean of history. Yet if we now could bypass such a step, mankind might be one small step closer to a day which has no need to hurt or control his interdependent neighbor. Is life a team sport or must men contend with each other as well as nature?

Dear Editor:

Each year Popular Photography puts out a photographic journal; however, comparing a magazine to a college annual is somewhat ridiculous. Mr. Mara writes that a yearbook should be nothing but photographs. He is partially correct. However, he fails to mention any form of organization for these pictures. Without necessary copy and layout, sheer chaos results. Here is where you must decide whether you want a book with a message, or pictures of the year in review. Each two page spread in this year's Chilhowean took at least one and a half hours to draw. Multiply this times 144 pages and quite a few hours add up. Even the most excellent photograph, unless properly placed on the page can become mediocre.

Secondly, I took scads of pictures--not because I had nothing better to do on Sunday afternoons--but because only when a staff has piles of pictures from which to choose are they able to select a photograph that catches the essence of an event. We did spend over $1500.00 on photography, in fact we spent exactly $1660.74, of which $1062.00 went for class pictures, and you paid that (in case you have not, please do so by May 1st). Only $598.74 was spent on film, photographic supplies, and developing done by Mr. Spears. We took almost a thousand pictures, and used about half. At the going professional rate of three dollars a pic, this is roughly three thousand dollars. I can hardly believe that we were wasteful.

As for Mr. Mara's mentioning an investment in photographic equipment, I have these two questions. Where will the money come to buy this equipment? The Chilhowean presently runs on an almost deficit budget because we put out a book for $5.00 that costs $5.40. There is little money left in our Treasury to purchase cameras. As for getting the money from Anderson, face it, the Development Office has the most abominable camera on campus when it comes to taking really good pictures. Then if we do get the cameras, etc., who is

New Breed of Soldiers

(Editor's Note: The following article was written for CPS by a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army, who served in an American base and is now on his way to Vietnam. Names have been changed for obvious reasons.)

To me, a bona fide member of the officer corps, it appear that there is a new type of individual within the army. He is most often associated with the enlisted ranks, but he also exists in the lower ranks of the army's "elite."

There remain the elements of brutish unreasoning young officers, drunk with power, raised in an atmosphere of war and glory-hunger. Yet there is a new element: a group of draftees and enlistees who have become officers for various reasons and are in the army to do their service efficiently, with a minimum of arbitrary "order giving" and, most important, with a conscience.

During my tour of duty on a southern military post, surrounded by Wallace-ites both on-post and in the surrounding countryside, taunted by militarists of all ranks, I had the pleasure of associating with a great many of this younger generation of officers.

Many were sickened by the Vietnam war. Some actively supported both McCarthy and various underground groups in their home towns and on a nearby campus. Smoking marijuana was normal, despite the awful military punishments incurred by officers for drug use.

Why are the individuals serving what they seem to abhor, especially as members of the "oppressive class" of the military? No single answer is sufficient. There are questions of conscience, whisps of duty, fears of prison, hopes of changing a system rather than destroying it; a melange of individual motives, as many as can be found among equivalent members of the enlisted ranks.

What matters is that these young officers have brought with them into the service a new individuality, a questioning rather than a blind answering - in short, a conscience.

A few examples might best illustrate some of these people. There was Lt. Jackson, who was given a letter of reprimand for running a McCarthy campaign in his office and utilizing mimeograph machines to print up posters.

At a drug abuse lecture the commanding officer passed around two joints to show the soldiers what to stay away from. He got back three.

Lt. Eastman was called into his company commander's office for some business. The commander, another lieutenant, asked why his hair was so long. He replied, "Because I like it that way." The commander flushed.

"Well, get it cut."

"Is that an order?"

"Yes."

"Why?" asked Eastman.

"Because I want it to be," the commander stated.

"Why?" He never got it cut.

Another officer flew a Viet Cong flag over his house in a Southern town for two weeks before anyone asked him about it. It was the next door neighbor. "I thought it going to do the work? Are you going to be willing to work around the yearbook's deadlines? Can you take a week out from your classes in October to do the Classes pictures? Mr. Mara, I asked you to be on the '69 Chilhowean's photographic staff in September, and you declined because you had too many other things to do.

Thirdly, a cast of thousands can not put a yearbook together. There should be no more than 20 on the staff, and 10 should be on the classes committee. Communication is impossible in a large group. The yearbook is a junior class project, and juniors should have the first opportunity to work on it.

I suggest, in conclusion, that we all wait until May 7 (the Books may be here by the 1st), and then if the general campus opinion is that the new Chilhowean is carrying on the tradition of artlessness, and wastefulness, and is a booby prize to boot, as Mr. Mara so aptly labels our annuals, I will lead the committee for policy changes in the Chilhowean's compilation.

Dear Editor:

Does anyone know that there is a difference between a student recital and a junior or senior recital? Do you know that student recitals, especially, go not only unattended but unacknowledged? The Fine Arts Center sits down in the gully--that odd building between the Chapel and the 7-hole of the golf course, across from the science center. Exciting things happen there, and it's a shame they usually go ignored by the greater part of the campus.

In an attempt to introduce the campus to part of the program they might not know much about, with the possible addition of luring more of the student body to its activities, Delta Omicron would like to run a series of articles about the Fine Arts Center and some of the things that go on there. First, let us of Delta Omicron introduce ourselves. We are a professional women's fraternity (yes, fraternity; it comes from the Greek, not the Latin frater: brother) organized for the purpose of advancing women musicians. We must have high academic and music averages, and we must show some proficiency at performing. At Maryville, we must have a major in music or one music course plus applied lessons and membership in a music organization, such as band or choir.

In our first article, we would like to suggest that the campus is missing a lot of talent by not attending the recitals that happen about this season every year. Junior and senior recitals usually draw a token audience made up of music majors, marked by the white slips of paper they clutch in their hands through each recital, to turn in for attendance requirements, plus family and roommate. Each performer must present the recital he is presenting as part of his training as a performer. That he has such a meager audience disappoints him, and seems like a waste of talent.

Student recitals involve probably as many non-music majors as regulars. They present a variety of ensemble work in addition to the usual pianists and singers. Happening E hour on designated Wednesdays, they also need an audience to give the performers the experience of molding something besides empty seats.

A come-on to get an audience? Yes, but please be taken in. The Fine Arts Center is part of the campus and available for more than just art and music majors. Why not take advantage of it?

was the South Vietnamese flag," he replied.

An officer was court-martialed for questioned loyalty because he asked for a three-day pass to attend the love-in in New York last Easter.

In many ways the new officers reflect the mood and conscience of the younger generation.

SCOTS SWEEP BRYAN

Saturday, April 12, Maryville swept all 17 first places to roll up a 118-23 triumph over Bryan College of Dayton, Tennessee. Harry Robertshaw again led the Scot assault with 16 1/4 points. Distance runner Dave Wiley ran away with the two mile run in 1:43.6 after a narrow victory over teammate Bob Cooper in the mile event. John Leibrock, after winning the high jump event, romped to an easy win in the 440.

The Scots coached by Howard (Monk) Tomlinson, opened its season April 3 with a narrow victory over Berry College (Ga.), 73-72. The Scots showed a very strong field performance as Dennis Shockley won both the shot-put and the discus events, Gary Mace won the javelin, Don Hickman the triple jump, and John Leibrock the high jump. The Scots' Dave Wiley and Bob Cooper took first and second in the mile run, and the three mile run, while Steve Zerwas and Henry Hastings took first and second in the 880.

The Scots' second meet with Emory University and Georgia S.W. was cancelled because of rain on April 5. On April 7 the thinclads lost a heartbreaker to Centre College (Ky.) 74-71. "We just haven't come around yet in our running events," said Coach Tomlinson. Harry Robertshaw paced Maryville's scoring with eleven points, and Dave Wiley added ten.

The team runs Milligan College at home Thursday, April 17, and the University of the South Saturday, April 19.

BASEBALL VICTORY

The Scots tasted their second victory last week, defeating St. Clair College of Michigan 11-5 in the second game of a double header.

Gary Reagan belted three hits and drove in four runs, and Dan McKinstry drove in two more runs with hits. Freshman left-fielder Mark Johnston helped put the Scots on the board by slamming a 2-run triple in the 1st inning and a double in the 3rd, widening the Scots' margin to 9-4. The Scots added two more runs to the score and easily swept over their competition.

In the opening game of the double header, St. Clair left the Scots with a 5-1 loss.

The Scots' '69 season opened March 25th with a loss to Mt. Union College, 7-4, followed by three more defeats. The 7th of April brought the Scots their first win as they beat Centre College in the opener of a twinbill, 3-0. They were defeated in the nightcap 7-6. The Scots lost a doubleheader here against Northwood Institute on the 8th of this month. Their record at the end of the St. Clair game stands at 2-8.

The Scots travel to Milligan for their first away game on Saturday, April 19th.

Ethel Ann to be JYA student

Miss Ethel Ann Scruggs, sophomore art major from West Memphis, Ark., has recently been accepted by the Junior Year Abroad program to study overseas next year.

Ethel Ann's choice of study is the Free University of Brussels in Belgium.

The Free University, so called because of its belief in libre examen of philosophical and religious questions, serves 9,000 students. Courses are taught predominantly in French, with an increasing number of courses being taught in Dutch.

Ethel Ann chose the Free University of Brussels because of its location in the "center of the European art belt" and for its reputation for student involvement in world affairs. She feels that "it is important to be concerned and to broaden your education to include ideas and problems of other cultures, other peoples."

Language is Ethel Ann's biggest immediate challenge, as she contemplates all those interesting courses taught in French. She also recognizes that as a JYA she will be expected to "have an awareness

BRIDGES MUST BE BUILT

No man is an island entire of itself.
Every man is a piece of the continent--a part of the main.
If a clod be washed away by the sea
Europe is the less
As well as if a manor of thy friend's or thine own, were.
Every man's death diminishes me
Because I am involved in mankind.
Therefor never send to know for whom the bell tolls--
It tolls for thee.

There is a contradiction in our community. How can people who profess a concern for man exist in a fragmenting academic-social community and make but only vain attempts to understand or to reconcile their differences?

They can because too many of the decisions made by the administration and the faculty are based not on far-sighted, rational policy, but on a social attitude based on emotion and a fear of change guaranteed by accepting the reality of free and inquiring students asking sensitive and demanding questions about their institution.

I begin to see through the confusion of semantics, the energy of emotion and the aspirations of spiritual unity an unwillingness to commit ourselves not to the often meaningless expression of love for all men, but to the harsher and demanding reality of love of one: a concrete, established relationship between two people.

We fear this relationship because as a community we do not have the integrity of character to commit ourselves to its demands. It is easy to care for the Blacks, the Vietnamese, the poor, but it doesn't get any of us emotionally involved in what I am talking about. I am talking about Love. We are effective and we really love only when we give of ourselves, our hearts, our love to ONE. Not masses, not a class, not the Negro: "Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, you have done it unto Me."

What kind of faith in the validity of our community do we have if we are not willing to take the gamble to allow freedom of action, to assume that students are rational, sensitive creatures who can accurately and sincerely verbalize the demands and forces of their culture?

There are large gaps in our community structure and lately it has only been students who have been talking about the existence of these gaps. Students have been asking serious and demanding questions of this institution and we

Idle Words

Ancient Greece and Rome are not the only communities with their own epics . I found this interesting document in the pages of an ancient volume in the library. As it is untitled, I simply call it the Epic of Maryville College. Original author is relatively unknown.

Tom Marston

BOOK I (fragment)

Oh sing, Ghost of the past, the song of a dream.
Of the men and the minds of the past give me power to praise
And exalt to their well-earned thrones, these leaders of men!
For who can deny that those founders deserve all just praise,
Or that Anderson, Lamar, and Robinson builded a dream?
Then guide thou my tongue as I sing, great Ghost of the past,
As I sing of the hard times and poor, that have clouded the way
(Have clouded the dream and the hopes and the aims of these men),
Of the smallness and feuds of some now, who would see Maryville Grow!
Know, I speak of a dream that is lost, maybe dead, this dream
Of the Christian ideals, and of love, and of truth, for all men.
When Strife entered onto our Hill, speaking her lies--
This o'erpowering Strife, creator of ill-deeds 'twixt men--
Where then were the good men and brave, who would combat this foe?
Like a mighty old oak which when hacked on will sway "fore it falls
So our college appears to be swaying--a sign of its fall?
Dissension there is, and ill feeling 'twixt mentor and staff;
And with students hard feelings towards all who would pilot their lives.
They have lived, and have loved ere they entered our broad gates of truth;
Now they feel that they know, for themselves, how to govern their lives
And with callous impatience reject they the ways of the past.
Who will I sing of, to whom will I tender my praise?
Where are the heroes, the men of who would people my song?
Is there no mighty warrior to bolster this swaying old oak?
Who will step forth and reverse the fell tide of events?
A few still remain who have not yet lost sight of the way,
And in these special persons resides all the hope of our dream.
The greatest of leaders, the silver-haired searcher for truth,
Called Joseph J. Copeland--a man unafraid of the foe--
In him will we place all our hope for success of our dream.
And in fierce-eyed Dean Daniels, another whose course never sways,
A man who is free from all temptings of different ideas.
Another there is, one who fights for the growth of our school,
The Ivy-League Fleming (alas, he is leaving us soon),
Reconstructor he is of the buildings and ways of the past.
One too there is, Miss Walker of history class fame,
She has striv'n in committees for further tradition and lore.
These then are the ones whom we turn to in this hour of need,
The few who are able and willing to fight for a cause,
And ones to whom victory means not compromise or defeat.
So grant me now, Muse of the past, words and voice for my song,
As I sing to the world of the worth and the fame of these few.

(This is all that remains of the song. The original poet died in a fit of coughing after singing the last several lines.)

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To: Brian Childs
From: E. Fay Campbell

Please give me the privilege of a statement on the recent events here. When I was told that there was to be an editorial on Dr. Spivey's hopes for the small Christian college, I offered to say something about it.

My first comment is to endorse Dr. Spivey's position. We have some hard years ahead of us in these colleges of which Maryville is a good example. But public-supported education is riding into very rough waters, too. The vast expenditures in equipment, buildings, all kinds of "things" is not going to be handled easily. How is the state university to become a vital, free, prophetic center in a state that seems now to be drifting toward standing still and defending itself in its fortress? We will have and we must have public supported education in this large nation. But the private college is absolutely essential if education is to be genuine. It is not at all certain that the President of the United States will not become the puppet voice of the armed forces before many years. We seem to be moving in that direction. I submit that the Christian Church and the vital academic community are the only institutions in our culture that can keep us from a totalitarian state.

This brief statement of conviction leads me to some brief observations.

1) The college here at Maryville can become a community of learners, old and young. Our All-College Council is one of the biggest steps in that direction that could have been taken. I urge the faculty and students to select the strongest possible people to membership in the Council. It must not fail. It will take some time for things to happen. But we need to move ahead even if we make mistakes. Mistakes made in the right direction will help.

2) A community like this of young and old--some eager to learn and some eager just to be in college, some teachers just scholars and other persons who love to share learning with others--will always be in trouble. That is all right. The time should come soon, in my judgment, when the only rule in our handbook will be that we expect the members of this community to be ladies and gentlemen. We will need a Judiciary system to deal with those who do not want to act like cooperative members of a society. "The punishment should fit the crime." We do not need penalties. When a student fails to be a good citizen, he has no right to know just what he will pay for his crime. I have always felt that a system of penalties indicates that we do not know how many different people there are in this world.

Finally, let me plead with some members of this community. We should be profoundly thankful for the caliber of leadership we have just now. We could have been torn to pieces by this recent sadness. But the administration and student community--with some good faculty help--have been able to take criticism and try to find a new and better way. Let us not lament any longer the change of pattern in dress, hair, etc. That has happened very often in history. Let us accept the responsibility that the good Lord has put on this community. We can become a genuine center of vital life, intellectual and social. We will have to tighten our belts, as the editorial suggested, but a few years from now the world will have one more example of Community based on trust in God and respect for all men. Dr. Spivey has asked us to accept our job and be serious about it.

Fay Campbell

Dear Editor,

Please accept my thanks for your personal assistance in the publicity for my recital.

May I also use this medium to publicly express my appreciation and congratulations to John Ribble for his magnificent "poster".

ΦMA Growing

On April 26, the Maryville College (Xi Rho) chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, a national professional music fraternity, was honored by being chosen to present the formal initiation for a new chapter installed at Knoxville College. Also participating in the installation were members of chapters from the University of Tennessee, East Tennessee State University, and Carson-Newman College. Eight members of Xi Rho Chapter were also able to present the informal initiation to another new chapter formed at Chattanooga University on May 3. The Phi Mu Alpha chapter here at Maryville, only six years old, is one of over 300 chapters in the United States. The newly-elected officers of this chapter for next year plan to extend the activity of Xi Rho so that it will not only be a vital part of the fraternity, but will also project its experience and become a stronger part of the Maryville College Community.

and knowledge of current events, American philosophy, and the arts."

JYA's become some of America's best ambassadors, for in making their host country their home for a year and in adapting to a different life style, they are no longer tourists but are accepted as individuals with whom ideas can be shared and information about the two countries can be exchanged.

The JYA applicant must above all have a Christian concern for the world and a desire to learn from other peoples. Selection is made on the basis of grades, school and civic participation, and character. Proficiency in the appropriate second language is required of those wishing to attend school in Chile, Mexico, Brazil, Belgium, France and Germany.

Voicing the thoughts of probably all potential JYA's, Ethel Ann said, "I'm eagerly preparing for and anticipating this adventure, yet I'm scared of such complete independence and exposure to the world."

"Besides," she added, "I won't have anything to organize!"

Currently MC has three JYA's abroad and five students studying abroad under different plans. JYA's are Jackie Goler, Sierra Leone; Jim Daugherty, Berlin; Jim Spotts, Ibadan, Nigeria. Steve Horning and Linda Coyner are studying in Germany; Kathy Munson and Marilyn Martin, France, and Joel Tome, Colombia.

have been giving our answers to its questions, the few it asks. Instead of closing the doors, bridges must be built. The administration and faculty cannot call us insincere or impractical if they haven't tried to hold out their hands to us; to attempt to understand what we are fighting for and working to create. It is also up to them to make real the power of true community.

The bridges must be built from both sides. What I am saying is what was said at the beginning. "Every man's death diminishes me because I am involved in mankind." The one way I can become involved is to reach out in LOVE, not just to the mass, but to a friend, a student, a member of this community--to someone I have not reached out to before.

Let us remember what Paul said and taught: "Love is patient and kind; it is never boastful or conceited; it is never rude or selfish; it does not take offense and is not resentful. Love takes no pleasure in other people's sins, but delights in the truth; it is always ready to excuse, to trust, to hope and to endure whatever comes."

Does our community contain Love of One? Does it contain love at all? I have my doubts, for too often the essence of community remains for the student but an abstraction and disarming phrase used by the administration and faculty when there is nothing else to be said. We are willing to accept you for what you are; are you, the administration and the faculty, willing to do the same?

A NOTE from NIGERIA

April 17, 1969

Dear friends,

Hello from Nigeria. I am writing to answer a lot of letters and inquiries from you about my experiences and opinions--and through a newspaper is the most efficient way to express that. Excuse the impersonality.

Just to balance up your knowledge of what you know and what you do not know about me, I am studying at the University of Ibadan under a Junior Year Abroad program. Am taking a standard load of five courses for the year: English novel (very English), Practical criticism, Twentieth-century literature, African literature and Arabic language. My particular department is staffed mostly by British lecturers; I am not only studying under the English educational system but am also being exposed to the British approach to literature.

I suppose being in Nigeria is supposed to make me an expert on this crisis, the civil war. It is hardly true. (As a student I hardly feel the war at all, only when I try to control temper at the too frequent checkpoints.) Have exposed myself as much as possible to the propaganda from London Times, Time magazine, Radio Biafra and the federal government, as well as interviewing students from all tribes. But in all the confusion, I have long been leaning toward several convictions: 1) that secession was planned long before any Ibo massacres, 2) that American news media is narrowly and deliberately biased to the rebel side, 3) that the Ibo man was not entirely innocent of what happened to him in the July and September massacres of '66, and 4) that peaceful coexistence is possible even with a military victory.

Understand me, I am not trying to justify anything. I think that war is man's folly and waste. It is not real to him; it transcends the personal and puts man into a world he is not used to coping with nor capable of understanding when he is submerged in it. That situation is one in which destruction is used in its most exaggerated forms under the pretende of justice and human good. This war is particularly tragic in its stunting the progress of what has long been considered Africa's leading country.

I have just returned from hitchhiking around 1300 miles in Nigeria. I saw in Kano and Zaria (North) where Ibos had lived. I saw in Enugu (the capital of the former Eastern Region) where Ibos had evacuated their homes. All was looted and some of the city was bombed. Although the buildings were left standing, to live in them again would be like starting all over. But one would expect this from war. What I did not expect was that the important Ibo establishments were being guarded by federal military soldiers, that many Ibos had returned and were beginning again, that in the North, Ibo property was being protected and the rents from former Ibo hotels and apartments were being collected by government of the state for the owners when they returned. I was lucky enough to stay on the army compound at Enugu, which is on the war front although things are very peaceful in that area. I saw that the army was bending over backwards to get Ibos returned and back to normal in the 'liberated' areas. I chanced to see an Ibo interrogated by an officer for being a former rebel soldier; he was merely told to return every three days so they could keep an eye on him. The Ibos I saw were content to be back (and I was not under any military escort so what I saw was not stage-managed). But this mostly supports my fourth point, that peace is possible after this civil war. I was given evidence for my first point by talking with expatriates (foreigners) who were in the East or around Nigeria when the trouble began. The world seems to be ignoring the popular discussions of state secession which prevailed long before the massacres. Former lecturers at Nsuka (University of Nigeria) feel strongly that plans had been formulated for "Biafra" as far back as 1965. (Nsuka was a rebel stronghold.) The point that "Biafra" was not primarily as result of the massacres is also supported by the fact that early publications of Eastern Region reek with hints of secession. It is

A Nice Visit to Our Infirmary

Last fall, I remember, I had a most unique and ethnically interesting experience; Dave Rugh, who is my R.A., was feeling sort of bad, and he thought he might be coming down with the Flu. (This was before he lost his mustache in a tragic wart-hog collision.) So, just in case, my roommate decided to go to the infirmary for a flu shot. I began to get paranoid, so I finally ventured over to the strange little building. If I remember correctly, somebody had scribbled "abandon hope, all ye who enter here" above the door. I was greeted by the Littleoldnurse-whoneversaysanything(much). I walked into the office, and after a minimal amount of preparation, form-wise, she began.

I expected no pain, and got none when the needle went in. (She had an odd manner of jabbing once as a preliminary gesture, and then the real sticket came.) Suddenly, a few drops of the flu elixir drooled down my arm, and onto the floor.

She mumbled something about the needle. I looked down at my arm to see her holding the hypodermic in it still, and I thought, "Well, Steven, the old thing has broken off the needle in your arm." But she eased it out, and I found that that wasn't the problem. I hadn't had the full amount of fluid injected in me, due to the spillage.

The nurse said, "I ain't never had a needle leak on me before."

"Maybe it was me that leaked," I answered (which I thought was pretty clever, but she didn't react in any manner whatsoever, so I just watched the ceiling.)

"I'm gonna give ye another half-dose," said the good nurse of the south.

She rams it in again, preliminary jab and everything, injects, and slowly eases it out.

"You're a bleeder, eh?"

I looked and I was.

"Let me give you a band-aid."

How about a tourniquet or a transfusion or something equally dramatic? I thought.

But she still insisted on putting it on.

I was finally released, and as I walked out, I noticed that my band-aid-ed left arm refused to swing in accordance with the right.

I asked it why, and it answered in a rising throb, (which persisted for a few hours).

So I walked down the walk with almost a dose and a half of flu virus running around in my circulatory system somewhere. "It'll probably GIVE me the flu," I said aloud to the Sutton Science Center.

But as it turned out, I didn't catch the flu after all. And neither did David. It turned out that he just had a cold. Which I caught.

See Europe By CAR

Because the campus generally furnishes our best ambassadors and the foreign policy makers of today and tomorrow, Auto Europe has created a new program to stimulate educational travel. Appropriately Auto Europe is now providing a grant program to aid educators and educational travel abroad.

Now in force is a Student-Faculty Grant program which will materially reduce cost of any phase of auto travel overseas. The grants apply to the purchase of any foreign car for delivery abroad, the rental of cars anywhere in Europe and the leasing (long term rental) of any foreign cars overseas.

All bona fide Students or Faculty are eligible. Persons interested should send for Auto Europe's publication, the "ABC's of European Auto Travel" with a request for special details on Student-Faculty Grants. Both will be sent at no charge.

All requests for grants must be effected between now and June 15, 1969.

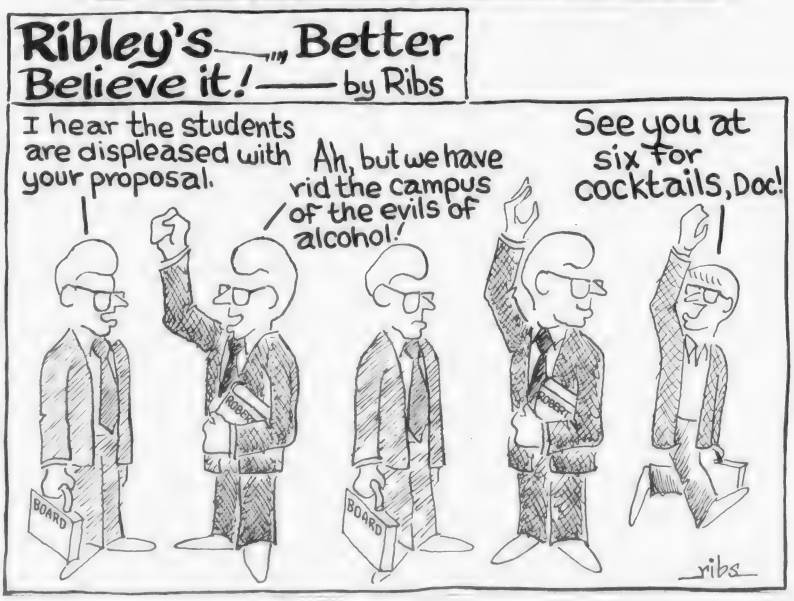
conspicuous that the rebels were so immediately capable of mobilization, implying that there had been a tremendous arms build-up. This is all inconsistent with the widely held belief that secession was a direct result of "genocidal massacres."

I cannot explain why Time and Newsweek appear to be slanted pro-rebel. They glorify the brave and courageous Ibo soldier to exaggeration. Starvation figures are also exploited; rebel soldiers according to British journalist are well-fed and the public which is pictured as "starving Ibos" are usually not Ibos at all, but minorities already suppressed under Ibo rule. News media seem to drown experienced reports like that of Congressman Diggs who not only discarded the theory of genocide, but recommended that the US not accept rebel propaganda so naively.

As to point 3: the massacres cannot be justified, but if one looks at the precarious situation before the riots, he can see that they were not spawned by genocidal feeling but by the great imbalance of economic power and the arrogance of those who held it in the North, the Ibo. The situation before the war can be paralleled to the way the US white majority has had the economic lever over the black minority. Only here modern "foreign" Christian Ibo minority controlled the system in a conservative Moslem Hausa society. One is tempted to say that one side was simply superior, but this can be disregarded after considering the background and tradition of both societies. The Ibo man, it is generally recognized, jumped at Western civilization; he is ambitious and quick to adopt new ways. He is also enterprising and capitalistic and to light the fuse, very proud. The riots can be understood as the climax of the slow realization of economic servitude, resulting in an irrational and a bloody swift kick, which took thousands of lives. I have had two Ibo friends here tell me in privacy that if injustice is always countered with vengeance, the Ibos in the North should have expected their fate. I have already talked of the fourth point, but another reason that I believe this war may end in unity once the violence ends, is that like most wars it is the burden of the common man, it is the common who loses his life, and it is the common man who under the influence of the prevailing mania, wants to fight. But the argument is not his; it is not even in his language; it is someone else's ideas and both sides rely on lies to keep fighting. And when it comes down to it, the common man just wants to live. Except for the ideology of the thing, there is little distinction in the lives of the people of nation of the same status. This is all to say that as soon as its leaders, those who started the mania, give in, the war and hate will soon collapse.

It seems I have said a mouthful; I could not go into much detail but people will write books on that after this is all over. If it seems I am radically pro-federal, I'm not--only slightly. But I wanted to do what I could to make you think about the side not favored by the American press.

A letter in Newsweek April 14 from a Mr. Muhammed Ahmadu of Ethiopia is also a typical and justified opinion of the Nigerian towards America's role in Nigeria.



I will leave here the last of May, immediately after exams and travel by ship and thumb through the Middle East and Europe and U.K. Will return late this summer --anxiously.

Sincerely,
Jim Spotts

If we are to be down on the violence that is hitting our campuses then we are going to have to be down on the violence of the Chicago police last August. We are going to have to be down on the violence in Viet Nam. We are going to have to be down on the U. S. Marines when they as neutrals put down an honest revolution in the Dominican Republic (who mentioned the American Revolution?). We are going to have to be down on what happened in Guatemala in 1954. The democratically-elected Arbenz of Guatemala wanted to nationalize a portion of United Fruit Company's plantations in his country, land he needed badly for a modest program of agrarian reform. His government was overthrown in a C.I.A.-supported right-wing coup. The following year, General Walter Bedell Smith, director of the CIA when the Guatemala venture was being planned, joined the board of directors of the United Fruit Company. (who said anything about dollars?) All bad.

Any person taking a gun into a academic community is a destructive influence. But first let's look at the frustration that we see in this kind of act. We cannot let him disrupt a quiet community, but we sure can't shoot at him, of course if he is going to carry a rifle in the first place he is going to shoot back, and what good would that do? We must be down on violence, but let's do it totally. But our side is on the side of the oppressed. Those who are the subjects of the violence of oppression are the ones we must help, non-violently. (oh, oh, there goes that Christian stuff again)

I got a very good letter last week, but I can't print it yet. It was anonymous, just signed The Observer. I would like to print it, but I must know who wrote it. I can withold your name by request but editorial policy of this paper must hold.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Maryvillians,

I have acquired a disease which is frequently fatal. Treatment is underway. To demand your attention or sympathy is not - I repeat - not my intention or desire. Those of you who know me realize that I am not the sort who relishes pity, pecan divinity, or other expressions of condolence. So, with as much self understanding as I can muster, I say that I am reasonably sure I have no personal motives for writing this letter. I am, though some of you will never believe it, writing because of my deep concern for this college, as its condition is reflected in a situation which only coincidentally concerns myself.

During the recent ruffling of our placid campus, the terms "Christian" and "community" nearly became battle cries; the one side asserting their existence in reality, the other postulating the concepts as a lovely ideal as yet unrealized. I heard all this and said little because I was weary of the repetition, even when the views being repeated affirmed my own. But now I have something to say.

In the two weeks that I have been hospitalized and otherwise out of commission, I have been visited, flowered, written to, cared for, and entertained by many students of vastly differend backgrounds and points of view. They have cheered me in the ugliest hours and expressed that "concern in action" which is the essence of Christianity. In all they have done and said and left unspoken, their sense of our "relatedness" has been apparent. A community based not on rules and duties but an awareness of mutual responsibility: I have seen it in these students, and I must repeat that they represent every conceivable sort of person on campus.

Editorial

The Highland Echo usually has room each week for a page of Sports, and usually this page has something on it. But the past few issues have had little or nothing about the Spring events taking place both on and off campus. The baseball, track, and tennis teams have not had enough coverage. The intramural events have not been written about. Sports has not been in the spotlight, and there seems to be no light at all. What has happened?

Ground is being cleared for the new athletic complex which soon will be added to this campus. The new facilities will enhance the department, and will attract athletes to the campus as students much more readily than our present facilities. The board of directors is confronted with the problem of providing more money for athletic scholarships. What does this have to do with news coverage?

The new complex is a waste of money without the interest of the community behind it. New scholarships are a waste of money without the community behind them. Athletic teams are a waste of money without the community behind them. The Sports page in the Highland Echo is supposed to bring the results of the Athletic competition to the community and stir the community into support of the teams. It has tried, but it depends entirely on cooperation from the athletic department and the community. Stories do not drop out of the sky--they have to be written. Statistics do not compile themselves--somebody has to do it.

There have been three contributing writers this season. Each has done what he could, but each has school work to do before he writes sports. What I am trying to say is this. We have not had the full cooperation of the athletic department this season. Whose fault that is I do not know, but I do know that writers have been unable to get material when they need to write their stories. We have not had full cooperation from the student body. Not only is the attendance at athletic events low, but the number of people showing interest in writing for the paper is frightfully low.

Will next year be different? Will the spirit shown by the community at the end of this year's football season carry over to the fall, or can the football team expect to receive the same lack of enthusiasm shown the past few weeks. We will only have the type of teams that the community generates, and we will only have the coverage that the community offers to help with.

What do YOU want??

letters cont'd.

Now I must speak of the faculty and administration, the other facets of our academic trinity. Except for the visits of Dr. Campbell and certain members of my own department, I have not received one card, one wilted tulip, one telephone call, or similar acknowledgment of my existence. I was told, via the student grapevine (as I have acquired most of my information about what's happening for the past three years), that I was prayed for at All College Council. Oddly enough, I was not at that moment healed. I am ashamed that my colleagues should regard this demonstration of sublime buckpassing as adequate expression of their Christian concern. Dear Maryvillians, God is here among us in our loving response to each other, or he is Nowhere, man. Either we are a community so closely knit that when a toe is stubbed the tongue feels a twinge, or our whole basis for operation is a blasphemy against "Christianity" and "community", two of the most sacred words I know and I am not a person who knows many sacred words.

I must reiterate my assertion that there is nothing personal in all this. If I were to get a bouquet of roses from every member of the staff (a horrible thought-decaying flowers now litter my apartment), it would not alter the fact that it was not until I got sick myself that I realized the college was sick also.

Please, adult Maryvillians, read and heed. Look at the students. They sneer when you call them Christians, but they can live the part beautifully. They smirk, disillusioned, when you speak of community, but they are capable of that warm interaction which is the concept's center. Recognize this potential and make a real effort to bring it to campus-wide actuality.

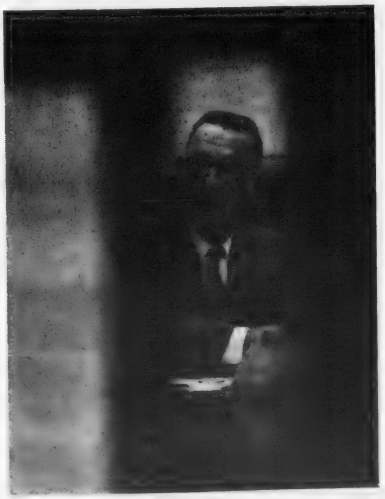
With warmest regards,
Sharon Matti

Experimental Softball

The intramural committee of the Student Coordinating Council has been busy with new ideas and plans for next year.

A new experimental concept of coed sports is being put into effect on Monday, May 19, at 4:00 when a selected group of six boys and 6 girls will unite to form a softball team. There will be 4 teams, one to represent each class, in the tournament. Freshman against Sophomores and Juniors against Seniors will be played on Monday, and Wednesday the 21st will match the losers and winners. The games will be played on the boys intramural field. In case of rain the games will be played on Tuesday and Wednesday.

This is merely an experimental idea but with good results a number of coed sports will be put into the intramural program next year.



Heading the freshman team will be Ellen Mehaffey and Jerry Cooper; Sophomores, Mike Barrows and Ann Whittier; Juniors, Alice Weber and Mack Bettis and Seniors, Mary Paddison and Bob Kusek.

Come on out and support your team and class on Monday and Wednesday. The more spirit, interest, and enthusiasm shown the better results for next year.

Besides, it might be fun to see your girlfriend slide into second base or throw a runner out at home from left field. Never can tell what some girls can do when it comes to softball.

Comment

After all the talk, confrontation, tracts, and demonstrations of the past few days, the question arises: What have we achieved? As demonstration photographer and observer, I went to all major meetings, listened, looked, thought. I think it's too early to get a clear idea of what has (and has not) been achieved by this activity. We must look to the future to tell us that. But I have many impressions from "Demonstration Week", and that's what I'm writing on.

First and foremost, the students showed they were concerned and responsible. No one can deny that. All that occurred had obvious student participation, and there were no irresponsible actions in any of the meetings. Even more than that, it was the first time students of all persuasions spoke out. Usually, the ones who speak are the liberals and the more-liberals, and this always bothered me. I wanted to hear what the "other" side had to say. Now they have found their voice, and I hope they keep them. Because we now have all sides talking among the students, the openness and non-consensus of the students is a challenge to all others. We agree that we don't agree on all things, so why can't the other segments of the community have as much openness and questioning?

The action the Board took in seeing the students, talking and listening to them, was the most positive thing that has been achieved around here for weeks. They were concerned, interested, and they wanted to hear our ideas. I don't know what happened the next time the Board met, but I do know that the spectre of the Board killing any liberal moves on this campus has become fainter and fainter in my mind. Either they are apathetic, which I seriously doubt, or else they are much more open than we had been led to believe, and they trust us, probably more than we do ourselves. They seemingly gave the ACC a blank check in regard to actions taken by the Council. Now the question arises: Who do we have to make concessions to? Always, it was the spectre of the Board in the back of our minds. Now, that has been proven to be unfounded, so who must we now make concessions to? And one more point. By meeting with the students, the Board acknowledged them as equals and as a legitimate power to be reckoned with in the affairs of the College. Paternalism is dead as a doctrine for decisions, and all have to acknowledge that. This includes not only faculty and administration who would like to paternalize, but also students who are willing to sit back and be paternalized.

If something positive doesn't come out of this (and don't ask me what that would be, for it's as much a feeling as it is an action), then we've wasted a lot of study time, lots of vocal effort, this editorial, and about eight feet of my film. Considering all things (especially the last), I hope that all sides and persuasions sit down, clear the clutter off the table, and start out fresh trying to make a community out of this place.

BOSTON MARATHON

On Monday, April 21, Dave Wiley became the first athlete in Maryville College history to compete in the Boston Marathon. Wiley finished the grueling 26 mile, 385 yard race from Hopkinton, Mass. to downtown Boston in a time of 2 hours, 56 minutes, 30 seconds, but was still 130th place in a record field of 1150 entries. The Maryville College junior and former Knoxville Powell High standout barely made it home in time to run against Carson Newman on Tuesday, April 22. Wiley, who holds M.C. records in the mile, two mile, and three mile runs, has been invited to compete in the Holyoke, Mass. Marathon June 8th. Good luck Dave!

Invitation Extended

The Maryville College Faculty Wives Club will honor at a reception Mrs. Margaret M. Cummings, Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Religion, who is retiring after 29 years of service to the College, and Miss M. Catharine Wilkinson, Associate Professor of French, who is retiring after completing her 50th consecutive year of teaching at the College.

The reception will be held in the Fine Arts Center Colonnade immediately following the presentation of "The Creation" on Sunday, May 18, at 3:00 p.m. in Wilson Chapel.

All students, faculty, and friends are cordially invited to attend the reception honoring these two outstanding members of the College faculty.

Dear Editor,

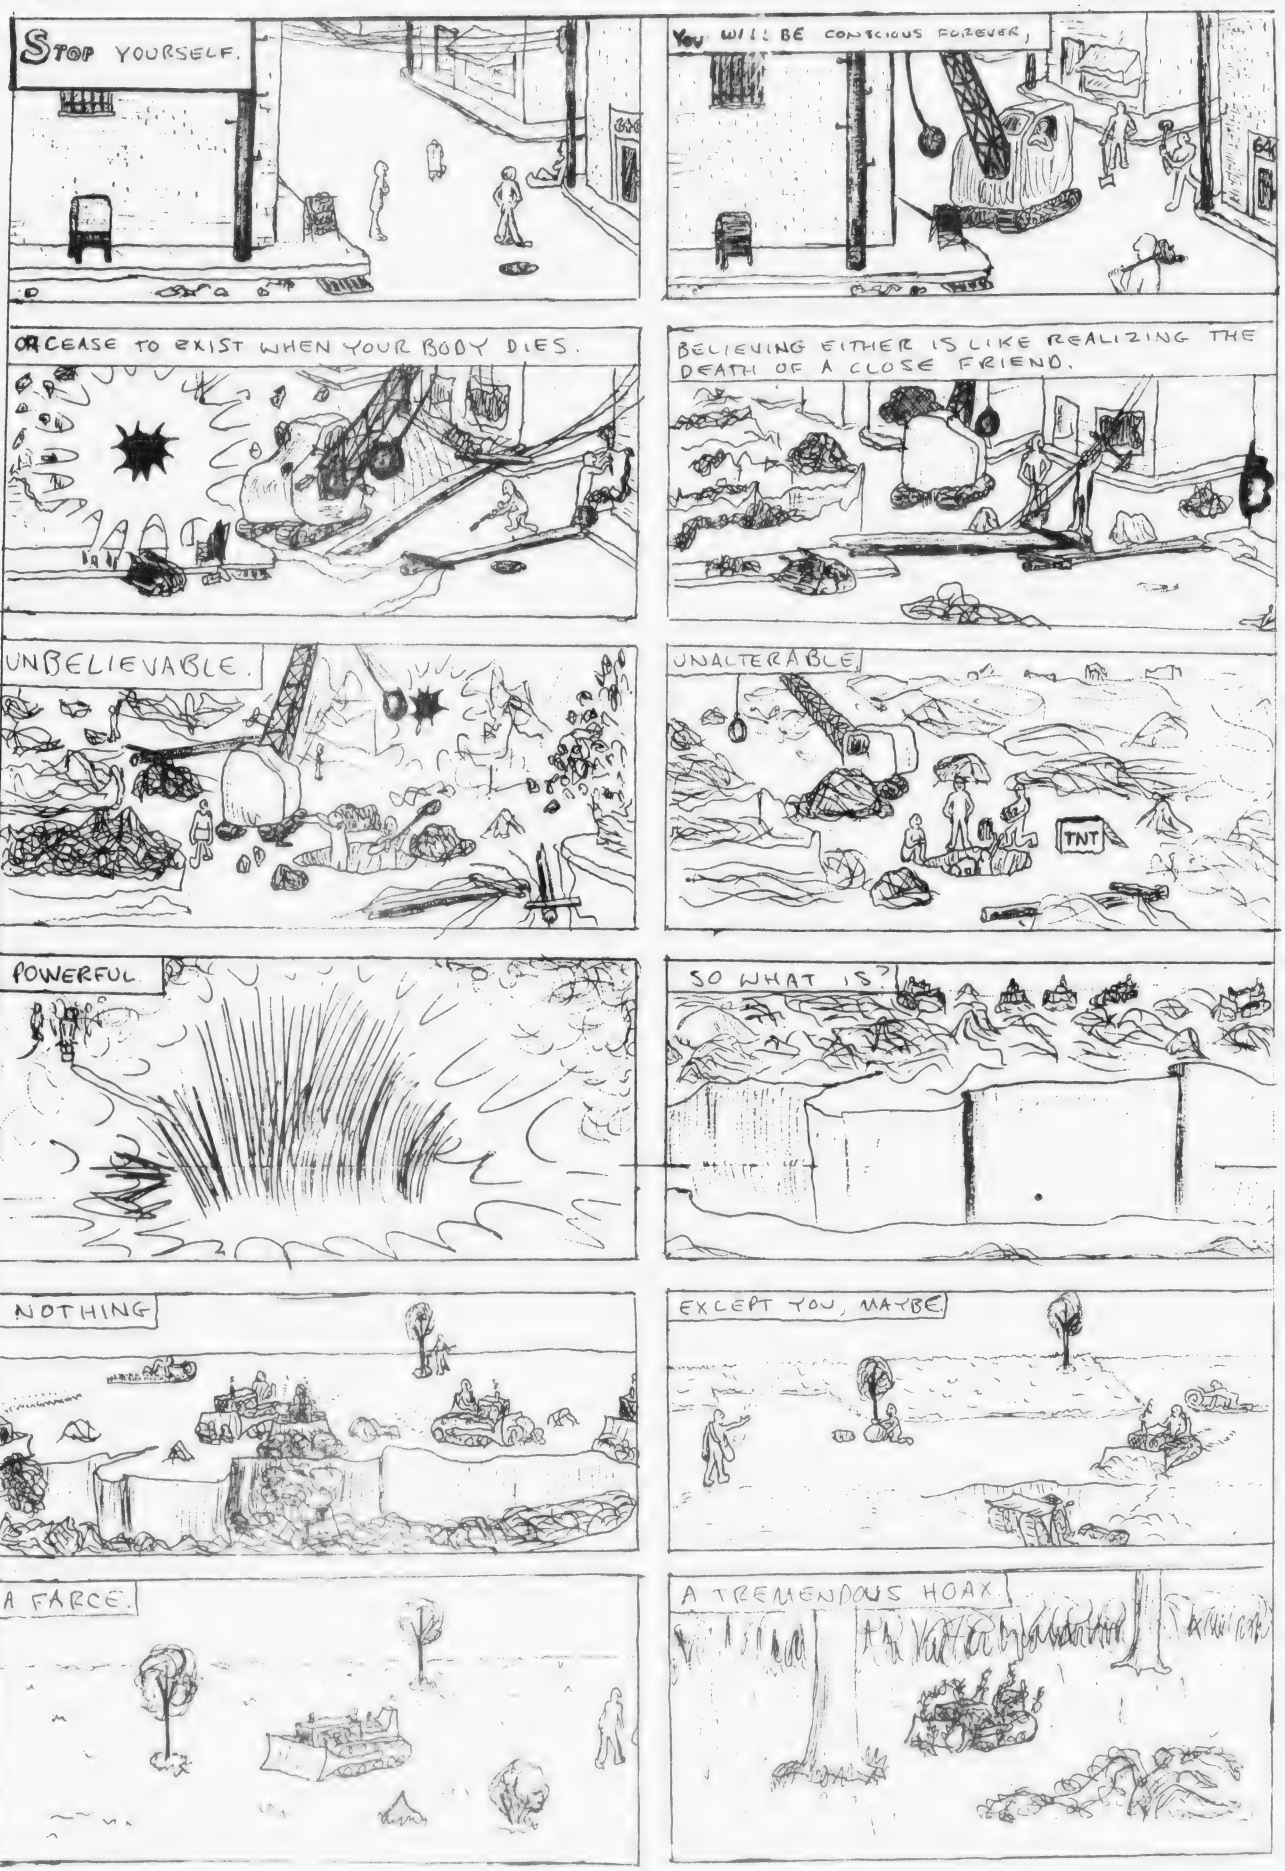
The wondrous day has finally arrived--our yearbooks are here!! To top off this perfect week I would like to congratulate Mr. Sharpe and also answer his letter to the editor 3 weeks ago in which he seems to have missed the point completely.

So there will be no doubts as to what I think an annual should and should not be, my thesis is as follows: (1) The yearbook should not be a junior class project. A float is a project; a yearbook deserves a little more class. (2) There's no getting around it, a yearbook should be organized around photography--good photography. (Yes Mr. Sharpe, to compare our yearbooks to a photographic annual is a bit ridiculous; such extremes in quality can only be contrasted.) (3) Photographic knowledge and experience should be the basic requirements for any yearbook editor (or staff member). The little black ballot box is out of place here. (4) The tradition that now governs how the yearbook is run should be plowed under. "A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds...."

For point number one I would like to ask why the yearbook has to be a junior class project? Why should it be any class's project? What if the yearbook had its own independent organization like the Echo or the societies? The annual staff could be a never ending organization with the permanent physical base of a well equipped darkroom, To be able to control the darkroom end of photography is so important that it can make the difference between a really good picture and a mediocre one. Why should we put up with average or poor photographs when we could easily have excellent ones? To quote a poet, poetry (in this case photography) is the art "whereby ordinary things should be presented to the mind in an unusual aspect."

The lack of good photography can be partly blamed on the editorship and its qualifications. An editor should know photography through and through and be the best photographer on the staff. The editor should know at least as much about the photographs he edits as the people who took them. The traditions that have allowed the editorship to turn into a type of electorial patronage have sadly stagnated the annual. They have fostered a system that has turned many people (including myself) away from the yearbook staff. Yes, I was asked by Mr. Sharp to take pictures for the annual and declined the honor. Why? Because ever since I developed my first roll of film nine years ago I realized that photography is more than just aiming a camera, but to spend the long periods of time in the ancient darkroom in the FAC developing and printing many yearbook pictures would be more than anyone could afford.

I could say more but I think this is enough to bring the question out into the open. As for this year's annual, its Great, its Fantastic, its a Work of Art. Mr. Sharpe did more than the average editor as far as photography goes and for this he should be given credit. Yet he still only scratched the surface.



To answer the questions that Mr. Sharpe asked in his letter I would like first to say that if a yearbook staff was made up of photographers drawn from the whole student body the number would be more like a handful rather than a "cast of thousands." He also asked whether I or anyone else would be able to take a week off in October to take class pictures. The answer is "no," because three-fourths of these pictures could be taken in April and May of the preceeding year which would leave only the freshmen to be photographed in September. This system would be able to cut the cost at least in half and could eliminate the long list of "Not Photographed" that always seems to find its way into our annuals.

What I want to change is a tradition, a "foolish consistency." Why do people join the yearbook staff now, if I may venture a guess? Because it's a nice thing to do, add another feather to their cap and puts them just a little more IN. I'm tired of nice little people telling me that a yearbook should not be photography and that it is very, very, very, important to have pictures well arranged on a page. Of course annuals are more than just pictures, but as it stands now good photography seems to be nothing more than an unwanted by-product. Five really good pictures just thrown on a page would beat those one-and-a-half-hour masterpieces that now go into our yearbooks.

I write this letter in frustration, not just my own but also that of at least half a dozen other photographers who would be more than glad to take pictures for the yearbook if only they had a good darkroom in which to work. If there are people who for some unknown reason want to arrange things, how about starting a flower arranging society on campus. They could have exhibits in the FAC and, who knows, someone might even take a few pictures of the best arrangments and put them in a photographic yearbook. (but only if they were arranged right). In summary: Pray for a Yearbook.

For those nice little organization men and wise, wonderful leaders with their infinite knowledge and insight who may chalk this letter up as so many sour grapes, I can only quote that Harvard philosopher (without permission I'm afraid) and say, "To hell with you."

Dr. Louis B. Wright, historian, author and former professor is scheduled to be the Commencement speaker on Monday, June 2, at 10:30 a.m. in Wilson Chapel. This will be the College's 150th Commencement and will officially launch the Sesquicentennial Celebration.

Dr. Wright, a native of Greenwood County, S.C., received the Bachelor of Arts degree from Wofford College, in Spartanburg, S.C., in 1920. He received his Masters and Ph.D. degrees respectively from the University of North Carolina in 1924 and 1926. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Dr. Wright has served on the faculties of the University of North Carolina, John Hopkins University, Emory University, California Institute of Technology, University of California at Los Angeles, the University of Washington, the University of Minnesota, Pomona College, and Indiana University.

He was a Guggenheim Research Fellow in England and Italy from 1928 through 1930 and a member of the research staff of Huntington Library from 1932 through 1948. Until recently, Dr. Wright was director of Folger Shakespeare Library, Washington, D.C. He retired after serving in this capacity for twenty years.

He has been Chairman of the Board of the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation since 1950 and Vice-Chairman of the Board of Directors of Council Library Resources, Inc., since 1956. He has been a life trustee of the Shakespeare Birthplace Trust, Stratford-upon-Avon since 1964.

Dr. Wright is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature and Arts of England. Other organizations in which he has been associated are the Massachusetts History Society (Executive Secretary); the National Geographic Society (Trustee); American Philosophy Society; American Antiquariam Society; American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Modern Humanities Association, and many others. He is a veteran of World War I, having served in the United States Army.

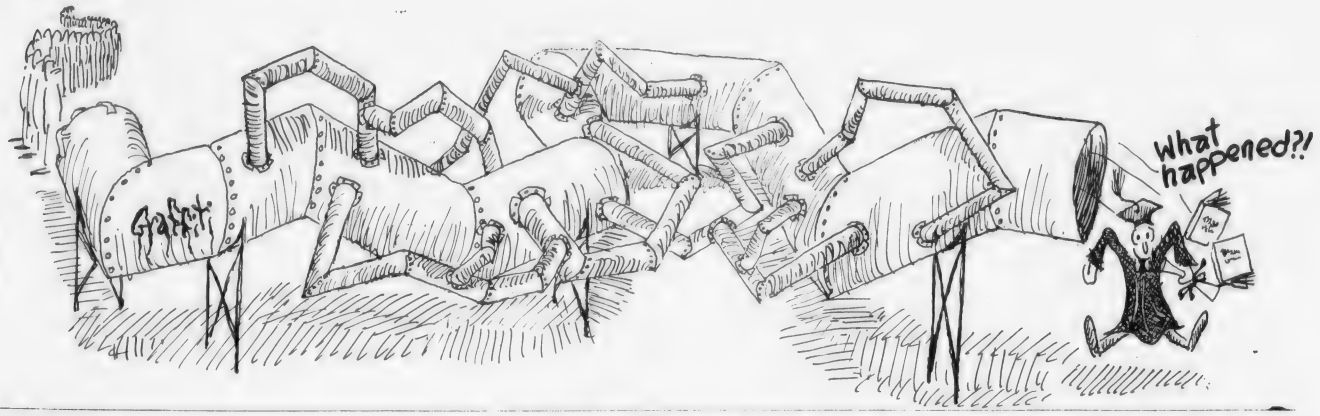
Dr. Wright has had several books published since 1935 on historical subjects and has also been editor of numerous items on American and English history. His latest work was "William Byrd of Virginia." In 1958, he co-authored "The London Diary, 1712-1721," with Marion Tinling; and in 1957 he was associated with Virginia LaMar in the publishing of "The Folger Library General Reader's Shakespeare Series."

Other works which have been published of Dr. Wright's were "Shakespeare for Every Man," in 1964; "Dream of Prosperity in Colonial America," in 1965; and "The Prose Works of William Byrd of Westover," in 1965. He has made many contributions to professional journals.

Dr. Wright was made Officer of the Order of the British Empire by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II (O.B.E.) in December 1968, and was awarded the Benjamin Franklin Medal by the Royal Society of Arts (London) on January 17, 1969.

I.A. Champs

After a month of review and warm-up questions, the team to represent Maryville College on the MACCI Instant Answers program has been selected. Captain of the team, which is similar to a College Bowl squad of four, is Bob Washburn, senior History major from Maryville. Serving as alternate captain is Mack Garner, a junior majoring in Political Science and a member of the varsity debate team, also from Maryville. Other team members are Robert Hitchens, sophomore actor and debator who is majoring in English, from Maryville, and Mike Montgomery, a freshman English major from Knoxville. First alternate is Jane Elmore, junior, from Oak Ridge, Tenn. Second alternate is Ken Murr, freshman, from Rockford, Tenn.



In the first round to be televised over Channel 10 in Color on May 31 at 2:30 p.m., Maryville College meets Milligan College. All matches are between Mid-Appalachian College Council teams. If successful in that round, Maryville will meet the winner of the Tusculum-Union match in the second round.

The program consists of rapid-fire questions requiring a quick recall within a 10 second time limit, answered by individual members of either team, plus two "in-depth" questions for each team which are worth 25 points each and represent a team effort to compile the answer.

Mrs. Robert D. (Lucy) Proffitt is coach of the Maryville College team. Arthur F. Dees, Maryville College Communications Coordinator is serving as judge for the series and Ken Kribbs, WEAG-Radio announcer is the questioner and master of ceremonies for the shows. The series began on May 24 and continues through the next eight Saturdays.

Since most Maryville College students will be unable to view the quiz team on television this summer, this writer feels that they should be informed about how the team has done in its three matches, which have already been played. In the first match against Milligan the team posted a 195-100 victory. In the next match Tusculum was made Maryville's second victim when the Scots won by 195-25. The stage was set for the championship match with Carson-Newman and Maryville won it by 75-50 to take first place in the series.

CONGRATS TO CLASS OF '69

EDITORIAL

I would like to express my thanks to all the people who have helped put this year's Echo together. I have had a great staff. I would like to give my special thanks to Ann Little who really has been the force behind making the Echo physically possible. Also I want to thank my editorial staff for writing like they have and especially to Mark McMaster for putting up with me. What has really helped this year is the support we have received from members of the community, the Echo thanks all of you. I sincerely hope that next year's Echo will be an improved Echo and a newspaper that all people will use as this campus's primary communication medium.

This has been an interesting year but only a formulative year. We still have a lot to do to open the community up. One of the year's low points was when the board of directors was here. The last meeting at Thaw Hall was a disaster. Two people of the so called conservative leaning were shouted down and mocked when they attempted to react to some of the points many of the students felt were important. Dialogue was gagged then. It really made the hope of community seem distant. But one of the highs of this year was in that same week, hundreds of Maryville College members showed their concern. What is next is to see that the ACC has the credibility that it must have if we are to have a community.

One more thing about dialogue and community (those two Maryville College myths). Is a community based on equality and responsibility? What happened to love, or don't we use that word any more. (see the letter to the editor from "a worried observer")

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mary,

I've been watching you. I've seen you fight with all your energy to correct student injustices. I've watched you devote endless hours striving to achieve changes to make your own position more comfortable.

Mary, pause. Look around. Focus your attention for one moment upon persons outside of yourself. Consider the conditions that dehumanize the "unaffluent" of this world. Those conditions more crucial to existence than the privilege to drink alcoholic beverages.

Mary, stop to question. Ask why it is that the maintenance personnel at this college are paid $1.30 an hour. Ask who it was that cleaned the mud from the walls and floors of your dorm after you frolicked in the puddles at "May Madness?" Ask what it means to be poor.

Mary, take the time to answer my questions. Tell me why it is that you preach equality and allow maintenance wages to be $.30 an hour below Student Help wages. Tell me why you can't accept the responsibility of your own mud puddles. Explain how you can advocate "Christian Concern" and deal solely with personal problems ignoring those of your fellow man. Mary, tell me where your true commitment lies. Finally, I ask, "Maryville, will your concern continue in its self-centered spiral during the year 1969-70?"

A Worried Observer

To the Student Body:

I have been at Maryville College for one year now and I have liked this school. I have found the classes interesting and the faculty good at their jobs and some even became my friends. This student body is the big disappointment of the beginning of my college career. It seems from their actions that some of them are lying, cheating, rotten scoundrels. Their main job is to find as much gossip about their fellow students and faculty as they possibly can. They don't care how much is truth or how much they hurt people just so they get them out of the way. These same students are the ones who back either silently or outloud the loud cries of the deception of their fellow students and faculty. They yell "Where is the Community?--it is individual responsibility and equality" and say it should be improved. While they are shouting, they refuse to abide by existing rules or standards, codes--state and local, and even how elections are run. They should learn the rules of behavior as followed and taught to them by their elders. This country, which I am proud of, has basic rules and mores that have long been established and it is the job of you students as future members of it to uphold these laws or work lawfully to change the ones you think are wrong. It is not your job to act as minority Mafia leaders to try and run everything just the way your little hearts desire. If you think that just because by disobeying flagrantly all the rules by which this country and this community that you will succeed in improving things for future students you are sadly misinformed. For many years people have tried this very thing and others have rebelled and killed it. I am asking all responsible and honest and patriotic (it's not a bad word) students who have heretofore listened to gossip and obeyed pressure or have been so silent as to be completely "out of it" to stand up and tell the gossipers, libelers--liberal, moderate, and conservative to shut up and start working for their "Community" lawfully or to "get the hell out of here!"

Dear Editor:

The ideal purpose and objectives of Maryville College, as presented in the catalog, provide for change and do allow individuals considerable freedom and liberty. The statement of purpose is certainly not restrictive or dogmatic. If anything the statement, "pursuit of truth in concept and in life" can lead to the opening of the mythical Pandora's box.

It seems to this writer that in a real sense this school provides a school environment which is semi-tailored for the individual who wishes to explore and discover. Individual differences do and will exist and this recognition is taken into account by the statement of purpose and objectives.

....recognizing that when differences and tension no longer exist, man ceases to grow.

With the preceding in mind, it appears to this writer that a community is not one based on "equality." It is one based on differences and distinctions. The important point for a community to realize is the fact that each person in the community is different and unique. After genuinely realizing that differences do exist, the next important point is that of affirming and practicing respect for different people.

The general community is characterized in society by different individuals who have various specialities and possess various goals in life with loose and tenuous community ties. We can expect no less or no more than this in our college community.

Thus, a community as I suggested does exist, but implicitly to expect widespread agreement or support on many secondary issues is just not wise. To expect widespread agreement or support on one or two basic matters may even be overly optimistic. We may reach majority decisions on some matters, but the intensity of the decision may be lacking or the margin of decision may be slim.

In a realistic sense a renewal or refocusing of energies and time toward understanding differences seems adviseable and appropriate. In this connection the emphasizing or reemphasizing of interrelationships between and among different groups and individuals seems likewise appropriate. By concentrating on these various relationships, unity and diversity might coincide.

If a consensus or community will is truly expressed, it is expressed spontaneously and freely.

Sincerely,
James M. Miller

To the Students, Administration, and Alumni - Help!!

Jiminy Cricket, Thunder & Lightning,
Here we go again,
Defeated by a lesser team,
Will we ever win?

My answer to this little verse is NO. No matter how much material M.C. baseball and basketball teams have, they still do not ever have a great season. For some of you people who do not understand what I am saying, I will briefly explain.

They, the material on these two athletic teams, is being potentially held down to a low level or degree by (you guessed it!) the man at the helm!!

I, as an athlete (previous to this article) and student of Maryville College would like to see something done to update this element of our athletic department in order for it to catch up to the rest of it, and also catch up with the school as a whole.

I personally feel that if the leader (?) of these two sports does not do something to update his style, then someone like the administration ought to wake up and do something about it. I have seen too many "good" athletes' attitudes ruined by the "mickey-mouse" style this leader(?) uses, and by his complete lack of player control, player - coach respect. I have nothing against the man, I personally think he is a great guy (off the competitive athletic field or court!)

It is really too bad to have something like this keeping other good athletes in these two sports from coming here, but don't kid yourselves-the players now wouldn't think of putting anyone else through what they've gone through. Athletes on most teams in the area already realize what's here in these two sports, that's why a few of them won't come here!

In high school, many athletes played for excellent coaches, and when they graduated, they were excited about the new and better coach they were going to play for in college. Here at Maryville it reverts back to a Jr. High school level - kind of disappointing!!!

I'd just like for a few people to think this over during the coming summer.

Jon Scarlett & many others!

HIU Announces Further Project

Six years ago the Fred Hope fund supported an Indian girl in her pursuit for an education in medical technology. Today, Parveen Kaul is a full M.D. working at the Ferozepore Hospital in India.

This year, the Hope for International Understanding Committee has decided to help another Indian girl with hopes that she too will be able to be an asset to the health situation in India. Daisy Charan Masik (Muni) is the daughter of semi-literate parents, and second oldest of seven children. Her family lives in Dharival, Punjab, India. Muni will be attending the Frances Newton Hospital in Ferozepore, Punjab for her training in Med. Tec.

We look forward to helping Muni and hope that you will want to be a part of this effort in International Understanding.

LETTER FROM NAM

Dear Editor,

I have been receiving the Highland Echo through the mail, and although I never really read it seriously until I found myself in this situation--Vietnam, I now read with interest what some of the students at MC think about the struggle, war, conflict in South Vietnam. What I have read over the weeks has prompted me to write what I feel on the subject as many have done back in the 'world.' Most of what I have read has been in favor of staying and settling for a 'respectable' peace so that the U.S. will not lose face, but I say that is a bunch of hogwash especially when N. Korea can capture one of our boats and then shoot down one of our planes and we do nothing about it. The U.S. has lost face a long time ago.

Back to my side of the story. I am in the Mecong Delta working out at a base camp called Dong Tam which this time a year ago plus a few months was a rice paddy. The maps do not have it on them as yet. At present I am about 45 miles from Dong Tam at a Fire Support Base Danger working with the 4 BN 39th Inf. I am not in the infantry but in artillery but I go out with the infantry to call in fire when they need it. Get the picture I am just like a gunt (infantryman). There is no way that you can go out on an operation and come back in dry. The elevation of the delta is below 5 feet at sea level.

Without going into much detail about what we do which is not my point here, I wanted to state that this is a lousy place to spend 12 months of my life and for what--so the Vietnamese can be free? This is hard to believe really. All they care about is where the next meal is coming from, how much they can take the GI for. They do a very minimum of the fighting and hardly ever go out to look for Charlie. People in higher places do not really know what goes on they take what a man with a gold or silver oak leaf tells them. They really never get out and pound the paddies. And when some big big shows up what a show is put on so that he will get a good impression which is usually not the truth. This is the same with the body count of VC killed. If U.S. troops killed all the VC as the figures say there wouldn't be anybody left to fight. This is the way they (CO's, BnCO's and higher officers) want it so that they can get good recommendations and more rank.

What you read in the papers is not the real story if you want that go out into the rice paddy with the leg man with his pack, ammo, C-rations, and mosquitoes, water and of course Charlie. This is a political war and if the politicians would get off their cans and do something maybe alot of American boys who now are men can come home. I am one of the oldest guys in my company and I don't think I am old yet.

Sure politicians and other people have ideas about what to do but nothing is happening to stop the war. I say again if some people were put in the situation where their life was on the line every time they went out, that $60 some dollars combat pay would not mean too much but they sure would want this mess to be over with.

There is a saying over here G.I.'s have put on their lighter and little articles they buy, "When I die I know I am going to Heaven because I have spent my time in Hell."

This may not be the best letter to write, but that's the way alot of fellows over here feel and not one I have talked to says that the U.S. should be over here.

G.I.'s have a saying for men in the Army who are all Army and saluting and that bit. They are called lifers. Myself I am going to spend 19 months in the army and then let them--whoever that is have it back.

Here in Vietnam wishing I was at M.C.

me and this friend of mine were sitting on a rock one day idly combing our beards when this sheepdog with this long white hair falling down over his eyes and combed neatly around his ears. we felt a sort of kinship right off. well, as it turned out i knew this sheepdog for four years before i finally got him to concede that my hair could be longer, if never whiter, than his. about that time we went our separate weighs; but just before we said peace i sat down and sang a little song i'd made up about him. i thought it was funny and so did my bearded friend (remember him?), but the sheepdog wasn't overly happy with the whole thing so we sat down one fine foggy evening and talked it over and under, just him and me. somewhere early in the ensuing conversation we grabbed a bystanding bull by the horns and gave it a good heave or two, but the bull and we soon tired of that little sport so we backed up against a nearby log and stoked up our pipes. he accused me of not loving dogs or apple pie or school flags or mothers. i told him, on the contrary where would people like me be in this forest if it weren't for all the mothers prowling the streets; and school flags are even handier for burning than the white-blue-and-red ones. but what he was really accusing me of was not loving dogs (he never cared for apple pie himself). i set him straight on that quickly enough. i said, as we all know dogs are man's best friends, next to mothers of course, and i happen to be very fond of them. it is only when a dog wags his tail at me and tries to make me his master that i get ticked. dogs are great as friends but as servants they aren't worth a damn, and i told him so. i blamed him for trying to screw me by throwing a saddle of responsibility toward him on me. that was a bit hard for him to hang onto but he promised to try. having unsettled that issue we went on to a different pasture.

he told me i was one hell of a singer and i agreed, but i said he didn't understand the beauty of a funny song. he liked love songs. well, they're all right in their place but there are other things that need to be said too, and from here it looks like either laughter or burn baby. he was also miffed because i kept writing these songs about him and he wanted to know why i didn't write one about my bearded friend (you'd forgotten him again!). i tried to tell him that as long as he insisted on looking upon himself as a sheepdog and not just as another friend of mine i'd keep singing about dogs. now my friend with the beard could be the subject of a great many songs, but with all his hangups he still looks on himself as my friend and not my dog. i admit he's quite stupid at times; he messes up a good opportunity to build something substantial by making a bunch of little bitches around his drinking water, or artificial substitutes thereof, and social diseases of a non-venereal sort. he lets slip by opportunities to rid the forest of distinctions between men and beasts but he wants what they have there's a bigger issue at stake waiting to be burned than the difference between the tail a sheepdog wears and the tail my friend is after. we're all capable of growing hair so why worry which way it's parted?

my friend the sheepdog was happy to hear such criticism from he-who-walks-on-two-legs, as i was happy to hear him talk without wagging that damned tail. dogs have a bad habit of that. i'm still not certain that i really do love dogs, but his hair's a little longer and mine's a little whiter. so i retired from the singing business, along with my bearded friend, but as i left i did notice steve smith perched on a rock mumbling into his beard and he promised to sing you some funny songs, and i think he will

THE BLACK AND M.C.

What is the Black student's role here on the Maryville campus? Are we to be tokens, added to the tradition of the Ivory tower of Maryville College for nine months of the year, only to be cast out by the white students as 'niggers" for the summer months and 'uncle toms' by our friends at home? Just what is the price of integration? What is integration? The presence of nine Blacks among seven hundred Whites? Sure, it's a start but how much do we have in common? "How are you?" "Fine today, and you?" "Oh, I'll live." And you call this living!? Man, you are really dead to what's happening! Look at the outside world. It really blinds you to see the effects of riots. You know why it's blinding don't you? It's because the integration on the Maryville College campus isn't real at all--it's a play world. So, we're all friends together, all happy together, all beautiful together.... Man, this is the only way to live but it isn't real--it only lasts for nine months; then where does it leave me, the 'nigger', the 'uncle tom', the 'token'? If you are going to have integration then go all the way! I'm a 'person' too, but for three months of the year I'm....

Attention: Book THIEVES

Sixty-two books..that's how many books the library has found missing this year when students requested them. There's no way of knowing the total number missing until summer inventory.

Our library has open stacks - this means the students can get their own books rather than waiting for a library assistant to retrieve them. The library has to trust the students to check the books out, but the system seems to have broken down this year. The Horizon Book of Cathedrals, The Beatles and three other fairly expensive books were lifted from the display tables.

Cost to our library...each book, $5.15 processing fee plus the price of the book. Sixty-two books - $356.50 processing alone.

The students need those books. We're the ones who are being hurt. To those students who have the books, please shove them through the book shoot at the end of Thaw at 12 o'clock at night if you don't want to bring them back. The library and the students need those books.

What is your country about, youth?
Is it about war, riot and assassination?
Or tell me youth, is it about freedom?
What is your country about, youth?
Is it about hate, murder, and demonstrations?
Or answer me, youth, is it about
peace?
What is your country about, youth?
Is it about drugs, sit-ins, and racism, youth?
Or tell me, youth, is it about freedom and peace?
Think, youth, what is it all about?
Love or hate? War or peace?
Right or wrong? Life or death?
Can you tell me, youth? Can you?
I wish you could. For soon, youth
You will guide this vast country.
This country which stands for so much.
For what is right, and for world
peace.
But most important, for freedom.
What will this country be about,
youth?
When you take over the reins.
Oh yes,
Youth, what will this country be about?

OBITUARIES

1969 Chilhowean, age 8 months. Succumbed of unnatural causes after a long illness. It suffered from blurry eyesight, poor contrast, and failing organs and died May 7, 1969. It had no surviving relatives.

BIRTHS

Born to a proud sophomore class a beautiful new yearbook editor of unknown weight on an obscure day in April, 1969. Tradition has it that this person is chosen by God to put together one completely nonphotographic yearbook. In the past the editor has usually been a person who was good at ignoring the facts and who was able to put together the poorest annual in a most inefficient way. This newborn babe could change this pattern if she really cared and knew anything about photography. By investigation it has been discovered that the money for a darkroom could be made available if our newborn editor were concerned enough to go see the right people (like the President of Timeless Traditions), and if a repayment plan could be agreed upon (such as through the activity fee). But then our babe would be lost in a darkroom. If only The Annual came before The Editor.

All Hail God's Chosen One! All Love, Honor, and Obey. Amen.

This year's Stinking Shoe series saw Alpha Sigma dominate in all events. Flagball and basketball brought traditional excitement from both societies, and the powerful Sigs revealed their strength by bombarding Kappa Phi 14-8 and 10-1 in softball action. Winning pitchers were Carl Fisher and Rod Parry, but credit must be given to the players and coaches of both games. All Sigs will return for next year's action except for Redman, who led Sig in complete victory this year. The members of Alpha Sigma are in hopes that more enthusiasm will be expressed by the student body for such traditional athletic competition as the Stinking Shoe series.

RED and WHITE FOOTBALL RESULTS

With Dave Garner and Don Hickman on the injured list, Steve Gordon took over the quarterback position for the Scot offense in the annual Red-White game played here on Saturday night. Gordon had previously been playing a defensive position, and had had only two days of practice at QB. He led his unit to a 54-43 victory over the defensive unit of the Scot team. The game was scored as follows:

Offensive (Red)
6 points for a Touchdown
1 point for a First Down
1 point for a Completed Pass

Defensive (White)
1 point for an Incomplete pass
2 points for stopping a 1st down
3 points for an interception
3 points for a fumble recovery
6 points for a touchdown

The defense took an early lead on two fumble recoveries and a pass interception, and managed to add to their score in other plays to hold the lead at the end of the first quarter, 17-6. The Red offensive unit swung into action early in the second period with John Klein and Rich Snyder running for two consecutive 1st downs, and a TD on a pass from Gordon to Robertshaw. Red took the lead as Gordon ran for two more first downs, 18-17. The play climaxed as time ran out in the first half with an incomplete pass which broke a tie and gave the White a 25-24 edge.

The defense repeated its action in the 3rd period as they took a 35-26 lead, foiling two 1st down attempts, picking up a fumble, and intercepting a pass with a fine play by Bob Ciccotti. Red slowly caught up and took the lead with a second touchdown on a pass from Fordon to Joe Kozell, 40-36. The offensive unit managed to maintain their lead for the rest of the game. With 6:41 remaining Gordon was relieved by Bill Cochran after playing a very strong game, and the Red unit ran to victory, 54-43.

Here's how the scoring went:

Offense
Touchdowns - 3
First Downs - 27
Completed Passes - 9

Defense
Incompleted Passes - 8
Stopped first downs - 4
Interceptions - 2
Fumble recoveries - 7
Touchdowns - 0

COMMENT

Seeing as this is the end of the year, I am starting to look forward to next year and the things I would like to see done during that year. The following is my "I wish" list for the next year.

I wish that...

coed dorms would be studied and set up on this campus.

bacon, tomato, and lettuce sandwiches would be abolished.

smoking was allowed anywhere on campus.

hours for girls would be abolished.

a teacher evaluation and standards committee would begin working.

our maintenance crews got a decent salary.

no drinking rule at all existed.

improvement were made in the older residence halls to match the rising room costs.

Willard House would be converted into an informal lounge, study area, and HS center for students and faculty (and let administration people in too, just to prove we don't discriminate!)

more people of conservative leanings would make themselves heard on campus issues.

there were more town meetings.

the Elias would receive a commendation for gaining the respect and admiration of Carnegie Hall.

paternalism were dead on this campus.

men could participate, legally, in athletics without their shirts on.

we could wear shorts in the library (what's wrong, does it distract the librarians?)

the school had a decent darkroom for the yearbook, paper, and private use.

open hours were established for at least twelve out of every twenty-four hours in all dorms.

there were places on this campus where a boy and girl could study together after 11:00p.m.

more scholarships were available for black students, and that more blacks were admitted, even if they did not totally meet our admissions requirements.

Dr. Stine would grow a full length beard.

Miss Matti were coming back because she can communicate with the students.

I could think of all the other things which I want done at this time. There is only one more thing which I wish at this time though. I wish that students, administration, and faculty would realize that we have a stake in this college, a big one. We've made a start at improving this college, but we have a long way to go. Next year, the ACC cannot sit on what gains we made this year toward making sane, enforcable and respected rules and attitudes for this campus. We must re-examine all aspects of this community. Students should not assume that they know all the answers, but everyone else should listen and think about what students have to say. If they do that, then maybe Maryville has a chance. If they don't, I hate to think of coming back for my 30th class reunion to the Maryville Extension of the University of Tennessee.

Liberals Invade M.C.

Recently the conservative leaders of the staff and student body at M.C. have become alarmed at the increasing strength of a radical minority which is making loud demands for a true "equality" within both the college community and the community at large. The particular area that this "communist" (to quote a noted authority) organization is working in is that of equal treatment of all mankind in Pearson's Dining Hall. A spokes man for the group said that the movement was inspired last fall when one of the housemothers unexpectedly showed up for breakfast. The spokesman cleverly told reporters that "Miss Ware was running around like a chicken with its head cut off." It seems that she was trying to find some real coffee and some warm, palatable toast to give the housemother. The spokesman can verify these discriminatory practices because he was sitting at the same table. He said that the whole table received the benefits of this special treatment, but that "I felt such a strong empathy for the students who were victimized by the usual practices that my digestive system was upset, and I couldn't enjoy my meal any more than usual."

Another member of this radical group emphasises the terribly unjust practices that occur when guests eat in the Ware House. Being a prominent member of the community, he had occasion to sit with one of the visiting speakers at the meal. Many problems come to surface here. First, why do adult guests on campus get a free meal, but when prospective students visit for a weekend, they must pay? And why don't young and middle-aged visitors have to stand in line?--They have to at expensive cafeterias--is someone making a feeble attempt to cover up for all the shortcomings? But the real clincher, as stated by the radical concerned here, was that "for once I had a napkin that extended all the way across my lap, and that didn't tear when I unfolded it. This is really an ironic practice, because when I eat with guests, I put on my Sunday manners, and so actually have little use for a good napkin."

Another serious problem, which though a concern with the entire student body, is not a point of attack of this radical organization (not being a problem of unequal treatment). Nevertheless, this opportunity should be taken to say something about sloppiness in the serving line--of which all the servers, of course, are not [illegible]

To get back to the issues raised by the equality fanatics: the basic question seems to boil down to a credibility gap between students being told that they are equal members of the community and actual practice. Aren't students, the leaders of tomorrow, worth a little extra trouble? And in addition, aren't all men possessive of certain inalienable rights? When will this bigotry end? The radical organization (disclosed recently as the TRO) demands that something be done NEXT YEAR! There won't be many people here, so maybe it will be easier to get used to trying harder a little bit at a time.

A.C.C. AND THE P.F.

As the students gathered on the steps to meet with the hooded demigods of uniformity.

Emotions ran silent as the wind gathered power and force and broke with a rumbling and an accusation of mistrust.

Then someone yelled, "Respect!
that for the elders (but not for you)."
Darkness covered the scene to prevent more violent attempts.

A stately figure rose commanding the mass gathering.
Rain from the heavens fell to drown the sorrows and lose his words.

ACC SWINGS INTO ACTION

To maintain an open communication between all members of the community and the All College Council, an account of the ACC workshop held last week follows.

The first session began with a discussion of the basic principles and problems in college government. Functions of the Board of Directors, faculty, administration, and students were restated.

Coordinating Council's functions were re-evaluated. It was decided to drop the name coordinating and refer to each sphere of interest, i.e. Social, Religious Life, etc. The structure of these councils were clarified. The committees were advised to consider the implications of their decisions.

The second session began with a discussion of an article concerning academic freedom, and a town meeting may be held in the near future in which to discuss that topic.

ACC will meet twice a month in Anderson Conference Room 304. Committee reports are to be made available a day in advance so that proper changes can be made in the agenda for the meeting.

Town meetings will be held once a month in the theater. It will be a public forum, not an action happening. Further information can be found in the September 4th minutes of the ACC.

CARTLIDGE RECEIVES DEGREE

David R. Cartlidge, Assistant Professor of Philosophy and Religion, received his Doctor of Theology degree June 12 from Harvard University. This degree required the study of Hebrew, French, Latin, Greek, Aramaic and German. As an additional language, Dr. Cartlidge studied Coptic. His dissertation was "Competing Theologies of Asceticism in the Early Church," and was an exploration of the various theologies which supported ascetic practices in the church to 300 AD. The Echo staff extends its heartiest congratulations to Dr. Cartlidge.

SIGMA MU CHI PLAN ACTIVITIES FOR THE YEAR

In an effort to begin planning this year's activities in time to get something accomplished, the Student Married Couples group has scheduled its first meeting of the year for this Sunday evening (September 14) at 7:30.

The group, also known as Sigma Mu Chi, will meet at the Cartlidge's home at 115 Goddard Street to organize committees and discuss proposals for coming activities. Some of the suggestions already made include picnics, parties, hiking and camping trips, an ice skating party, and a theatre party.

FOOTBALL DEBUT HELD SATURDAY NIGHT

Next Saturday night, the 13th, All Scot's Night will be held on Honaker Field at 8 o'clock. The cheerleaders will be on hand to teach any new cheers. The band will be there to arouse spirit, not to mention the majorettes will be demonstrating too. The football team will be introduced, and some plays will be run to acquaint the students with how our team works. All students are urged to come and support the Scots, who have their hopes set on a really great season. Students need ID's. Faculty are invited, and all townsfolk holding season tickets will be admitted. Honaker Club members are also invited.

Brochures giving a detailed review of this year's team will go on sale from the Honaker Club in the near future.

COLLEGE GOES MOD

The new academic mace and College flag were presented and dedicated during the convocation Monday night. The 30-inch high, aluminum and cedar mace is the symbol of Maryville College's institutional authority. The 5x8 orange and garnet flag designed by the Traditions Committee will fly on top of Anderson Hall...under the American flag.

Actually the best part of the service was Dr. Spivey's talk. If anyone was able to get across what the purpose of education is, he did it. And as concerned students who are very interested in the growing dynamicism of education, we sincerely question the validity of a wooden stick that's sole purpose is to be carried at the head of formal processions. There is one alternative, and that is to suppose that this Mace has the same metaphysical attributes as the polished slab in 2001 Space Odyssey, and could our learning be similar as the ape's worship ceremony in that same movie. But even Dr. Spivey said that learning is also in regressions.

EDITORIAL

Dedicated to the pursuit of giving us some sort of meaningful pattern for our lives, Maryville College begins its 150th attempt. Whether this bid for the liberation of our minds will be accomplished in such lofty ideals as the student handbook so beautifully puts forth, is a commitment solely in our control. Whether we choose to involve ourselves in that nebulous concept, community, where learning becomes a mutual broadening of our intellectual and emotional perspective is optional. The total college experience does not just happen. If Maryville College is disappointing, it is us that makes it so. No record hop can be dull with 300 kids; neither can a football team lack enthusiasm when the stands are packed with screaming fans. It is easy to be critical, and some criticism is good---God knows Maryville is not perfect --but the fact remains that we are here to learn, and not all knowledge is academic.

ECHO WELCOMES YOUR COMMENTS

The Highland Echo will try to be a moderate weekly. If at any time there is disagreement to the Echo's stand, letters to the editor are welcomed. They are not to exceed one double-spaced typewritten page. Anything longer will either be considered a feature article, or will be edited to proper size. All letters must be signed, although the author has the right to have his name withheld. The deadline for all letters is 9 a.m. Monday each week, and they are to be put in Box 2879.

Anyone may submit a feature article which has pertinence to campus events. No feature may be longer than two double spaced typewritten pages. Again, the size of the paper forces us to this limit, and longer features may be edited. And by editing I do not necessarily mean censuring. The deadline is the same as for letters.

New this year will be a page totally devoted to campus and off-campus events. All scheduled meetings of All-College Council, societies, intramurals, etc., will be reported. Area movies, including those in Knoxville, will be posted. Events in which we can participate at UT will also be listed. It is hoped that the student will keep this page for weekly reference, and adjust his personal schedule accordingly.

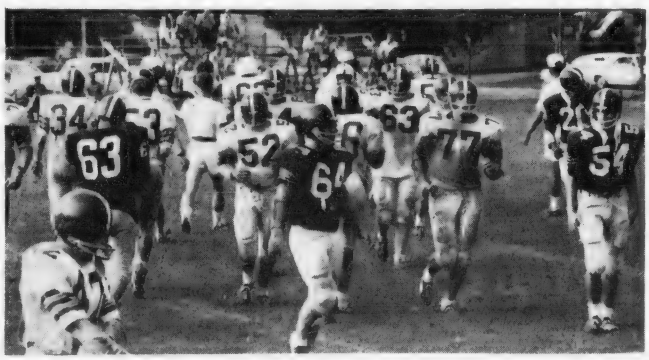
"HERE COMES THE TEAM"

THE MC FIGHTING SCOTS

The Maryville College Sesquicentennial Football season opens here on Honaker Field Saturday, September 20, at 2:30 p.m. The Scots, coming back after a rough and inspiring year and a tough Spring and Fall practice schedule, meet Georgetown to open what looks like one of the most exciting years in a long time here at M.C.in both football and other areas. This year also marks the Centennial birthday of Football!



The Scots wound up last year's football season with a strong comeback, showing everyone that the spirit to win is with the team and with the school itself. This spirit, if it is continued this year, should be a big factor in how well the season turns out.

Commenting on the upcoming season Head Coach Tomlinson had this to say: "Things are looking up for the Maryville College Football Team. The past four seasons have been difficult, but they have laid a solid foundation for the future. The 1969 season is a new and completely separate season from the fine finish of last year. On the positive side, the carry-over of team spirit is excellent because of the number of men returning."

This year we have more experience returning to the field than in the past, with a strong group of seniors to lead our men in battle. Dave Garner will be leading the offensive attack again for the Scots, and a stronger line will improve chances for more goal-to-go action. Defensively, the Scots will prove to be a big threat to any team that goes up against them, with all-important leadership coming from AP Little All-America mention Don Hickman and co-captain W. N. Osborne. Among a list of standouts on this year's roster is Larry Johnson, who comes to us from the University of Tennessee. While playing for Maryville High, Larry won recognition in the All-Blount County, All-East Tennessee and All-State rosters. He is joined by a great bunch of men who also have been mentioned for honors in their respective states and schools.

Dildine Receives Award

Lynn Dildine, a senior here at Maryville College from Ashley, Ohio, has been named to the Topps All-Star Baseball team in the College Division. Recently selected as captain of the 1969-70 basketball team for which he plays guard, and also captain of the 1969 baseball team. He was named Most Valuable Player of the baseball team and held a batting average of .439. Voting for the Topps All-Star Team was conducted during the last two weeks in May with coaches of the baseball teams in the individual districts of the country casting ballots for the top baseball players in their district. He is eligible for the Topps All-American Team, members of which will be announced later this year.

Other matters to be discussed are the possibility of an on-campus meeting place and means of building up the treasury.

Sigma Mu Chi was formed in 1966 when the need for such a group was recognized, and has since then grown to a membership equal in size to 10% of the entire Maryville College student body.

Notices have been sent to all known married students concerning the meeting, but it is possible that some couples may have been missed. It is hoped that they will make themselves known and come to the meeting (incidentally dessert will be served).

Any questions about the group should be directed to Chairmen Dave and Joyce Messinger, Secretaries Pete and Nancy Peterson, or Treasurers Joe and Kathy White who invite all M.C. married couples (and engaged counles) to come and learn the advantages of active membership in Sigma Mu Chi.

"Where do I go'... NOW?"

PARENTS DO IT AGAIN

A couple beginning marital life for the first time naturally have no experience in the matter of child-rearing, except the method used on them by their own parents..who were just as inexperienced when they began, and probably changed nothing or very little in their style over the years.

So the couple begin raising a family by starting with one helpless little baby. Being very scared at the prospect of being in charge of a whole life until it can fend for itself (a period definitely prolonged by some parents) they try to protect the child from any force that might tend to break it. This includes such things as telling him that he should tie his shoes, not letting him play in certain places with certain people, telling him that there are some things we JUST DON'T TALK ABOUT, and that he should talk to people that have lived longer than he as if he owed them something.

This saturation 24 hours a day brainwashing has a long-range inevitable effect called GROWING UP. It is alarming how many people in the world today are afflicted with this disease. Those that escape contamination are often put in special places for those who aren't quite adjusted to adult life.

As the parents see that their Wet-Blanket method is succeeding in turning out young people that think and act as they themselves do, they are pleased and continue using it.

Hence the children, after they've grown up, raise their own children in the same way their parents raised them, because THEY TURNED OUT SO WELL, and the syndrone begins again.

Klein and Osborne 1969 Co-Captains

Co - Captains on the 1969 Fighting Scots team are John Klein, a Senior from Olmstead, Ohio, and W. N. Osborne, Jr., a Senior from Kingsport, Tennessee. Klein will be starting on Offense as the Tailback and Osborne will start as Right Tackle on the Defensive squad.

John Klein, a letterman, is majoring in physical education. He combines his quickness and leadership on the field, and last year was the team's total rushing leader. He is able to follow blockers well and pick his way through a broken field and is a threat for the short yardage and outside plays.

W. N. Osborne, letterman and a psychology major, has been a starter as defensive tackle for the last two seasons. His natural leadership and aggressive attitude on the field will prove to be a great help to the Scots and a big threat to all of the opponents. He was voted to the News-Sentinel All-Area football Team last year and has a good chance of making Little All-America this year. He is noted for his strength, is not easy to trap, and does not make mistakes.

Both of these men will be looked upon by the team for leadership this season, and both bear watching during this year for plenty of action and excitement. We wish them both the best of luck.

ALETTE COMPOSES "SYMPHONY for BAND"

Dr. Carl Alette, associate professor of music at the University of South Alabama, has literally been spending the summer at his piano working on an original composition for concert band.

The new piece, which he has entitled "Symphony for Band" was commissioned by Maryville College for premiering at the school's Sesquicentennial Celebration in February of 1970.

Dr. Alette plans to complete his composition, scheduled for 15-minutes performance time, by November 15.

PAUL CRABTREE TO WRITE MUSICAL FOR M.C.

Paul Crabtree, author and producer of "Tennessee, U.S.A." in Crossville, Tenn., has been commissioned to write a folk-rock musical about the history of Maryville College. (Hair?)

The play, which will be a part of the College's Sesquicentennial celebration, will premiere October 15, 16, and 18, at the College Theater. Thomas E. Jones, assistant professor of theater and speech, will direct the production with Al Weaver as musical director and Cheryl VanMetre as choreographer.

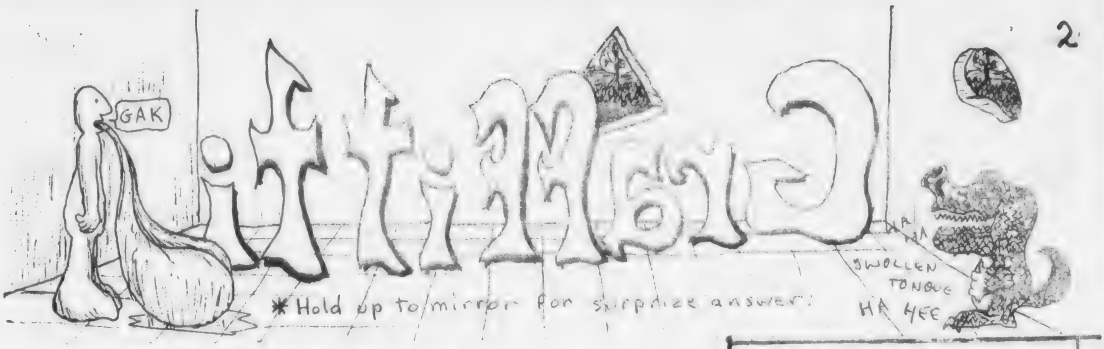
Paul Crabtree has appeared in 15 Broadway plays and musicals, including "Oklahoma," and "The Iceman Cometh."

New Faculty Member

Miss Lundin, new prof in political science.

MESSIAH PRACTICES START

Monday, September 15, marks the beginning of rehearsals for the 37th performance of the Messiah at Maryville College.



This annual college-community event is scheduled for November 9 this year to climax the second reunion weekend in Maryville College's Sesquicentennial Celebration.

Dr. Harry H. Harter, Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts encourages all interested area residents, including high school students, to join Maryville College students and faculty members for the rehearsals which will be held each Monday night, September 15 through November 3, from 7:15 until 8:30 p.m.

OUR GAL SAL

Sallie Schoen will perform in recital Sat., Sept. 20, in the FAC music hall at 8:15 P.M. Mrs. Schoen had studied at Oberlin, Indiana U., and in Austria. She has soloed with the Knoxville Symphany and is listed in Who's Who of Women in the Southeast. Mrs. Schoen will play works by Mozart, Beethoven Ravel, and Chopin.

EDITORIAL

Where were all the students? There seemed to be more faculty than students at the reception Tuesday night. Actually this affair is supposed to give the M.C. student a chance to meet his professors on neutral territory, where both are more responsive to each other's personalities. Our faculty members are often more interesting outside the classroom, be cause without the pressure of 40 burning eyes on them they have a chance to relax. So we can conclude that our faculty is human, therefore we students weren't afraid of them. Why didn't we go? Could it have been because it was held too late after Frosh orientation, and our newcomers already were aware of the faculty? No. Were all 715 Maravillians torturously studying for Wednesday's classes(which incidently were assigned by the same before mentioned faculty) ? No. Was it because the punch lacked a little zip? Some zip might have helped, but No. Or was the real reason because our profs seem to lack the Sammuel Wilson special-"The Maryville Spirit?" How much spirit can a student muster when his teacher schedules a compulsory class outing on Homecoming? If a faculty member cannot appreciate the quintessence of M.C.'s 150th Homecoming, how can a student? Students have been pat terning themselves after their teachers for years, I wonder if we are doing the right thing? FANG

Dear Editor:

Lately I've been hearing many dissatisfied people discussing Saturday suppers, or rather the lack of them! I'm sure there must be a good reason for the school not to feed us on Saturday nights, but I think a lot of people would like to know what that reason is. In the meantime, the rumbling of many stomachs drifts forlornly across the campus on Saturdays. "Oh Food, Glorious Food!"

Mary Gray Proffitt

Today's youth can truly be called the "Lost Generation." They grew up in the insecurity of "the Bomb" and "the Communist threat," literally a climate of war. Their parents could hand them no "set" morality because the spread of scientific knowledge and scientific developments such as the "pill" created breaches in the solid wall of morality previously taught. So this generation, my generation, especially the student element, is searching for something all previous generations had been handed: A structure for their lives. They "worship" things which have the power to mold them, such as dope, and the strong, virile, overpowering beats of their music. And they join together in a new feeling of brotherhood to talk, discover, and form a more meaningful society for themselves.

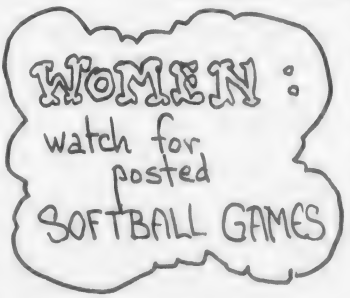
I mention the above because these are facts which must be kept forward in our minds at all times as we try to create what is called "the College Community." This community is made up overwhelmingly of students, and students are the only ones who must live 24 hours a day in it. We are a student-dominated society. We are an insular society, apart in most things from the society living in the town, geographically and mentally. And, most of all, we are a questioning society, an evolving society, with many stages of evolution, many speeds, and many courses. Questioning, questing after something, thinking, all these imply freedom, physically, mentally, morally. It's something to think about.

Jim Showalter

At least there's one optimistic person on campus.

CHANGES BRING UPS AND DOWNS

Welcome to you the class of '73. You are stepping into an arena of change. Since we were freshmen, we have seen much change, but we are looking for your energy and ideas in helping shape our new feeling of vitality and direction.



We are the class of '71 or, more commonly known as the "guinea pigs." It was with us that Maryville College initiated its new curriculum.

The new curriculum as initiated and modified has had its problems to be sure, but it seems to be working well and other colleges have adopted very similar programs. Two of these are Wooster (Ohio) and Alma College (Michigan). Although Maryville College was not THE first, it certainly is apparent that it lies along the fringe of the avant garde in liberalizing education.

Maryville College has spearheaded a governmental system which is absolutely innovational in concept. It, like the new curriculum, has had its ups and downs as evidenced by the furor which arose last spring over the MUCH discussed alcohol issue. This could be considered an issue which would set a bad precedent with the All College Council and its operation. It was sad, due to moral overtones, that this had to be the first major issue to confront the Council. It was apparent by its moral implication that a great deal of time (which might be considered an excessive amount) was spent in haggling over minor issues. Do not misunderstand our position, for we understand that in order for good legislation to be written, careful consideration is a must. We hope that issues discussed within the ACC will not all have such emotionalism involved.

It's true, as some of you may have heard, that Maryville College did have demonstrations last spring and that they centered primarily around the issues of breach of confidence and alcohol. They were peaceful and generally speaking, well conducted. The primary importance that we see in these demonstrations is not the fact that we, like other colleges and universities are experiencing campus unrest, but that, this is the first clear evidence of the new feeling which the curriculum changes and ACC represent and have now taken root in the minds of the total community. We hope that you as freshmen will contribute your ideas and vitality in continuing this new attitude toward change.

Walter Barker and Lynn Coburn

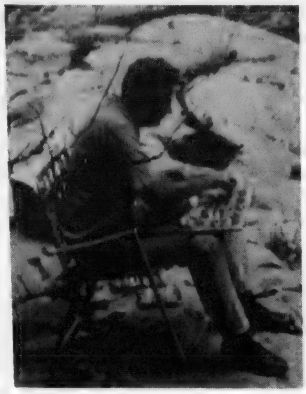
Need to involve

COMMUNITY in U.C.M.

Sunday the 14th at Vespers the panel of Dr. Swenson, Rev. Harrison, and Jim Daugherty openly gave their views on the human animal and the burden of soul-consciousness.



The various interpretations of life were made relevant to the Maryville College scene, and agreed on these points: that we are individuals in constant search of fulfillment and constantly becoming; that as a community of searchers we share and form ideas from the interchange within the community; and it was recognized that our community is composed of Christian, pagans and unconvicted, all brothers in the search for truth and expression --religion. I ask the reader to see if he can't agree with these presumptions.

If you agree then, isn't it odd, if not hypocritical, that the body which represents the religious congregation on campus is exclusive of probably half of itself. By allowing itself to be called University Christian Movement that body is depriving itself of many other thinkers and do-ers equally concerned with religion and action and is unfairly restricting the community from operating as a whole in a religious effort.

UCM does not in practice bar non-Christians from its communion and I am not the first non-Christian to be on the UCM cabinet. Why then must we be Christian in name and humanistic in outlook and practice? Much of the community is still alienated by this name and reluctant to become involved in communion of the religiously curious. Christians meekly toot more and more about how we are all lost and nobody has the answers, but they cannot join hands with the faithless without reciting the old Creed.

The revolution in changing its name and doctrines would only be a matter of paper-work; the actual revolution has already taken place. I hope the Religious Life committee of ACC will consider this plaint. Note: I am not trying to suggest elimination of Christian faith on campus, but am recommending it to be placed in context, as one part of a fermenting community that needs the other parts.

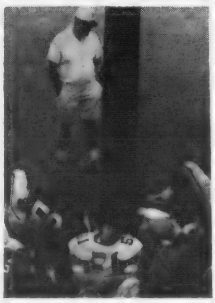
SWENSON'S OUT



A concern for conservation and an awareness of nature drove William Swenson to the mountain trails. With drawing board, sketch book, colored chalk, and non-essentials such as food and water all neatly stored in a back pack, Mr. Swenson delved into what for him was a new approach to painting--a realistic approach.

The results of Mr. Swenson's outdoor work is included in his art exhibit hanging in the Fine Arts Center Gallery at Maryville College during the month of September.

Mr. Swenson sketched the nature pictures with colored chalk and came back to the studio for the actual painting. The exhibit includes both the sketching and the painting.

Mr. Swenson is on Sabbatical Study Leave from Maryville College and will leave Maryville September 25 to spend the entire year studyin g painting, drawing and art history at the School of the Arts Institute of Chicago.

WHOMP 'EM SCOTS

This Saturday night the Fighting Scots go up against the Georgetown Tigers in their opening game of what looks like one of the most promising seasons in the past few years. The Tigers come to Honaker Field after having beat Emory and Henry Saturday 21-13. Georgetown combined a fine defense with an all-veteran offense to overcome E&H, who are weakened by the loss of a few strong men, and especially Quarterback Sonny Wade.

Returning to play after two losing seasons (2-6, 2-7), Georgetown has three men to watch out for on offense: Bob Olson and Ed McAfee--two good receivers, and Quarterback Grant Robinson who takes advantage of his two receivers.

The Scots are ready, however, for whatever the Tigers have in store, and Coach Tomlinson has picked his starting lineups for the game:

Offensive
QB - Dave Garner
Fullback - Rick Snyder
Flanker - Randy Minor (Fr)
Tailback - John Klein
Split End - Rick White Tight End - Brad Beck
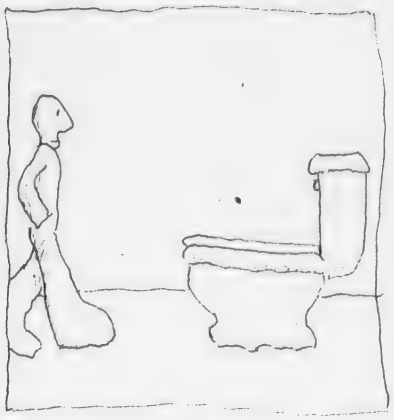
L. Tackle - Dean Bercaw
R. Tackle - Dennis Shockley
L. Guard - Dan Blevins (Fr)
R. Guard - Bert Cremer
Center - Dwight Reagan

Defensive
L. End - Bob Macy
R. End - Steve Borgs
L. Tackle - C. F. Smith
R. Tackle - W. N. Osborne
Middle Guard - Gary Reagan
Strong Linebacker - Mike Parks
Back Linebacker - Tom Ickes
Monster Man - Paul Grice
L. Halfback - Don Hickman
R. Halfback - Mike Butler (Fr)
Safety - John Weston

Those who have not taken the mandatory 10 hour Re-Training course are welcome to enroll in the one being held at the UT Aquatic Center. The Course begins October 1 and runs for three successive Wednesdays... 7:00-9:30 p.m. For further information contact Mrs. Largen, Bartlett.

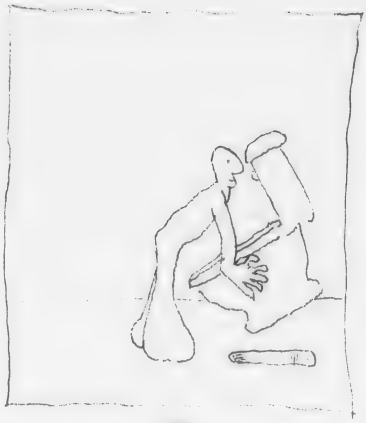
NEW MASCOT INTRODUCED AT ALL-SCOTS NITE

The 1969 Maryville College Scots were formally introduced to their fans at All-Scots Night held Saturday night, September 13 on Honaker Field. Master of Ceremonies Bob McEldowney, Senior from Youngstown Ohio, began by individually introducing the Scots' football team.



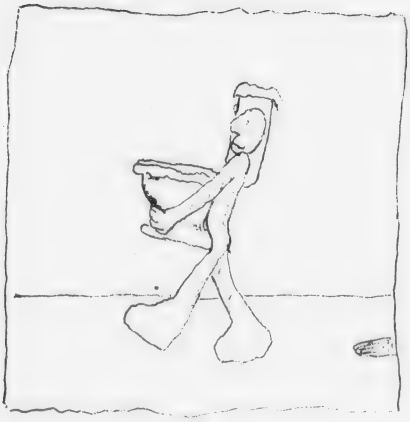
McEldowney then introduced the Drum Major, Monie Barnard from Kingsport, Tenn., and the four Highland Lassies, Ann Gamble of Maryville, Sallie Davidson of Wilmington, Delaware, Lynn Gillespie of Kearny New Jersey, and Debbie Branch of Lenoir, North Carolina, who performed a routine to "The Stripper," accompanied by the Highlander Marching Band.

The Fighting Scot of Maryville, Fred Callies, was introduced as a replacement to the traditional mascot, the Scottie Dog.



The Cheerleaders were recognized and led the fans in an enthusiastic rally of cheers.

Coach Howard J. Tomlinson explained several formations as the first string offense and defense demonstrated their tactics.



The pep rally ended with the singing of the Alma Mater.

1st Community Meeting Held

The first community meeting was held Mon. during break in the Theater. About 100 attended. Committees of the ACC and their schedules were discussed. Sack suppers were discussed. It was also brought out that the curriculum would be re-evaluated this year. Cigarette machines in the dorms was one of the topics brought to light along with sack suppers. Someone suggested that the college budget be publicized, since we had a price hike in college expenses. How donations influence MC policy was questioned. After wrestling with deep, involved matters, we decided to reach under our chairs, pick up our sack suppers and leave.

Danforth's to be Given

Inquiries about the Danforth Graduate Fellowships, to be awarded in March 1970, are invited, according to Dean Boyd L. Daniels, the local campus representative.

The Fellowships, offered by the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Missouri, are open to men and women who are seniors or recent graduates of accredited colleges in the United States, who have serious interest in college teaching as a career, and who plan to study for a Ph.D. in a field common to the undergraduate college. Applicants may be single or married, must be less than thirty years of age at the time of application, and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

Approximately 120 Fellowships will be awarded in March, 1970. Candidates must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions by November 1, 1969. The Foundation does not accept direct applications for the Fellowships.

Danforth Graduate Fellows are eligible for four years of financial assistance, with a maximum annual living stipend of $2400 for single Fellows and $2950 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are available. Financial need is not a condition for consideration.

Scots Win

The Fighting Scots sliced their way to victory Saturday, cutting down the Georgetown Tigers, whose roar seemed less than their bite. The Scots took their first game 21-7.

Led by Quarterback Dave Garner, who led with total offensive yardage, connecting for 7 of 10 pass attempts, the Scots scored in the first three quarters. Freshman Randy Minor caught two passes for two TD's, and Rich Snyder plowed over a massive Georgetown defense from the 1-yard line to give the Scots their third touchdown. Jim (The Toe) Cannon kicked for three successful conversion attempts.

Commenting on the game, Coach Tomlinson said that the Scots have a lot to do in preparation for Austin. "The first one is always a good one to win," he said. "We're going to work hard this week." Tomlinson admits that there are some things that need work and mistakes must be corrected, but the team looks good this year.

Coach Tomlinson cited a few of his men for their play this week. He named Randy Minor, Brad Beck, Dave Garner, John Klein, and Dwight Reagan on Offense, and Mike Parks and Tom Ickes on Defense. He said that these men "played exceptionally well."

Georgetown scored once in the fourth quarter on a 13-yard pass from Grant Robinson to Bob Olson. The Scot defense kept the Tigers under control the rest of the time, intercepting three passes and allowing only 17 completions on 44 pass attempts by the Georgetown offense.

EDITORIAL

Here we are at that point again in the social year at MC when we are given the choice of either joining one our societies, or remaining a GDI. Our societies can offer a certain security of friendship which can be a valuable part of our college experience. It seems that lately most students have been shying away from these campus organizations because of the lack of dynamicism in them. With more of the student population having cars, trips to K-ville have increased. The possibilities of having an exciting evening at Shakey's or elsewhere where one can get smashed has had continued appeal over the Sig and Phi sponsored dances and picnics. These events were sometimes held in the society's house, presently of which Sig is without, and Phi might as well be. Ofcourse the sister societies have never had a real place to go. Actually, our social organizations need revamping. They need a sophistication. Could that be in selectivity? Are people tired of working for an organization that seems shoddy especially when compared to their friends accounts of Frats? Are the members guilty of not selling their own product? Really, are they concerned with their organization's future? Could the Freshmen bring back the zippy rivalry that once manifested itself on this campus. Tradition is tradition, and I would like very much not to see our societies sloughed off. But, unless we are able to give them more desirability they will become nothing...and at that point we will have to discard them as hollow tradition as we discarded chapel. Flay

Maryville College is dying. The Freshman enrollment has dropped for the past three years. Two quads in Dorm III are completely vacant. There are so many empty rooms in Dorm I and Davis Hall that every woman living in Pearsons could be moved to these women's dorms, thus leaving Pearsons completely empty. To say the least this community of scholars is "hurting" and may not exist if the present trend continues. It is high time (and it may be too late) for some of the higher ups in the community to take a good look at the present head of the Admissions Office and his policies. If Maryville College truly has something to offer incoming students, then it must be able to "sell itself." This calls for imagination and innovation in student recruiting.

We feel that if the concept of "community" is not just a hypocritical slogan, students should actively push for reforms where they are needed. They should, along with faculty and administration be willing to cut away the "dead wood" which hinders the growth of this institution. We ALL have something at stake.

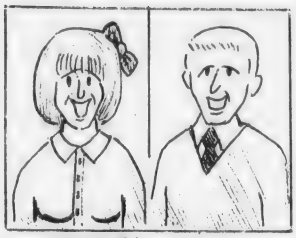
Dear Editor,

I wish to complainabout some thing that I consider a waste of time, energy, and space, I am, of course, referring to the "comic strips"which appear on the back page of the Echo. These cartoons seem to lack humor(however obscure), social comment, & even rationality... Perhaps it's that they are too subtle for me to understand their meaning,but I can see no use in something that is so obscure that the majority of the Echo's readers are simply disgusted and bored with it.

Sincerely,
Janee Elmore

Dear Sir:



In lieu of the fact that I am a student here at MC, I feel I have an adequate claim for the following criticism of the conduct of many of the MC students at CIV. I realize that it is difficult sometimes to concentrate on long and abstract speeches by some speakers, but out of plain human respect, we should at least be quiet while they are talking.

From personal experience in the past, I know that if I, or someone close to me is whispering ot talking, it is impossible to gain anything from the program at all. I also know that most of the students are there because they need the credit,but since that is the case it seems a shame to gain absolutely nothing from the time spent there.

As I sit there in CIV listening to outstanding men speak for academic freedom, I wonder how they can say such things to people who don't care to listen.Perhaps we should realize that responsibility doesn't have to do with the poor acoustics in Wilson Chapel, but with each individual giving attention and respect to the views of every other individual.

Something new hits MC

A new organization is in the making--The Officials Corps. We are hoping to establish a more proficient and adept way of officiating women's intramural sports.

The first clinic will be held Wednesday, October 1 during D period at Bartlett and this will consist of a discussion covering the Soccer Rules. The Rule Book is on reserve in the Library.

We need your help in making intramurals fun and fair. The Officials Corps is open to all M. C. women. This is also a good way to earn points for "M" Club.

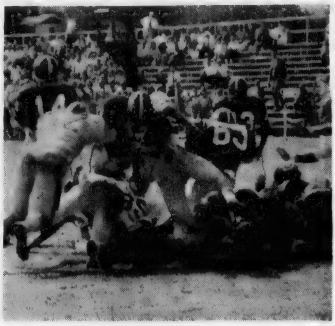
HELP!

Do you play the recorder? Do you play any instrument suitable to Baroque or Renaissance music? Are you willing to learn? If so, the Recorder Group desperately needs you! Our forces have been severely depleted due to last year's graduation. We are part of the Creative Leisure program, and we meet for an hour every Sunday at 1:30 p.m. in the choir room of the Chapel. On this year's agenda is special music for the Christmas season and for after Christmas. A bass player of some sort is particularly needed--cellist, bassoonist, or something. Please come this Sunday at 1:30.

Scots to meet powerful Austin this week

"RAH!"



The Scots meet Austin College from Sherman, Texas, on Haker Field Saturday night at 8. The Austin "Kangaroos" come to Maryville with a 2-0 record this season, having defeated Northwood College 9-7 and Southwestern 28-7. The Kangaroos hopped over the Scots last year at Austin 28-7, marking the first game played against the Scots.

Last year Austin ended their season with a 8-1-0 record, ranking 16th in small-college football in the nation. Their offensive unit returns this year intact, and Quarterback Wes Eben is a potent weapon on the field. Another man to watch on the Kangaroo squad is Fullback Joe Meade. These two men will prove a big threat on Honaker Field.

The Scots will be working hard this week in preparation for a tough game. They will try to correct mistakes made against Georgetown, and will come out fighting Saturday night. This game will prove to be one of the roughest in the line-up this season, so the Scots will need your support. Let's get out there for the Pep Rally and the game, 'cause we want to ring that bell again this week! Good Luck Scots!

Minor socks it to them

Randy Minor is a Freshman on the Fighting Scots squad this year. Randy comes to us from Jacksonville, Florida where he played football for Paxon Senior High School. While at Paxon Randy received outstanding honor on the All Region Team. This year's football handbook lists Randy as an End, 5'10" and 165 pounds. In Saturday's game Randy caught three passes for 51 yards, and two of these passes were for touchdowns. The first TD pass came in the first quarter when Dave Garner tossed the ball to Randy in the end-zone for 14 yards. The second TD came in the second quarter when Garner again tossed to Minor, this time for 21 yards. As we all can see, Randy handles the ball well, and will be an important asset to the Fighting Scot team. We wish him good luck. Keep up the good work!

Scots pile it on.

In last week's article it was illustrated that M.C. is on the move. The question which holds primary importance is whether we are moving fast enough. The big question is: Does it seem that we are progressing in all areas of campus life in relation to other campuses around the nation, or are we being "faked out"? Changing ideas within our lifetime are accelerating on a national scale. Some colleges and universities are keeping pace with these changing ideas. Is M. C. truly progressive in this trend, or are our "progressive" innovations merely illusionary as compared on a national basis?

The position of a student in the modern college is ambiguous to say the least. By coming to college, he has admitted that he lacks certain skills and knowledge, and that he desires instruction in them. These skills are formalized as courses and presented by someone who has a degree of proficiency in them. Thus arise "courses of instruction" and those mercenary skill-mongerers, teachers (whom I can joke about, but for whom I have the greatest respect). The ambiguity of the students' position arises from this arrangement, though, for where does the line lie separating his instructed and guided life from his free, individual life as an equal member of a college community? This problem has to be struggled with on all campuses. The old answer was that the student was not responsible enough to make his own decisions, and the college had to assume a parental position in regards to the students. This paternalism is a dirty word nowadays, yet vestiges of it still remain. The fact is that the fundamental question is still there: How much responsibility can a student be trusted with?

To answer this question, certain facts (if there are such things) have to be kept in mind. Students today know more than any previous generation, as was stated often in Friday's CIV's. Secondly, students today are much more involved, mentally and physically, with the world around them than any other previous generation. This is mainly due to the great increases and advances in communications, be they via newspaper, magazine, or television. Thirdly, students are here to learn, about the total World, not just the formal academic world. The CIV's brought out the fact that the vast majority of a student's learning takes place outside the classroom. We are finally recognizing the fact that a straight-A student can also be an ignoramous. This does not downgrade the formal parts of a college education. Rather, it places them in a much truer perspective. Finally, the students today want responsibility. All these other points would be just so much hogwash without this last consideration.

Given responsibilities, and independence, which are two sides of the same coin, the student has proven that, at times, he can mess things up pretty well, which goes to show a strong similarity between students and adults. But a person must be given a chan person must be given the chance. That is, in its truest sense, what learning is.

The falling house that MC Built.

A house divided against itself cannot stand.

The other day I was telling myself a story (for want of a better way to think). It seems that in a land and time far away from here, there was a small community of 700 or so people. It was a very lovely community overlooking beautiful mountains and on the edge of a small wood. It was populated mostly by young people of a sensitive nature who had been sent there because of their strong religious beliefs. They called themselves middle-of-the-road-firehydrants or M.O.R.F.'S. They had come to the community to strengthen their religious nature by a process called H.F.F.Y. or hiding for four years. This went on for quite a long time successfully, for all the community was made up of morfs and no morf caused another morf to doubt what he believed. Consequently when the young morfs returned from their period of H.F.F.Y. they were convinced of their beliefs for the rest of their lives.

But unfortunately one day, (for no good thing can last forever) came to that happy city...a group of doubting morfises, as they were later called. Suddenly the community was divided! But because all morfs believed that theirs was the perfect religion (because of many generations of H.F.F.Y.) they let these doubting morfises stay. Of course we can guess what happened. Soon the young and pure morfs were lured into the process of L.A.N.T. (learning about new things). The greybeard morfs of the community tried to stop this immoral practice, of course, but they never really understood what hit them when they looked around and found their once united and happy community divided into many small groups as a result of the practice of L. A. N. T. Frightened of a revolution, the greybeard morfs consulted the P.C. or the "Prophetic Coil" of the talking wrist watch owned by a greybeard whose initials were strangely enough those of the universal savior. The prophetic coil spoke and the greybeards were overjoyed, for it told them that a community divided into small groups can't rise in revolution and change things because all the groups lack a majority. So the community continued many years until all the greybeards died and of course, there were none to take their place.

Topic for discussion this week at MC is the conflict between our intellectuals and our athletes. More precisely it appears that this major issue is rooted in Dorm 3. Frankly, all this hobgobble is ridiculous. Frosh are Frosh--they are experimenting, emotional creatures. Somehow in the redefinition of values, a polarization sets in, and we end up with 2 opposing sides. One group goes to Vespers, the other goes to ball games. Automatically according to some sources one group is cool, the other isn't. It is really high time that we just try to talk to each other, and not about. The IQ of a ball player should not automatically be relegated to a degree higher than a bush. Likewise not all guys who have long hair are weirdos with nothing meaningful to say. As for any interpersonal relationships that involve freshmen, they should be left to their own discretion. People must learn to live together, and the polarization of intellects versus non-intellect seems to disappear through our upper class years. Or is this because the Intelligentsia is in Carnegie and the Athletes are in Memorial? Obviously the whole thing refers back to that nebulous concept of community, which is continually being shoved down our throats. If we do not believe the intellectual's conception of community, we become gross caricatures of ignorance. What about our athletes' views, or don't they count? or do they even try to make their views count? It seems unfortunate, and very disappointing that so many people on this campus are so senseless to other 's opinions. We are supposed to be relating our lives to what's going on in the outer world; but how can we ever hope to solve Vietnam, poverty, or racism, when we cannot control let alone solve issues here at MC? I personally feel that we will never achieve that visionary concept of communication called community, but we may muster a certain degree of cohesiveness by attempting a village. FANG -

We hope that all organizations will join together and break some of the archaic social walls which encase us and truly liberalize our institution. We have 150 years under our belt and a lot of pride. If we are going to be outstanding as a community of scholars we feel that Maryville College should not be hesitant or receding in its approach but rather forge ahead as the avant garde. Let's get together and break the shackles which bind us; forging ahead and molding a new future.

MUCKRAKER #3

HALLELUJAH! The Lone Ranger rides again. These are the themes of Maryville College's swinging new band. More than just a new approach in performance and entertainment, the Highlander band is showing strong overtones of the new activism which we feel is rising in depth and intensity on this campus. This is the first apparent indication that a new outlook concerning the direction of our alma mater has come alive! The marching Scots have not only shown great imagination in their support of the cheerleaders and cheering section but also are hitting directly some of the pressing social issues which exist on this campus.

In the Highlanders half-time show at last week's football game they cleverly put together a satire through the use of music. The satire itself was not malicious or derogatory but rather its constructivism lay in the fact that it pointed up the problems of (1) dropping student enrollment, (2) the delectible cuisine served in the college dining hall, and (3) the existing administrative bureaucracy.

We hope that other organizations will follow this example and become interested in changing the image of Maryville College. Just as the band conveys its message through its music, other organizations can express themselves through their own specialty. If it be the speech department through the forum, or MSG pushing for cigarette machines in the dorms, all can contribute in their own way to the new look of Maryville College. We thank the band for having the intestinal fortitude (guts) for daring to be just a little non-conventional in expressing their feelings concerning some of the problems of this campus, and we hope that other organizations will stand up and voice their opinion in the coming months. Maryville College is going to change! Each organization holds a little piece of power, if each organization fuses its power with each other organization, the total power has a great social effect and can greatly determine the direction of this campus.

Many have told me of friends who ask whether Maryville is a Catholic girls'school. Every time I bring a girl back from a date, I honestly wonder. I do not know whether it is for bureaucratic reasons, or for appearances of morality, that that sword of damocles, the curfew, is hung over a girl's head. I do know that it doesn't do much of anything for the victims, innocent or otherwise.

If bureaucracy is the reason, it being easier to find someone in cases of emergency, etc., and easier to tell if someone has died or been kidnapped or caught sanity and run, then I won't say anything because some censor along the way would cut what I'd say.

If we are trying to retain at least the appearance of traditional morality (an overused but very illustrative term) by chaining the girls to the dubious (in some cases very dubious) comforts and safety of their dorms at an hour when someone has decided that all nice girls should be in bed--their own, that is, then the college is shutting the door after the horses have left. If a couple (theoretically, of course!) can't do anything it wants to in the time between sunset and curfew, then their cerebral facilities would appear to be stunted, and their ability to remain in college should be examined. And with a key system which is complicated, but surmountable, the breach in control becomes unpluggable. I would also remind the curfew-makers that the parents trust their sons and daughters enough to come here with the possibility that they might be exposed to the heady winds of academia which, among other things, fly thickly in the MC air, and the college needn't feel obligated to take up the reins on the poor kids.

As the poet has said, "Stone walls do not a prison make." Although this might be a little too modern an idea for certain people on this campus, I still recommend it for their thought. I am reminded in all this of the prophet, crying out in the wilderness,"Let my people go!" Remember, MC stands for Maryville College, not Maryville Convent.

Jim Showalter

Dear Editor:

At first I thought it a hoax. Now I'm deeply concerned. What's with the Echo this year? It's impossible to read a copy without stumbling over dangling participles, misspelled words, awkward phrasing, and incorrect punctuation. Sometimes it's difficult to discern a complete sentence. These points are relatively minor, however, in light of a rather serious issue. Who gives you the right to editorialize the news columns? I resent the value judgments and sly innuendoes that challenge a reader's intelligence and often prevent him from obtaining even the basic facts.

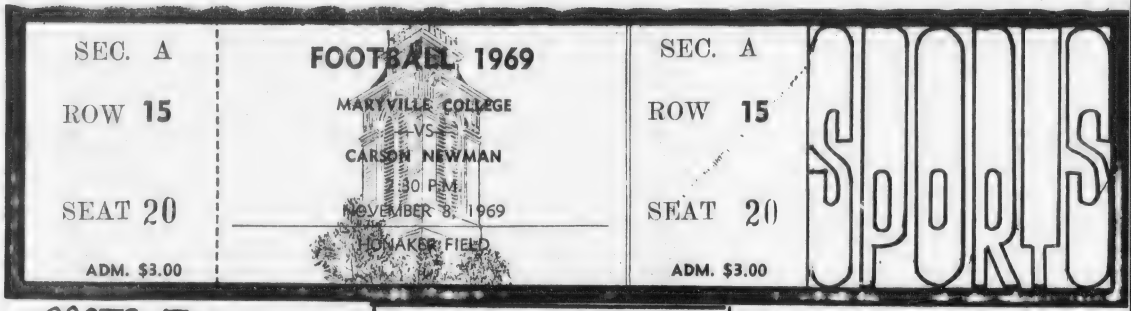
The editorial page is also a disappointment. I appreciate your effort to focus attention upon facets of campus life not often considered, but is it too much to ask that it be done in a thoughtful, logical manner? The editorial of the second edition could be entitled "Non sequitur."

A mere reading of the Echo makes it appear as if the world abruptly ends at the college gates. Why can't there be a balance of national and international comment relevant to issues affecting students everywhere? Even the simple use of CPS and NSA material would be more desirable than the present situation.

One last stab. Does there have to be such an overpowering proportion of sports coverage in every issue?

It's easy to sit back and condemn someone else's hard work. Hopefully, though, this criticism will be taken in a constructive sense, perhaps sparking a needed rebuttal. In any event, I don't mean to convey a purely cynical reaction. The Echo does have its redeeming features. My point is simply that readers of a collegiate weekly are entitled to expect that the paper provide unbiased news coverage, a wide range of thought-provoking editorial material, and employ at least the essentials of good journalism.

Sincerely,
Jim Daugherty



Dear Editor:

I would like to take issue with the opinion expressed in last week's "Muckraker #2" column. The impression it left was that Maryville College's declining enrollment and empty dormitory rooms can be blamed primarily on the Office of Admissions. There are many theories as to where the blame lies, but I feel this is one of the least realistic and most unfair. Since the time I attended college here, Maryville has become quite a bit more intellectual and raised its academic standards considerably. We all favor this kind of change, but couldn't this be part of the reason for its lack of appeal to many? There are fewer majors now, and some which attracted many students are no longer offered. In addition, costs have risen, so that for local people at least it is far cheaper to go to a state school. At one time Maryville's low cost was one big factor which attracted many students.

Isn't it true that other colleges of Maryville's general type are in the same kind of trouble? We all recognize the problem exists, but I think it quite unjust to make the Admissions Office the scapegoat.

SCOTS TO MEET TIGERS

This Saturday night at Sewanee, Tennessee, the Scots will meet their third opponent of the season. The Scots go into their first away game with a 1-1 record, and the Sewanee Tigers will try to break their losing spell which has caused them to drop their first two games. Last week they lost to Hampden-Sydney 28-6, and the week before went down to defeat at the hands of Millsaps 41-16.

The Tigers' 1968 season ended with a split 4-4 record, and a third place in the College Athletic Conference. Hoping for a better show this year, Sewanee supporters have been disappointed. Sewanee returns with eleven seniors missing from last year's squad, leaving 24 lettermen, 7 veterans, and 28 freshmen to hold things together. Coach Shirley Majors is faced with the fact that Sewanee is hosting "one of the smallest and most inexperienced teams...in many years." On the positive side, however, Majors says that his 1969 squad is "quicker than the 1968 team."

"Maryville College...should prove to be a more formidable opponent for the Tigers," says the Sewanee football handbook. The last time the Scots played the Tigers was in 1959, when they lost. But the Scots will have to be careful, for the Tigers have a strong Fullback named Bubba Owens who "has been Sewanee's leading ground gainer for the past two years." Two others to watch will be Eric Newman, a strong defensive lineman, and Wiley Richardson, the "most outstanding lineman last year."

The Scots go on after Sewanee to Emory & Henry, and then return to Honaker Field for the Sesquicentennial Homecoming game.

FOOTMEN TO DELIVER BALL TO SEWANEE

Eleven runners will form a relay team to "deliver" the game ball to Sewanee for Saturday's football game with the University of the South. They will leave Maryville's Bartlett Hall at 10:30 Friday night, expecting to arrive at Sewanee, 138 miles away, by gametime Saturday at 2 p.m. The runners are Dave Wiley, Darrel Smith, Ed Hawkey, Tom Piper, Henry Hastings, Randy Calhoun, John Powell, Chip Pusey, Harry Robertshaw, and Ward Brooks. Last year Wiley, Smith, Hawkey, Calhoun, and Hastings ran the game ball to Carson-Newman College, 50 miles away, in spite of sleet and snow.

WHOMP 'EM SCOTS

KANGAROOS POUCHED.

Faced with a powerful attack by the Austin Kangaroos, the Scots were defeated here at Honaker Field Saturday night, 34-7.

Trailing by seven points at the half, with the score 14-7 the Scots were unable to keep the ball in their hands much during the second half. The Scot defense was given a rough workout as Austin Quarterback Wesley Eben continually pushed his team through for first down yardage. Eben put on one of the most spectacular passing games seen in a long time at MC. The elusive Eben got two touchdowns for the Kangaroos, and Mitchell Dickson, Bob Brown, and Charles Schreiber scored once. Brown went 69 yards for his TD.

The Scots scored on an 18 yard pass from Dave Garner to Randy Minor. It was Minor's third touchdown catch in two games. Jim Cannon kicked for the extra point.

The Scots face Sewanee and Emory & Henry away, and return October 18th for Homecoming against Randolph-Macon.

THE FAR CORNER

For the sensitive student who realizes MC education is grossly missing the point and who wants to find some answers for himself on contemporary problems--try the Far Corner.

Have you read The Strawberry Statement?---a sharp insight into the Columbia 'revolution' --you should. Quotations of Mayor Daley? Nigger is there, Dick Gregory. Lenny Bruce, too.

The Far Corner is for the far extremes. Billy Graham is well represented.

One of the best collections of the Corner is information on conscientious objection to the draft. And both sides say a lot in the Corner on The War.

The Far Corner is at the north end of Lamar Library reading room--it's part of the Establishment; it's also linked with UCM, which, incidentally, subscribes to magazines for the Library.

HILEMAN PLANS FLORIDA INTERIM

Mr. Eugene Hileman, supervisor for the Migrant Agricultural Workers Interim, was recently in Florida finalizing plans for the project.

Generally, the purpose of the project is to allow students to gain insight into the social and economic system which confronts migrant workers. The interim proposes to acquaint the participants with the situation through direct involvement.

Plans, as presently formulated, call for the group to work in the Orlando area as tangerine pickers. Mr. Hileman talked with the group's employer and investigated various phases of the group's living situation.

SOCIETY NEWS

Chi Beta girls in their bright red dresses have been busy with weekly events, such as frying Scotsburgers in place of the usual sack suppers and churning homemade ice cream to wet whistles after the Sesquicentennial lecture. All this money-grubbing has been leading to one thing--RUSH! Postponed from last Thursday and Friday to Monday and Tuesday because of the blue-flu, it was more than successful. Freshman girls were greeted at a pretty, popping pizza party Monday at Lloyd basement, with games and laughs to boot. Chi Beta and Kappa Phi did their part to cheer our Scots to a winning football season in a skit introducing Brainy Hugh from Maryville U. Following the skit was a dance in Bartlett with the latest group on campus.

Chi Beta hopes that everyone who came to rush events enjoyed them as much as Chi did in providing them!

Theta Epsilon is moving ahead at a very rapid pace, this year with President Barb Grinstead at the helm. Already Theta has sponsored a dance and a bake sale. The bake will be held weekly. Clothes are now being collected in each dorm for a rummage sale. Displaying Theta unity, the members will eat together in the dining hall every Tuesday.

Active members are urged to donate any pictures for the scrapbook. These can be given to Sallie Davidson, VP. Dues can be paid to Flipper, T.

Inactive members are encouraged to come to meetings and join in a successful and busy year for Theta Epsilon.

Campus Center To Open Soon !!

Sometime next week is the latest estimation given concerning the opening of the new student center. Efforts are being made to open the new facility in the first floor of Fayerweather by Homecoming. Putting the new student center into Fayerweather is part of a general rehabilitation of that building and is a portion of an overall scheme which will give much of our campus a new look in the next couple of years. To be replaced are all of the wooden structures on campus, including the old student center, the intramural gym, and the office annex.

In addition to the new student center, the bookstore will be put into the first floor of Fayerweather. It will occupy the west third of the floor and will move from its present location in the near future. The second floor will be used as it was last year, housing Highland Echo and Chilhowean offices, the creative activities program, and Alpha Sigma men's society. In the future, the other three floors of Fayerweather will probably be remodeled, and most campus organizations and activities will be centered there. Hence, rather than just "Student Center," Fayerweather should become known as the "Campus Center," a center for most campus affairs.

The student center, occupying about two-thirds of the first floor, will be greatly expanded over the present one (see the diagram). A separate television room for nothing but undisturbed viewing of the tube will replace the old situation, where the TV had to compete with the jukebox and with table tennis players and spectators. Also, a new lounge where faculty members can relax and recover will be included. Both the TV room and faculty lounge will be carpeted. An expanded game room will contain a pool table for billiard enthusiasts and three tables for ping pong. The new, larger grill will feature about a dozen private four-place booths, plus several settees and round tables. There will be extra room for dancing, and the familiar jukebox will again be present. Seating capacity in the grill will be about eighty and it will be air-conditioned. There will be a spacious lobby in the front of the building, and throughout the floor new wall covering and floor covering are being put in. In addition to the front entrance, a back door will be placed on the south side of the building, allowing easy access to the grill.

This new student center and the "campus center" as a whole are long-awaited additions to this campus. How true it is that we need a new student center.

Viet Nam Moratorium To Confront College Community

On Wednesday, October 15th, Maryville will join colleges and universities across the nation in observing Vietnam Moratorium Day. The thrust of this movement is to create a keen awareness of the Vietnam chaos and to lift the veil of passivity surrounding most of us.

The Moratorium is an exciting undertaking in many ways. First, it will unite students and faculty in a carefully coordinated effort to confront the issues. Second, the Moratorium will recognize those who have already sacrificed their lives in a war which proves more pointless each day. Third, it will allow those students convinced of a particular position, and more important, those who hold no opinion at all, to re-examine their stance in light of the resource material, films, and discussions prepared for that day. Finally, it will underline the role of the university as an active, contributing force in society by emphasizing the critical need for community involvement.

A variety of activities has already been scheduled for this campus. There will be a CIV that morning featuring a film and a panel of students and faculty led by Dr. George Edwards, seminary professor and nationally known pacifist. Dr. Edwards will also speak in an afternoon session. In addition, plans are being formulated for other sessions throughout the day. These will include workshops on the draft, pacifism, and particular facets of the war, as well as various films. A definite agenda will be posted soon. The FAR CORNER of the library contains a large collection of related pamphlets and books.

Letters have been sent to the faculty requesting their participation, and proposing the following points: (1) that classes scheduled for that day become a forum for discussion of the war if the students concerned favor such action; (2) that the teacher publicize his intention in advance; (3) that the CIV program be actively supported; (4) that the faculty consider giving of their

While my boss is in a corner somewhere sharpening his fangs, I have been afforded the opportunity to come out from behind the curtain and step on the soapbox.

In last week's Echo, Jim Daugherty expressed his views concerning the newspaper. As associate editor, I should maintain a strong defense for the Echo; however, Jim's views are quite valid. On the other hand, as an outsider to the technical make-up of the paper, Jim is rather myopic in his viewpoint. There are many "hang-ups" in the process of having the paper printed at the printer's office here on the campus. Much to my chagrin, when a typographical error or misinformation is found in a story, we cannot request to have the story retyped, since the printer's office is extremely busy printing other publications for the college. Consequently, these errors must be overlooked for the sake of expediency and the printer's office overload. One must also take into consideration the lack of equipment which the professional printer has for printing newspapers. To avoid the use of any journalistic jargon, I simply say that we do the best we can with what is available to us.

As for Jim's remarks concerning the content of the paper, I humbly submit to his view. Yes, the Echo has succumbed to "attitudes of provincialism". The paper has stressed the activities of campus life whereas world issues have been neglected. However, the main purpose of any college newspaper is to report these activities to the college community. The Echo has failed to execute a secondary function of a college newspaper--to convey the relevancy of the students' education to the world situation. The Echo's failure to report about the outside world defeats the idea of community, which is theoretically stressed in the environs of Maryville College. How can we as students truly comprehend the meaning of community when most of us are living in a microcosm of daily existence? As Jim so appropriately phrased it, the world does not end at the college gates. The Echo staff should feel obligated to communicate the relevancy of one's education to the world.

Perhaps I have defended the Echo after all, but I did not want Jim, nor the student body, to misconstrue expediency for apathy. The Echo will do its best to make room for improvement.

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

I am writing in reply to a letter in your October 2nd issue. The letter was a criticism of various aspects of the Echo's journalism and it called for constructive reaction. I believe one hasty criticism was made concerning the over-powering proportion of sports coverage in every issue. It is hard to call one page in a 6-page issue an overpowering proportion. If someone calls this overpowering, his attention must have been really held by the write-ups of one or two football games on the sports page. I often find myself remembering only the sports page when the Echo has a slow issue.

I believe it must be taken into consideration that at least a third of the students at Maryville are involved in sports in one form or another. I hope the Echo can solve its problems, but an overpowering proportion of sports coverage is not one of them. You don't have to read the sports page if you feel you can get little from it.

David Vial

N. Augusta, S. C.

Dear Staff,

OK. Herewith the $3.00.

We subscribed to the Echo originally because the Alumni Bulletin seemed a bit bland considering what one hears of colleges in general. It was a shock to discover that with the world full of segregation, pollution, battle, murder, and sudden death (unquote), M.C. is still voicing word for word the same old complaints. Which is not meant as a call to arms.

Even so the Highland Gripe is pretty traumatic reading for a couple of loyal alumni who think it's a great place. After all, at Maryville we met Mrs. Brown, Dr. Hunter, Miss Jackson, Leeuwenhoek, Shakspere, and Each Other. God knows that's not perfection, but there are advantages to not being God.

And it shoots whole afternoons--I wanter around in a daze mentally composing letters to the editor. For instance, you are right about that mace. It's pointless. A fad; Emory got one a while back. Maybe it is pretty and beauty is its own excuse for being. But I doubt if that applies to something that has to be carried around. However you really can't compare it to the 2001 polished slab without--who gave it, Alcoa?--without likening Alcoa to the Watchers Beyond Jupiter who planted the Black Slab. Aaaagh.

Having hopefully got the letter out of my system, blessings on thee, Fang.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CAMPUS COMMUNITY:

War epitomizes the seemingly hopeless frustrations of man--hate, ignorance, greed, poverty, and prejudice. We, who have any hope for the future, must concentrate our efforts in terminating this senseless pastime. In promoting war, we can only strive towards self-destruction. By continuing this insane passion for vengeance, domination, and expansion, how can it ever be thought that the agonies of man will cease?

From his very beginning, man has determined a society which could only build upon hate. We, in this supposedly free country, are at war among ourselves, and it's sick to think that a war in Vietnam or anywhere else will do anything other than perpetuate our own madness. How can there ever, anywhere, be peace of mind until we do something about the plagues of a society whose guilt is our own? How can we continue to call ourselves a peaceful nation, when we continue to allow racism, prejudices, starvation, HATE, and poverty to dominate ourselves-things which can only breed war. We are threatened enough, as it is, by our own environment to waste our energies on human conflict. Problems of air and water pollution, agricultural and natural resources, unsolved, present a gloomy future for man.

The National Mobilization Committee to End the War has urged that October 15 be declared a national moratorium on Vietnam. It is hoped that all people in this country--and we need damn well be concerned--will organize to protest the atrociousness of this and every war. We must all get together and strive for peace, or it's all over!

Mark Hughes

MY DICTIONARY

War is defined by Webster's dictionary as a "contest by force between two or more nations or states." But nations are only ideas. Ideas do not have arms or legs or eyes or blood. Ideas do not cry, do not feel lonely, do not become blind. No one, not even Dow Chemical Company, can put napalm on an idea. So war is not "a fight between nations or states."

War is a dead baby in a lilac field. War is a Vietnamese farmer crying in the woods. War is where schools are burning and entrails hang on blackboards. War is dead mothers and lost children, crippled sons and mad fathers, broken hearts and smooth, white, five dollar grave stones with little flags on top.

If I wanted to stop war, I'd start by changing Webster's dictionary. First, I'd rip out the page that has "war" on it and at that place, I'd ask God to make the biggest hold in the world. Next, I'd fill that hole with every agony and every cry of every man, woman, and baby in every war since Adam.

And then I'd wait for the next president or general who has an idea that we should go to war. I'd tell him that I'll take him behind the Washington Square Arch, when no one is around, and then I'll hand him my dictionary and ask him to look up "war."

Kevin Reynolds, New York City

An eleven year-old boy

Concerning Janee Elmore's letter to the Echo September 28:

I am forever amazed that students in a college "community" (and I use the term loosely) can seal their natural intelligence in cold storage and not apply their knowledge to problems they meet outside the classroom.

And as for deleting Steve Smith's cartoons from the newspaper, all I can say is that a college newspaper must not gear itself to the lowest (or laziest) mind in the community. You can't eat pablum all your life. For your own sake and survival try a little challenge.

time to discuss the issues of Vietnam with friends and neighbors. The second point is an important one for intelligent dialogue demands advance preparation on the part of both students and faculty.

Faculty response has been generally favorable thus far. A lot, however, remains to be done. Students should request that the faculty become involved and make their intentions known. Teachers and students from each department could jointly determine creative and effective approaches in relating the Moratorium to specific areas of study. The history and political science departments for example, could center around foreign policy and historical perspective, while the English department, concentrated on the literature of the war, and the fine arts department dealt with Vietnamese music and art. The education, science, and philosophy departments have already made plans--what's your department doing?

The Moratorium is in essence a moderate approach. As the saying goes, it has something for everybody. There's no excuse for remaining passive--except, of course, the same insane apathy which has already slaughtered millions of innocent people.

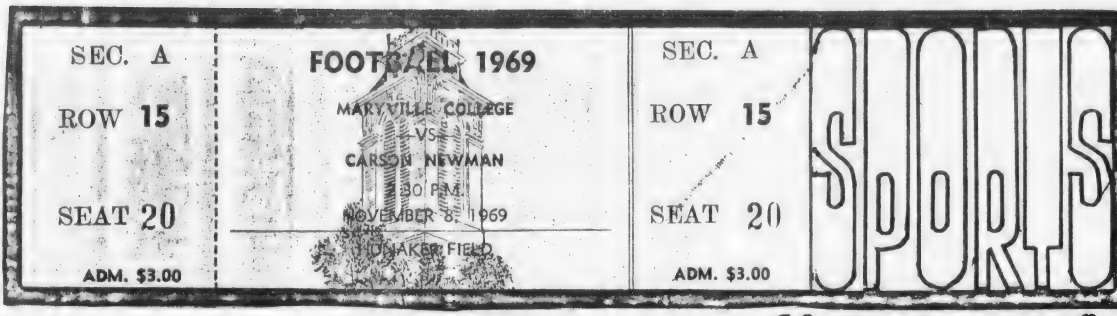
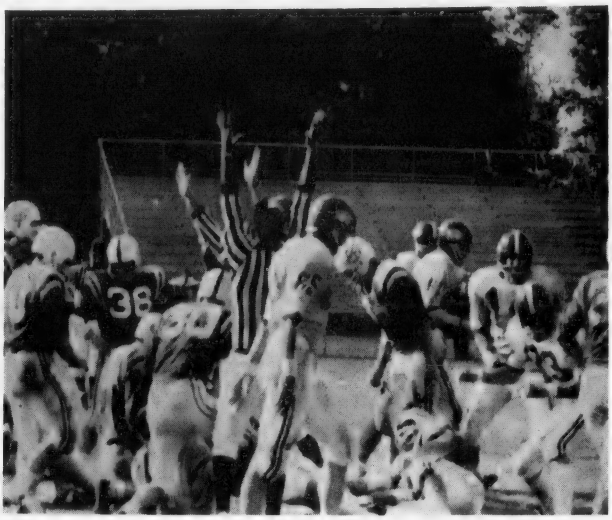
BRAD BECK

Last week at Sewanee Brad Beck proved his value to the Scot offensive team. Brad is a junior from Knoxville, Tennessee. He is a letterman and is majoring in chemistry. Ever since his freshman year Brad has been a starter as tight end. He is a big man, and has the ability to catch the ball in the crowd. Last year he led the team in receptions, and will be looked upon this season as one of the quarterbacks' favorite targets. Not only is Beck a good pass receiver, but his blocking ability is good, rounding out this outstanding ball player. We congratulate Brad for his great effort at Sewanee, and hope for his continued success at MC.

HAM RADIO GROUP BEING ORGANIZED HERE



No, we are not speaking of the thespian agonies that take place in the theater. A ham is also an amateur radio operator. The Smoky Mountain Amateur Radio Club is about to hold classes designed to help the beginner in short-wave radio communications. The classes will start Monday, October 13 at 7 p.m. They will be held at Our Lady of Fatima Church in Alcoa, Wright Road. The classes are open to all interested in amateur radio and are to continue for 2 months, meeting each Monday night.



The idea is to prepare interested parties in elementary radio theory and radio-telegraph code so that they can pass the Federal Communications Commission examination for an amateur license. The class is open to all ages and both sexes. There are many women who have found amateur radio to be a fascinating hobby.

If you think you would be interested, see Dr. Cartlidge, Joe Osborne, or drop a note in Box 2833. Transportation to the classes will be provided. There will be a small fee for club membership and text books. If you are not sure about your interest, come to the first meeting anyway and find out what amateur radio is.

WHOMP 'EM SCOTS

SCOTS TAG TIGERS !

In a game played Saturday at Sewanee, the Scots downed a scrappy bunch of Sewanee Tigers, 34-22.

The first quarter started with an exchange of punts. The second time the Tigers had the ball they fumbled and Tom Ickes recovered. The Scots could not move and had to settle for a 32 yard field goal by Jim Cannon. The remainder of the quarter was a defensive struggle.

As the second quarter unfolded the defenses continued to dominate play. About half-way through the period the Tigers started a drive spearheaded by Nathaniel (Bubba) Owens. The Tigers, with Owens leading the way, moved 70 yards in 15 plays with Shropie Dunaway scoring on a two-yard plunge. Turner added the kick and the half ended with the Tigers leading 7-3.

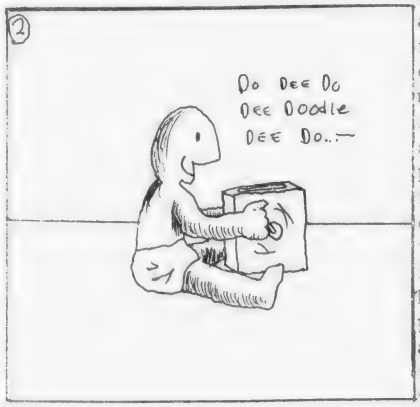
The third quarter started with an exchange of punts, and then the Tigers started a drive led by Dunaway and Owens. Sims went the last 6 yards and Turner again added the point. Immediately after the kickoff Dave Garner hit freshman flanker Andy Chafin with a bomb which ended up on the Sewanee 1-yard line. Snyder scored, and Garner, with a clever fake, passed to Beck for a two-point conversion. Sewanee could not move and punted. Don Hickman took the punt and raced to the Tiger 25. Two plays later Garner hit Rick White on a 22 yard pass for the score, but the kick failed. In the final play of the third quarter Garner hooked up with Chafin for 70 yards to the four, and the quarter ended with the Scots ahead 17-14.

As the fourth quarter unveiled Klein dashed over and Cannon booted the point. Sewanee came right back with Wilson's passing and Bell capped the drive with a five yard run. Turpin threw to Burwell for two points, narrowing the Scots' lead to 24-22.

The Scots started a drive again, and although penalties hindered them, they would not be denied. The Tigers roughed the kicker, and from there the Scots took it in on a Garner-to-Beck pass, covering 13 yards. Cannon added the extra point. After the kickoff Ickes intercepted a pass that set up Jim Cannon's 42 yard field goal, and the game ended with the Scots victors, 34-22. That was the ball game, and the Scots came home with victory number 2. This week the Scots travel to Emory, Virginia, to meet Emory and Henry College.

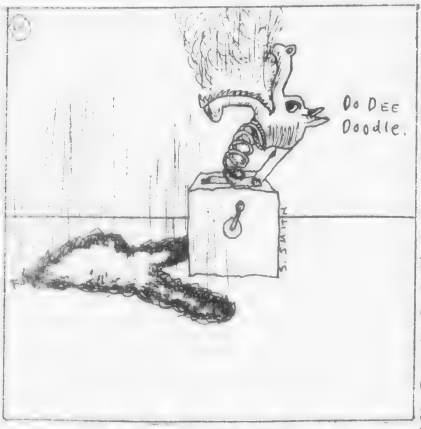
SCOTS TO MEET WASPS AT EMORY

Saturday the Scots travel to Emory, Virginia, to face the Emory and Henry Wasps at their Homecoming game. The Wasps will be out to try to break a four-game losing streak that has left them with a 0-4 record this season. So far they have lost to Georgetown 21-13, Appalachian 41-0, Carson-Newman 31-13, and last week to Catawba 45-16.



Last year the Wasps beat the Scots 50-21 at Honaker field, where fans saw Quarterback Sonny Wade play a fantastic game all afternoon. "Last season," says the 1969 E&H football handbook, "the Wasps had a 9-1 season record and ranked 11th in the nation in small college circles. In 1969, the Wasps have to pay the price for this success....Gone are such stars as Sonny Wade, Larry Bales, Jewell Rhea, Fred Selfe, and Donnie Pruitt. In all, E & H lost 14 lettermen to graduation." The Wasps have 24 returning lettermen to work with, and Coach Bill Mayo feels that their defensive unit will be the strongest factor in this year's season.

The game will be played at the Patrick Henry High School in Emory, Virginia. Those going to the game can take the Meadow View and Emory exit off Interstate 81, and will find the High School one mile east of the E & H campus. The Scots will need support, for it will be the E & H Homecoming.



Tickets are on sale at the Ticket Office, Office Annex. Price: Students $1.00, Adults $2.50.

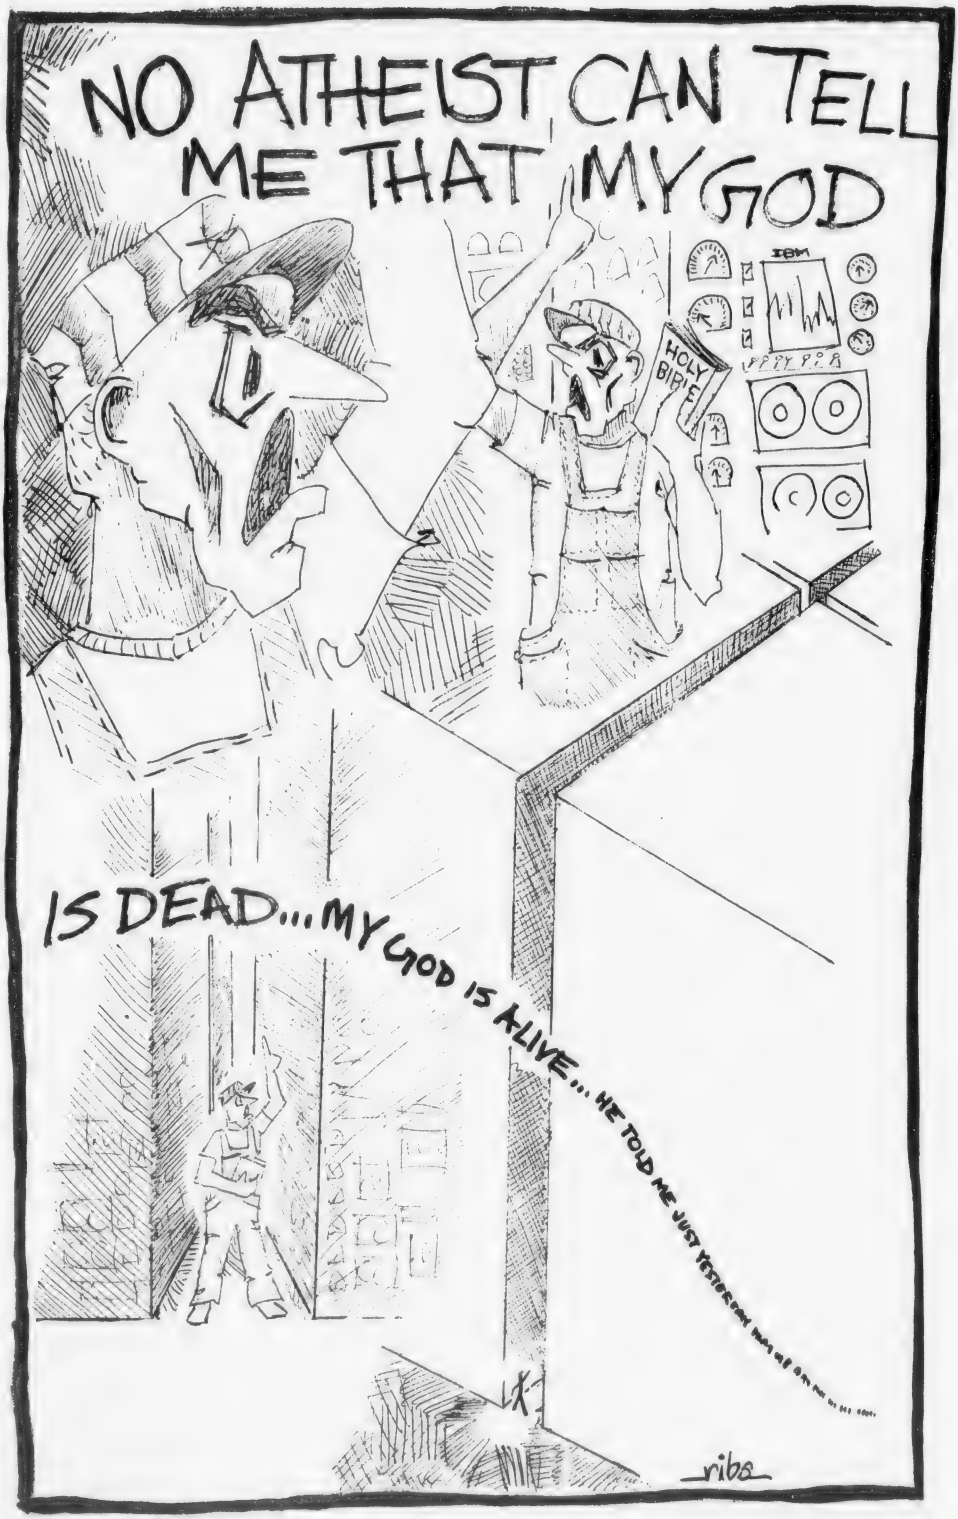
FORUM

DEBATE SUCCESSFUL

Student (junior) Wally Barker and Admissions Director Col. Wm. Taylor sparked serious discussion on the Problems of Student Recruitment during FORUM last Thursday at 6:15 p.m. by Chapel steps. In the opening speech, co-authored by Lynn Coburn, Wally called imperative an "imaginative, innovational recruitment program." The diminishing Maryville enrollment of the past three years indicates, he claimed, a presently ineffective recruitment program. Citing enrollment figures, costs, and the curricular set-up of five institutions competitive with MC in football, Wally argued that MC's recent fee increase, its present lack of both the PE and the Speech major, and its image as a "hard college" in this region are all negligible factors. That the Maryville education is worth the "small college problems" should persuade 300 freshmen yearly to come and to stay; the Admissions Office, Wally declared, must sell this bold goal, and must above all synchronize itself to College innovations. This college, concluded Wally, needs not only a convincing policy on Admissions, but also should employ new methods that emphasize student-to-student promotion.

Col. Taylor then vigorously affirmed the necessity of broadly-based student support in recruitment efforts. Attributing declining enrollment in large part to the smallness of his staff and to lack of general student support, he pointed to an increase in enrollment during his first three years of service, then stated that a decline in three subsequent years has not been peculiar to MC, but reflects national trends. The small college cannot compete financially with state universities he said. Furthermore, prospective students in Big Orange Country seem attracted to the glamor of UT; the Admissions Director asserted that of 477 applications received last year, 387 met MC requirements, 41 met conditional acceptance, and only 222 of the total accepted actually came to Maryville. In addition, he had reiterated the contention of MC's formidable image in this area and spoken for the restoration of the majors in PE and in Speech.



Moderator Brad Sheafnocker opened the floor to questions and comments of either a general nature or directed to a speaker. Responding to a query about MC's church affiliation, Col. Taylor suggested that being church-related both helps and hinders. Asked about our local "image," FORUM participants agreed that an ultra-conservative attitude dominates. Discussion extended out on the subject of visiting area high schools; Mr. Armstrong, an Admissions Counselor present, testified that of hundreds of schools canvassed, those in this vicinity prove least encouraging. There were persistent questions about allegedly uninteresting brochures and inaccurate bulletins being used to promote Maryville College.

Col. Taylor and then Wally Barker each utilized the three minute rebuttal time allotted at the end of the FORUM period (6:15-7:00 p.m.) to affirm student potential as recruiter and to call for the personal engagement of all those concerned.

Termination of discussion was favored, and the Moderator motioned the referees to ring the FORUM Gong for adjournment. The next FORUM issue is scheduled to be presented Thursday at 6:15 p.m.; the following one will assemble Tuesday, October 14.

Anyone wishing to assist in successive FORUM presentations and anyone with suggestions for issues is urged to see Steve Horning, Box 2148.

MUSIC, DRAMA, BALLET FEATURED HERE

Maryville College presents an evening of varied interest in a fine arts recital on Saturday, Nov. 1, at 8:15 p.m. in the College Theater.

Don Brakebill, minister of music at the First Baptist Church, Maryville, and Al Weaver, music teacher in the Knoxville City School system, will perform Benhamin Britten's "Serenade for Voice and Horn."

Thomas E. Jones, director of the Maryville College Theater will present a production of Tennessee Williams's "Mooney's Kid Don't Cry" starring Stewart Smith and Dawn Sterling.

The third recital art form is the ballet "L' Histoire Du Soldat" by Igor Stravinsky under the direction of Cheryl Van Metre. Cut off from his Russia by the flames of war and also by the outbreak of revolution, Stravinsky composed "The Soldier's Tale," in 1918 in Switzerland where he had found a peaceful haven.

Stravinsky used fragments of popular or music hall culture like the tango, waltz, ragtime, march and gypsy melody in an expressionistic form which set a tone for not only the war years but also the post-war 1920's. The main burden of the soldier's tale is carried by the narrator who sits opposite the stage while the action is danced by the main characters. The ballet features Hayden White as narrator, William Beasley as the devil, Kent Marshall as the soldier and Elaine Marshall as the princess. The orchestra composed of members of the Knoxville Symphony will be under the direction of Al Weaver.

MR. DEES TAKES WICHITA T.V. JOB

Mr. Arthur F. Dees, communications coordinator for Maryville College, has resigned in order to accept the position of director of programming and development with television station KPTS, Channel 8, a community-owned education station in Wichita, Kansas.

Mr. Dees, a native of Winter, Fla., holds the bachelor of arts degree from Carson-Newman College and has completed most of the requirements for the master of arts degree from the University of Tennessee. He was a radio announcer in Winter Garden, Fla., and Newport, Tenn.; a director-camera-man for WTVK-TV in Knoxville; and an instructor in German at Carson - Newman College. He came to Maryville College in 1965 as instructor in German and director of the language lab, and became coordinator of communications service for the college in 1967.

While at Maryville College, Mr. Dees has designed and produced a series of television programs which have been telecast by WDEF, Chattanooga; WETV, Atlanta, Ga.; WBIR, WATE, WTVK, and WSJK in Knoxville; WJHL in Johnson City; WBRA in Roanoke; and WHRO in Norfolk. He has also been very active on campus committees; serving currently as executive director of Community Issues and Values, a member of the academic council and administrative committee, and faculty advisor for the Baptist Student Union.

Mr. Dees, a Kiwaanian, is an active member of the First Baptist Church in Maryville where he has served as a youth worker in many of the church's organizations. He is married to the former Martha Karasek of Washington, D.C. and he and Mrs. Dees have two daughters, Liebe Kawn and Liesl Deann.

COLLEGE-COMMUNITY ORCHESTRA TO PRESENT FIRST CONCERT

The Maryville College-Community Orchestra will give its first performance of the year Friday night, Oct. 31, at 8:15 p.m. The orchestra, under the direction of Lee Kull, instructor of strings at the College, will perform works by Beethoven, Handel, Dvorak, Gliere, and Strauss.

The College-Community Orchestra, as its name indicates, is truly a community organization, made possible by the combined efforts of Maryville College faculty, staff, students, and members of the community at large. Membership is open to all interested individuals who play an orchestral instrument.

The concert, to be given at Wilson Chapel on the College campus, is open to the public without charge.

EDITORIAL

The possibilities for personal maintenance and self-control on our campus do not exactly promote a feeling of trust or responsibility on the part of the individual student. The obvious over-concern on the part of administrative officials is fine for the college handbook; but, in reality it leaves the student with little personal freedom or privacy. Most members of our student body find themselves released from parental control after their arrival upon campus. Little do they realize that they have alighted within the jurisdiction of an organization that in many ways can be injurious to the development of a sound responsible character. Personal privacy and the freedom that coincides with it are blatantly denied within the confines of our (community?) social structure. The respect accorded to the average citizen in his living quarters is jeopardized by the existing restrictions and regulations with which the students are expected to cope. Over-protection breeds fundamental insecurity which is already an integral part of our average under-graduate's daily function. Reliance upon group solidarity has commanded much too large a part in the lives of many of our constituents. This dependence upon false supporting structure is a direct result of the lack of freedom on the part of the individual. The time for the loosening of reins and the allowing of students to determine their own priorities has long since passed and our college should afford the students those rights which are obviously denied them.

FORUM: DORM VISITATION

The forum of October 28, 1969, was moderated by Steve Horning. The topic was concerned with the proposal of dorm visitation. Supporting the proposal of dorm visitation was Nancy Heatwole; presenting the critical analysis was Mary Sue Harris.

Concerning the proposal, Nancy gave its description as a direct outgrowth of a desire for change in present rules. This desire was based on a questionnaire presented to resident students of M.C. 91% of all returned questionnaires advocated change. 8% did not want a change. Of the 495 questionnaires returned, 266 were women and 219 were men.

Reasons for the proposal included a summary of the following points: (1) an escort system, (2) guest register and (3) hours of visitation. These hours are Sunday through Thursday 2 a.m. - 9 p.m. and Friday and Saturday 2 p.m. to 1 a.m. A clause of the proposal states that individual dorms have the prerogative of changing the hours within these limits.

Opposition to the proposal was presented by Mary Sue. Her main points included the lack of student responsibility and the nuisance of boys in the dorms to other residents. Additional nuisances included the increase of noise, the lack of privacy, the necessity of dress and personal appearance, and the necessity of locking doors. (Some doors in Lloyd don't lock!)

Steve Horning opened the session for questions.

A few of the questions raised included what the possible effects of this venture could be concerning the financial state of the college. The rebuttal was that endowments and financial pledges possibly might be reconsidered.

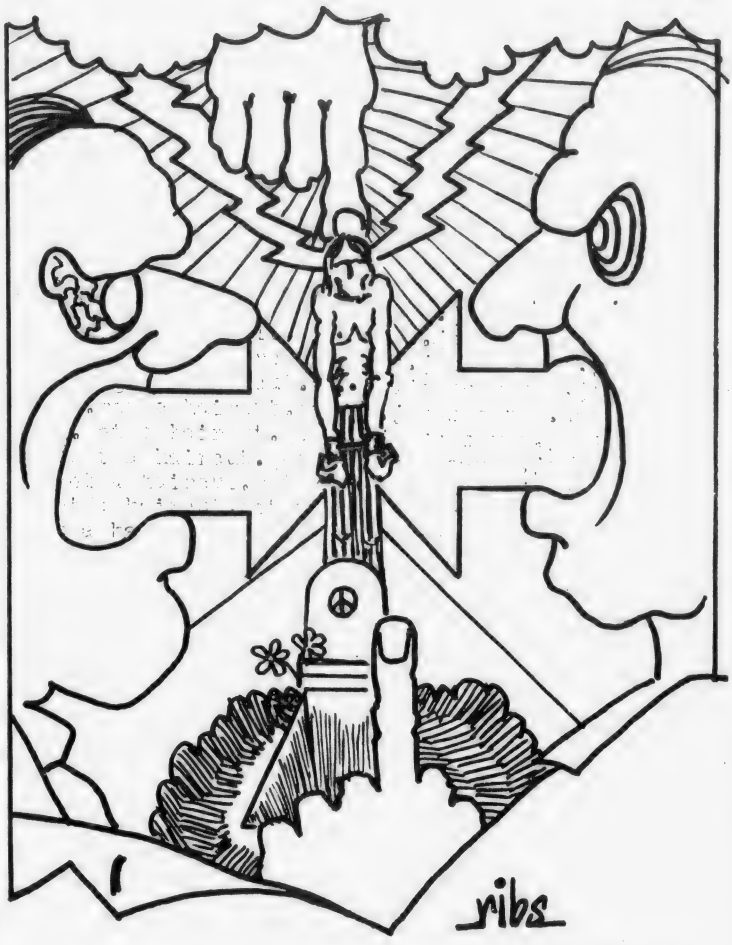
COURT OF APPEALS UPHOLDS CONVICTION

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recently upheld the conviction of 11 people found guilty of burning and bloodying draft files in Baltimore. They had claimed their actions were morally justified.

Chief Judge Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr., and Judge Harrison E. Winter concurred with the opinion of Judge Simon E. Sobeloff. The final section of the opinion is reprinted below:

"As an undercurrent throughout the trial and interwoven with appellants' assertions of error is an appeal to morality as justification for their conduct. The argument consists of two closely related strands. They argue that the motivation for their action was moral in the sense that they intended to protest a war which is outrageous to their individual standards of humanity. Therefore, their actions are said to be not punishable regardless of the literal violation of a statute.

"Moreover, appellants argue that, apart from their motivation, which is subjective, the war in Vietnam is in fact illegal and immoral and hence their acts in protest of this war were themselves moral acts for which they must be similarly immunized from punishment. In effect, the appellants focus upon the means by which an organized society treats those citizens who choose to commit an act of civil disobedience in the name of justice.



"From the earliest times when man chose to guide his relations with fellow men by allegiance to the rule of law rather than force, he has been faced with the problem how best to deal with the individual in society who, through moral conviction, concluded that a law with which he was confronted was unjust and therefore must not be followed.

"Faced with the stark reality of injustice, men of sensitive conscience and great intellect have sometimes found only or morally

CO-ED DORMS ?

What about co-ed dorms? Why not? Why not take a new Dorm, for example, and, as a starter, make half the building available to female occupants, half to male? Because people in general aren't ready to have a girl living with or right next to a boy, we could split the dorm down the middle, with the back side boys, the front side girls (we must split it along the stair-line because people, again, are not ready to accept a boy in one shower stall, a girl in the next, or maybe both together.) It is by far the most economical way to run dorms, for by moving people where space is available, regardless of sex, you even out the population distribution and only use those floors and building which will be full, thus cutting down on wear and on equipment.

.But the major advantages of co-ed dorms, as I see it, are first, the breaking down of the artificiality of segregated dorms. When I'm at home, I life in close proximity to women, and if I ever live in an apartment house I'll do the same. If I get married I will undoubtedly live with my wife because I'll probably like her, if for no other reason. When you get right down to it, this is the only time in most people's lives, barring military service, when there is a strict segregation along sexual lines. By having girls and boys mixed, it would improve the boys in many ways. They would probably desist from raising so much hell. The women would be a maturing influence. The boys would also get to know more girls in a more casual atmosphere. They would probably know more girls, and know them as individuals. Promiscuity I believe would not increase, for knowing the girls as a neighbor has fewer sexual overtones than the artificial institution known as "dating," which mirrors in a minor way the "natural" pairing and mating order. I am not going to be so naive (or unimaginative) as to say that no one will take advantage of the situation. Possibly, for health reasons, this might be an advantage, because I've been told that those woods, fields, and cars get mighty cold at night, and that results in many colds and sniffles.

I do think that now that open hours are really being seriously discussed, the next move must obviously be toward co-ed dorms. The old bug-a-boos about mixing boys and girls in this manner, I believe, just do not hold. We are talking about a generation which is trying to destroy artificiality. To me, very few things are more artificial than segregated dorms. Remember, when God created the Heavens and the Earth, and the beasts and flowers, and Adam and Eve, he did not create a boys dorm and a girls dorm.

path, and that path led them inevitably into conflict with established authority and its laws.

"Among philosophers and religionists throughout the ages there has been an incessant stream of discussion as to when, if at all, civil disobedience, whether by passive refusal to obey a law or by its active breach, is morally justified. However, they have been in general agreement that while in restricted circumstances a morally motivated act contrary to law may be ethically justified, the action must be nonviolent and the actor must accept the penalty for his action.

"In other words, it is commonly conceded that the exercise of a moral judgment based upon individual standards does not carry with it legal justification or immunity from punishment for breach of the law.

"The defendants' motivation in the instant case--the fact that they engaged in a protest in the sincere belief that they were breaking the law in a good cause--cannot be acceptable legal defense or justification. Their sincerity is beyond question. It implies no disparagement of their idealism to say that society will not tolerate the means they chose to register their opposition to the war.

"If these defendants were to be absolved from guilt because of their moral certainty that the war in Vietnam is wrong, would not others who might commit breaches of the law to demonstrate their sincere belief that the country is not prosecuting the war vigorously enough to entitled to acquittal? Both must answer for their acts.

"We are not called upon in this case to establish guidelines for determining in what extreme circumstances, if any, governmental acts may be resisted. We confine ourselves to this case and hold only that the law does not allow the seizure of public records and their mutilation or destruction, even when this is done as an act of conscience to dramatize the protest of a presumed evil.

"The acts of these appellants are not as extreme as some committed by other dissenters. Nevertheless, this publicly exploited action cannot be dismissed as de minimis. To encourage individuals to make "A thing of beauty is a joy forever:

Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing..."

John Keats

A thing of beauty; did you ever stop and notice the "things" of beauty that exist right here on the Maryville campus? Perhaps a thing of beauty is no more than a tree, but one that you pass by every day and take no notice of. Did you ever stop and notice the lovely tree standing guard patiently in front of the bookstore? Someone has walled this tree in, and it has stood its lonely vigil perhaps as many years as has the College itself.

Have you ever stopped and wondered how many changes at Maryville College that this silent guard has witnessed? How many students have discussed their views on the current issues of life here? How many tired and happy feet have stopped with their mail under this tree, and discussed with their friends new and exciting ideas on changing the world? Yet that tree has listened to both conservative and liberal ideas, to radical and foolish propositions, to sincere individuals and those who gaily don't care--and it opened its branches to them all. It absorbed the enormous variety of man's thoughts and dreams, and stood firm to ponder their differences. It has weathered the storms when new ideas and policies of the school have threatened to dissolve this very institution. One small, beaten tree, alone and still standing when decades of students have proclaimed the world could be no worse and the war could never end.

Have you ever stopped, and in glancing at the sun through the branches, wondered what all it's heard? As each new student leaves Maryville to contribute what he's learned in life, this tree also has branched out to grow and go on living. Somehow this offers a continuous glimmer of hope that Maryville will also weather the storms, and branch out as the tree, and grow and go on living. Stop and look at it, think and ponder on it--notice it now because you've never done so before. Open your eyes and discover this thing of beauty.

SCOTS DOWN COLONELS

Rain and chill limited the crowd Saturday, but a few hearty fans weathered the climate to see the Scots win over the Centre Colonels 6-0. Jim Cannon booted two field goals to give the Scots their third victory and even up the record 3-3. The Scot victory set the Colonels back with their second defeat, privong that champions lose, too.

The Scots dominated the entire game, allowing the Colonels only 5 first downs and 109 yards in total offense. Coach Tomlinson said that the team showed "real good effort" and played a "well executed football game." It was the first shut-out for the Scots since 1967 when a Millsaps game ended in 0-0 tie.

Phil Ziglar and John Weston excelled in defense for the Scots, and Dave Garner led his offensive unit well throughout the game. Cannon got his field goals in the opening period and in the third quarter, kicking for 40 and 37 yards respectively. Two other attempts failed. The Centre defense grabbed three passes and a fumble to stop Scot scoring threats, nabbing two of the passes in their own end zone. The Scots' defense was exceptionally tough throughout the game.

GARNER PLAYER-OF-WEEK

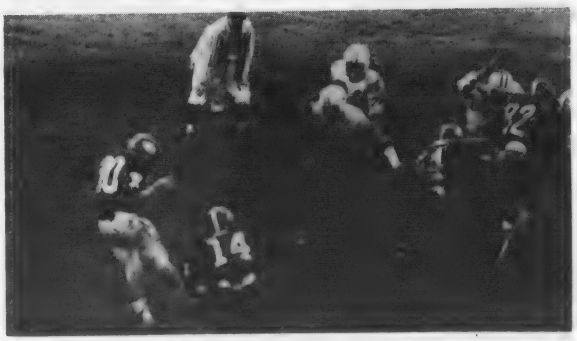
Quarterback David Garner is a senior physical education major from Maryville. A returning letterman, Dave could lead our offensive unit to its best season since 1964. A threat as a runner, Garner can also throw an effective short pass. He calls his plays well and his experience will help the Scots work well together on the field. Although he needs to improve his long pass ability, Garner works well in his position. He punts well, and along with John Klein, poses a strong running threat.

As quarterback, Dave has a tough job to do. His ability is evident, and his season's performance will determine how the Scots' won-loss record will look for 1969. He has three games left, two of which will be away. Let's get out and show Dave plenty of support in the Carson-Newman game on November 8th.

To Dave we say thanks, and wish him a future of success.

SCOTS FACE MILLSAPS

The Scots head for Jackson, Mississippi with a 3-3 record Thursday night to face the Millsaps Majors in a game to be played Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. The Majors have a 3-2-1 record so far this season. The team returns almost intact with all but two of their starters. Head Coach Harper Davis will be looking to a big team, and will be depending especially on two backs, Robby McLeod and Brett Adams, to run the ball. These two men totaled over half of their team's rushing yardage (1,451 yards) and scored 96 points together last year. The Majors outplayed all of their opponents last year on a cumulative basis, and will pose a real threat this year to all that play them.



The Scots defeated the Majors in a Home game last year, 17-13, and will be looking forward to duplicating that win this year.

-FIELD HOCKEY-

There are still two more field hockey games left, Tuesday, Nov. 4, and Thursday, Nov. 6, so come on out and participate--it isn't too late.

Volleyball will be here for some Interim entertainment. Sign up by teams Nov. 4-10.

The Volleyball clinic will be held Nov. 20 at 3:30 p.m. in Bartlett. Following the clinic, the test for officiating will be given Nov. 11 at 4:00 p.m. in Bartlett. The games will be played from Nov. 20 through Dec. 12, and the tentative date for the All-Star Volleyball game is Dec. 15.

FORUM continued...

The question of present rules was asked by several people and followed by the question of future rules. The answers given explained the lack of set rules now and in the future as a result of the emphasis placed on the individual. The question of rules was considered important due to foreseeable concern of the All-College for this proposal.

Some additional benefits from the visitation were the rise in demands on the individual for his conduct. Also, his living standards and concern for others, were mentioned. Again, the idea of lack of privacy was questioned.

The Forum closed on the idea of loss of endowments, funds, and students due to the change in image of the school.

Happenings

Pop Concert Saturday at M.C.

The Happenings, one of the most remarkable rock vocal groups with one of the most sophisticated acts in show business, will be appearing on the Maryville College campus Saturday, Oct. 18 at 9:00 p.m. in Wilson Chapel. Tickets are available at the Maryville College Ticket Office. Admission will be $3.50 per person, $1.00 to M.C. students with I.D. cards.

This group has had several smash hit records, three of them million sellers: "I Got Rhythm," "My Mammy," and "See You In September," all on Jubilee Records. They have played the college circuit from New Mexico to Newfoundland and are one of handful of contemporary pop groups to play the gilded circuit --the Eden Rock in Miami, the Flamingo in Las Vegas, and the Shoreham in Washington, D.C. THE HAPPENINGS have been guests on the Johnny Carson "Tonight" show also, and they have brought American pop music to receptive audiences in Italy and Brazil.

The group is made up of David Libert, Bernie La Porta, Mike LaNeve (newest member of the group), Bob Miranda, who is lead singer, and Tom Giuliano, who all look good under a spotlight.

SWANK magazine gave them this review: "A remarkable rock vocal group with one of the most sophisticated acts in show business, THE HAPPENINGS combine an advanced sense of satire with Borchtbelt audience savvy. No other contemporary pop quintet would have the gall to open their stage act with 'It's a Grand Night for Singing' and close with 'Exodus,' dropping bombs in between with takeoffs on holy rock cows."

How did this group get together? Originally they were known as the FOUR GRADUATES (they all went to high school in Paterson, N.J.), the then quartet got solid stage grounding in a summer of Catskill resort tours "where you have to give a good show or you'll never be able to look a swizzle stick in the face again." Legend has it that Miranda once wore a red jacket to a performance and during the Intermission a tipsy customer pressed a five dollar bill into his hand and said, "Waiter, do me a favor--dance with my cousin." It was during their Catskill tour of duty that they developed their fine sense of comedy. After three months of pleasing tough audiences and winning them over, the boys decided to head for a recording studio--and to change their professional name.

SCOTS TO MEET RANDOLPH-MACON FOR HOMECOMING

This year's Homecoming Football game will be played at 2:30, Saturday, October 18, at Honaker Field. The Fighting Scots will host the Randolph-Macon Yellow Jackets in what could be one of the toughest on the Scot schedule this season.

Last year the Yellow Jackets wiped out the Scots 50-0. "In 1969 Coach Ted Keller's Yellow Jackets compiled the first undefeated, untied record in the college's history. The Yellow Jackets unveiled the most explosive, most dangerous, most productive offense in the college's history. The 1969 offense should be just as explosive, though small."

The team has 23 lettermen returning. Coach Keller admits that the team will be depending heavily "on an experienced defensive seven-man front and an explosive, wide open offense." The Yellow Jackets have lost 17 lettermen and 12 starters. The entire defensive backfield is gone. They had played together for four years.

Last year the Jackets had a 9-0-0 record and were the Mason-Dixon Champions and Virginia Small College Champions. This year they are 2-0-1, and are looking for a "winning season with a shot at the Mason-Dixon Championship."

It should be quite a game.

MUSICAL TO BE PRESENTED HERE

Maryville College Playhouse will begin its 1969-70 season on Wednesday, October 15, with a folk-rock musical, "ONCE UPON A GREENER HILL," made up of a cast of alumni and students and written and composed by Mr. Paul Crabtree, director of "TENNESSEE U.S.A." This special sesquicentennial musical pictures the history of Maryville College in song and spoof, with some excellent dancing and Maryville philosophy rounding it out into a heart-warming homecoming for all alumni and friends of the college.

Playwright and lyricist Crabtree discards the conventional unities of time and place to give us a panorama of the school's past, present and possible future. The show is

It was interesting to see how U.C.M. manipulated M-day from a day of consideration of the Vietnamese involvement into a day of abject pacifism. Anticipating some historicity from the C.I.V. panel, we received emotion instead. Our entanglement in Asia was not sufficiently explained away by the blanket statement that we were grossly wrong to be there. We all want the war to end; the question is how? We are not all agreed to the myth "my country right or wrong," represented by the various victory stickers and flag decals plastered on buildings all over campus; nor do we advocate the pacifist propaganda presented in C.I.V. As I watched the NBC coverage of the Moratorium, Wednesday night, I could not help but feel that we prostituted the whole meaning of October 15, 1969, in an outburst of emotion.

Situation Ethics

"It's a mystery to me
If what you say is what you see..."
We believe you are all responsible people
(Yet the chance is denied)
So we give you your lives for your own
(Yet the chance is denied)
And you're wise enough to evaluate your knowledge
(Yet the chance is denied)
And strong enough to know your weakness
(Yet the chance is denied)
And mature enough to make right decisions
(Yet the chance is denied)
And yet we choose to push you
And when we choose to push you
We urge your full cooperation
WE URGE YOUR FULL COOPERATION

Don't you know you're not fooling anybody."

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

The following letter was received in our office last week. We would like to share this with the members of the college community. It is representative of the response we receive from many students who visit our campus. This letter also serves as our thank you to those students who volunteer their help to these students.

"Dear Sir: I wish to thank you for the most cordial reception given me during my visit last weekend. Not only did I find the college to be efficient and beautiful, but I found individual students willing to help and encourage me as I toured. I am deeply impressed by all that I saw and heard. Thank you so much for your hospitality.

The Admissions Office

Dear editor,

As a student eligible for the draft, I do not accept, and refuse to accept the responsibility which our militaristic State assigns me. My motives in this decision do not form a thought - system which can be defined; nevertheless, it is the only thing of which I have been steadily convinced during the last few years.

I do not understand the rationalities for this war--except that, ironically, they are often the same on both sides of the DMZ. We are destroying ourselves and our freedom coincidentally as we kill those men whom we have never had a chance to be offended by.

We have abstracted death until it remains only a means to greatness or defeat; or only an ethic in doing good or bad to the cause; or only a number, a statistical illusion from the bloody reality.

We fool ourselves with petty philosophies which eliminate all but the purely animal characteristics of man, thus making war a constant. We eat up dogma like "there will always be war and rumors of war" in order to soothe our consciences.

We fill our inner human emptiness with causes and airs of righteousness for our humble sacrifice. We allow politicians to drench our minds with inflammable ideologies.

As Americans, playing with guns is part of our way of life; we grow up on them. We play frivolously with life and death in adulthood: on our highways....on our TV's....and in our rigorous and aggressive visions of ourselves (our self image) both nationally and personally--we kill for blood's sake, for the masculine ideal, or for the good-old american nonchalant "I don't give a damn."

We are all losing someone, but the North and South Vietnamese are losing sons, brothers, husbands, wives, daughters, mothers, homes and livelihood to Americans who have the very least concern with their well-being.

At any time when there is fighting under the American flag, every American totes an M-16.

Dear Editor:

Enclosed is a chipping from a "Dear Abby" column which I felt was relevant for our campus. On this campus are some of the most beautiful girls I know--not necessarily in the Hollywood sense--but beautiful in the qualities Abby speaks of. What bothers me is that the males on this campus never seem to see these girls and do not really seem to care. I guess what I'm trying to ask is for the guys to try a different approach to viewing the boy-girl situation.

"CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL MEN BETWEEN 16 and 60: You are in the privileged position of being able to do the "asking." You may be big, handsome, talented, and popular, but unless you have a heart you're nothing. When you attend a dance or a party, pay special attention to at least three girls who are not popular. Find something to compliment them for. Make them feel a little prettier, then watch them "bloom" and actually become a lot forever girls are those with special qualities. Modesty, humility, generosity, virtue, and depth. For that is where they usually can be found."

Thank you.

Sincerely,
Eloise Patton

Newly named, THE HAPPENINGS went into the recording studio and cut "See You In September," which went to number one and sold over a million copies. They followed up with "Go Away Little Girl," "I Got Rhythm," "My Mammy," and the recent "Where Do I Go/Be-In" from the musical "Hair."

THE HAPPENINGS are one of the very few pop groups who are actively trying to change what they think is wrong with the life around them. They have become sponsors of an American Indian boy under the Save the Children Foundation, helping to provide for the boy's education and medical needs. When asked about this, one of the group, Bernie La Porta, said: "Protest songs are all right but it's too easy to sing about something and not do anything about it. We figure that we're THE HAPPENINGS but we're also Dave, Tom, Mike and Bernie. If you want to change something, how long are you supposed to wait? You can sing and make changes at the same time."

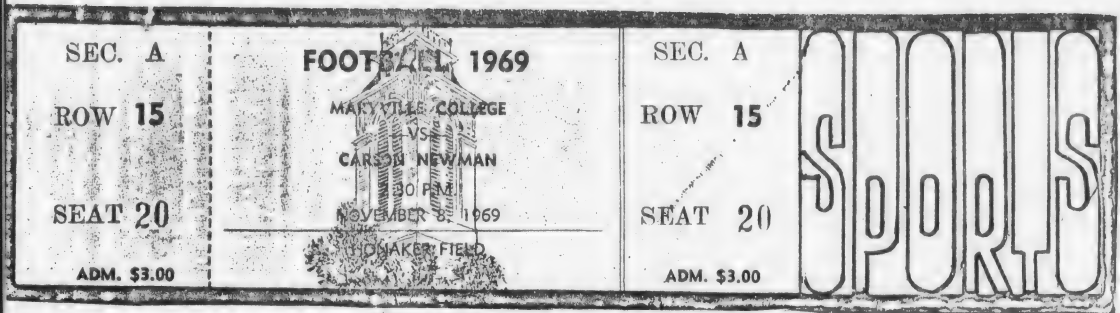
like a giant mural, and a simple listing of the elements that Crabtree puts into this two-hour production would overwhelm a less skillful writer.



Led by an old caretaker (played by William Beasley) through the halls of time by the magic of the theater, Charlie and Elizabeth Digger (played by Robert Hutchens and Carol Fisher) see the strong willed and devoted people who made Maryville a reality. Salty, determined Isaac Anderson (played by David Highbert) opens the school to anyone who wants to study and work hard, and the school stays open until Dr. John Robinson (played by Stuart H. Smith) closes it during the Civil War. Others, such as the tireless quarterback and newspaper editor Kin Takahashi (played by Ernie Foster) who was determined to defeat the University of Tennessee's football team, tells the Diggers and their daughter Jenny (played by Sarajune Owens) and her boyfriend Bill (played by Paul Hindman) exactly "What is this place, what is this greenest hill? What is this college known as Maryville?"

Mr. Crabtree is well-known in the New York theater for his performances in Rodgers and Hammerstein's Oklahoma! and also in Eugene O'Neill's The Iceman Cometh, for which he was presented 7 awards for best supporting performance of the year.

WASPS STING SCOTS

Unable to move the ball throughout the entire game, the Scots were defeated by Emory and Henry College Saturday, 14-3. The game, played at the Patrick Henry High School, marked the E&H Homecoming festivities.

Emory, in possession of the ball for the second time in the first quarter, took the ball from the Maryville 49 yard line in eight plays to score their first TD. The point after made the score 7-0 with a little over 6 minutes in the quarter. Parks intercepted a pass for the Scots, but they were unable to cash in on it, and the first quarter ended.

In the second quarter Butler intercepted an Emory pass, and the Scots drove to the Wasps' 4-yard line, where they were held. The Scots were able to keep the play in Emory territory, thus enabling Jim Cannon to boot a 22-yard field goal. The half came, and the score was 7-3, with the Scots trailing.

After a half-time performance by the Highlander Band and the Homecoming Queen introduction, the play resumed. Emory recovered a Scot fumble, but a field goal attempt failed. Neither team moved too well in the third quarter, and the quarter remained scoreless. With Costner and Green trying to move the ball during the fourth quarter, Emory held the Scots and drove deep into the Scots' territory, scoring again after going 55 yards in 13 plays. The kick after was good. With almost 6 minutes left in the game the Scots were unable to move, and the final score was 14-3. The loss puts Maryville back with a 2-2-0 record. The Scots face Randolph-Macon at the annual Homecoming game Saturday, October 18.

PLAYER-OF-THE-WEEK

Linebacker Tom Ickes is a sophomore from Alliance, Ohio. He is a letterman and is majoring in political science. Last year Tom started in the last four ball games as backside linebacker, and he is expected to continue in this spot this year. In the last three games Ickes intercepted five passes, and showed his ability to stop the run plays. Despite his lack of great size Tom is a good tackler and is hard to block. Ickes has a lot of hustle, and according to the football handbook, he could turn out to be one of the best at his position in a long time. We will be seeing a lot of action from Ickes, and we wish him the best of luck in all the ball games.

MRS. DAVIS GOES TO NASHVILLE

Mrs. Carle (Connie) Davis, assistant professor of education at Maryville College, will represent the East Tennessee Education Association at a meeting on Oct. 11 at Peabody College in Nashville. This will be in connection with the Executive meeting of the Tennessee Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation.

On Oct. 12-13, Mrs. Davis will be at Montgomery Bell State Park, serving as a consultant at the Tennessee College Physical Education Association annual meeting.

Welcome Home-comers

On behalf of the Highland Echo and all involved I would like to welcome all alumni with open student center.

Maybe I will.

Speaking of Homecoming, I was picking some dead skin off of the little toe on my left foot just now, thinking about why it chose THIS particular time to die. And then I thought maybe it does that every year at Homecoming. The skin on the feet, of course, is, (especially, (since we walk on them,) at the bottom most part) VERY TOUGH and Particularly Hard to Peel Off. But still dead. It's startling to realize that one has started to die already, so young. Even more so since it's from the bottom up. Most people die from the top down, you know. Hair falls out, teeth fall out, and all that. Much more comforting that way, too, cause along with everything else up there, your brain dies so you don't have to think about it.

Anyway, it's Homecoming season and everybody should be full of good cheer and high spirits, and everyone probably will be.

FORUM

Learning is discovery in its broadest sense, declared Dr. Shields as he addressed some sixty persons at FORUM last Thursday. Dr. Shields drew heavily on the Hazelton Report to develop his contention that the student and not curriculum should be the main concern of the educational institution. That institution's passion to train and develop the human intellect must only balance its profound, if unwitting influence on student personality and social development. Discovery, he said, should be recovered as the central feature of higher education; the student, he concluded, should eventually discover his own curriculum.

Dr. Lewis immediately responded with criticism of the Hazelton Report, which had been drafted by students and psychologists whose authority is, he asserted, questionable. Favoring a historical analogy, Dr. Lewis pointed out that Harvard threw out in 1909 its elective curricula principle in effect since 1870 because administrators had found, he said, that "Harvard men were not as principled or intellectual as they ought to be." Such an experiment had been, he concluded, an instance of detrimental overprofessionalism.

In the flurry of questions that followed, some charged that the "core" concept duplicates all-inclusive high school programs and argued for specialization; one suggested that the core reflects the prejudice of graduate schools, and many generalizations about specialization were offered. Eventually, testing, grading, the word "core" itself, and "ideal situation," and evaluation of our own curriculum came up for discussion. The Instructional Program Committee was cited.

In his final rebuttal, Dr. Shields took a position against extremely specialized courses, pointed out that once required Greek and Latin are not missed and affirmed a student right to subjectiveness in selection. Dr. Lewis supported the core as a workable program of flexibility and wide scope, stating that for the average inexperienced student, a pure election system would be unsatisfactory. He suggested that the subject of grading come up in a future FORUM. FORUM organizers will welcome any volunteers to pursue this idea.

THE SHORT, SAD STORY OF S.A.T.-ISM

This is a continuing story of a land of division. Only the names have been changed to protect the author. (Background reading: the statement of purpose of our college.)

In a land and time far away from here, we again return. (For I would much rather think of other's problems than my own.) Bordering M.O.R.F.-land on the south we find another community with another situation. S.A.T.-land was its name. It was populated by another religious sect of young people who called themselves "Seekers After Truth" or S.A.T.' for short. The S.A.T.'s believed that all young people of their religion were born to seek truth.

You see long ago for SATis m the definition of truth had been set down on tablets of stone in the form of a huge triptic.

Thus this definition of truth was referred to as "The Rule of Three." Its inscription read: "1. Truth will be unto you as a lamp in darkness and a map for the lost. 2. Truth is like the earth on which you walk...it is one. 3. Truth is like a puzzle to be assembled by many."

So you see the SATist religion was a geographical one. Each young SAT set out to chart a portion of their land which would later be put together with others in the "Sacred Hall" of "The Rule of Three." Finally, the task was finished and all the maps were assembled into a huge map in the holy temple. Suddenly, a blinding light shone forth from the holy triptic and the earth shook! The writing on the triptic seemed to be changing.....! While all the SAT's watched in awe, they read the new lettering: "Well. Now you know where you are!" it read.

Some say that, strangely enough, many SAT's converted to MORF ism that day...

The moral to my fantasy could be: Don't SAT under the Rule of Three with any one else but me. Or more likely, it could also be: Seeking truth is like seeking happiness. To seek the second is to admit we are unhappy. To seek the first; to admit we are liars.

OLD HARP SINGERS TO PERFORM HERE

This Sunday we are having something unusual on campus. I don't know if anyone has told you about it or not.

Dr. Harter has somehow gotten the Old Harp Singers of Knox County, Sevier County, and Blount County to hold a 'sing' here. I have always wanted to hear them...it is evidently the vestigial remains of an early form of community sing started a hundred years or more ago when singing masters went around the country holding these things. It should be interesting to a lot of people...it is very informal.

They will start at 1:30 and go until they stop. People are welcome to come and go as they please...listen and/or take part. They are called the East Tennessee Old Harp Singers. Dr. Harter would have any more information you might want... but I think this about does it....oh yes, they will do this in the back lobby of the Chapel.

WHAT EVER HAPPENED TO SHARON MATTI?

— by Sharon Matti

Former English prof writes from New York

Never having seen Brooklyn in my life, I moved in--to Flatbush, a lower middle class neighborhood of surprisingly compatible Catholics and Jews where a Protestant is almost as rare as a black face, which is rare indeed. This slice of the world's largest city resembles nothing so much as a rather isolated, pleasantly provincial village, vaguely European in style. Its moods, especially in the evening rush to mass and synagogue, its morals, its informality, its incredible friendliness--all are village-like. This is a community based on common incomes, attitudes, educations, accents, and simplicity of faiths where each one fits in because each feels free to be whatever he has inherited. If a non-conformist wished to forget that inheritance, I'm sure he would be uncomfortable, but such tensions are acted out behind closed doors and not in the street where the life of the village goes on.
